PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 99th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE—Thursday, January 3, 1985

The third day of January being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of the Congress, the 1st session of the 99th Congress commenced this day at 12 noon.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

The Senate was called to order by the Vice President.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Almighty God, Lord of history and the nations, make Your presence known and felt in this Chamber today. Grant that this swearing-in will be more than a formality—routine and perfunctory. Help each Senator to make his pledge with a deep sense of dedication to public service. May it be a commitment to integrity in the profound high trust placed in this body by a sovereign people.

In this critical hour of human affairs, when strong, honest, trustworthy leadership is desperately needed, grant that the Senators will take seriously their mandate, and be honorable in intention and purpose, as the 99th Congress opens for business.

Save us, Lord, from immaturity which cannot handle the prestige of high office—from love of power which breeds abuse—and arrogance in power which corrupts. Make this a moment of noble covenant which will honor public office and translate into actions by which truth, justice, and peace prevail. In the name of Him who is truth. Amen.

RESIGNATION AND APPOINTMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a letter of resignation and a certificate of appointment to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation. Without objection, the reading will be waived, and the documents will be printed in the RECORD.

The documents ordered to be printed in the RECORD are as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, December 27, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I am writing to inform you that I am resigning from my Senate seat effective at the start of business January 2, 1985.

Your help in this matter is greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

PAUL E. TSONGAS,
U.S. Senator.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Boston, MA.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that, pursuant to the power vested in me by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of the State of Massachusetts, I, Michael S. Dukakis, the Governor of said State, do hereby appoint John F. Kerry a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States until the vacancy therein, caused by the resignation of Paul E. Tsongas, is filled by election, as provided by law.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the Great Seal of Massachusetts to be affixed, at Boston this 2nd day of January, in the Year of Our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred and Eighty-Five.

MICHAEL S. DUKAKIS,
Governor,

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 1) informing the President of the United States that a quorum of each House is assembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 1) reads as follows:

S. RES. 1

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the resolution, the majority and minority leaders are appointed as members of the committee.

IMPROVING SENATE PROCEDURES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk. It is a simple resolution. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 2) to improve Senate procedures.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. the resolution goes over under the rule.

The text of the resolution follows:

S. RES. 2

Resolved, That (a) the Senate hereby authorizes and directs that there be both television and radio broadcast coverage (together with videotape and audio recordings) of proceedings in the Senate Chamber.

(b) Such broadcast coverage shall be—

(1) provided in accordance with provisions of this resolution;

(2) provided continuously at such times as the Majority Leader and Minority Leader jointly agreed by a non-debatable motion, voted on without intervening action, and to be concluded by joint agreement by non-debatable motion of the Majority and Minority Leaders voted on without intervening action except for any time when a meeting with closed doors is ordered; and

(3) provided that during any television and/or radio broadcasts, time shall be divided and controlled in such way as to assure equal time to both the Majority and Minority Parties; and

(4) provided subject to the provisions pertaining to the Senate gallery contained in the following Standing Rules of the Senate: rule XIX, paragraphs 6 and 7; rule XXV, paragraph 1(n); and rule XXXIII, paragraph 2; and

(5) provided that the Senate shall be in session on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays, with committee meetings scheduled on days and/or times the Senate debate is not to be televised.

SEC. 2. The radio and television broadcast of Senate proceedings shall be—

(a) supervised and operated by the Senate, and

(b) made available on a "live" basis and free of charge to (1) any accredited member of the Senate Radio and Television Correspondents Gallery, (2) the coaxial cable system of the Architect of the Capitol, and (3) such other news gathering, educational, or information distributing entity as may be authorized by the Committee on Rules and Administration to receive such broadcasts.

SEC. 3. The television broadcast of Senate proceedings shall follow the Presiding Officer and Senators who are recognized to speak by the Presiding Officer (including Senators who are so recognized with the consent of another Senator to interrupt such other Senator).

SEC. 4. (a) The broadcast coverage by radio and television of the proceedings of the Senate shall be implemented as provided in this section.

(b) The Architect of the Capitol, in consultation with the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, shall—

(1) construct necessary broadcasting facilities for both radio and television (including a control room and the modification of Senate sound and lighting fixtures);

(2) employ necessary expert consultants; and

(3) acquire and install all necessary equipment and facilities to (A) produce a broadcast-quality "live" audio and color video signal of such proceedings, and (B) provide an archive-quality audio and color video tape recording of such proceedings:

Provided, That the Architect of the Capitol, in carrying out the duties specified in clauses (1) through (3) of this subsection, shall not enter into any contract for the purchase or installation of equipment, for the employment of any consultant, or for the provision of training to any person, unless the same shall first have been approved by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

(c) The Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate shall (1) employ such staff as may be necessary, working in conjunction with the Senate Recording and Photographic Studios, to operate and maintain all broadcast audio and color video equipment installed pursuant to this resolution, (2) make audio and video tape recordings of Senate proceedings, (3) make copies of such recordings available, upon payment to him of a fee fixed therefor by the Committee on Rules and Administration, to Members of the Senate and to each person described in subsections (b) (1) and (3) of section 2 of this resolution, and (4) retain for ninety days after the day any Senate proceedings took place, such recordings thereof, and as soon thereafter as possible, transmit to the Librarian of Congress and to the Archivist of the United States copies of such recordings: Provided, That the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, in carrying out the duties specified in clauses (1) and (2) of this subsection, shall comply with appropriate Senate procurement and other regulations.

(d) The Librarian of Congress and the Archivist of the United States shall each receive, store, and make available to the public, at no cost for viewing or listening on the premises where stored and upon payment of a fee equal to the cost involved through distribution of taped copies, recordings of Senate proceedings transmitted to them by the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

SEC. 5. (a) As soon as practicable after the necessary equipment has been installed, there shall begin a test period during which tests of radio and television coverage of Senate proceedings shall be conducted by the staffs of the Committee on Rules and Administration and of the Office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate. Such test period shall end on such date as may be agreed upon by the majority leader, the minority leader, the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and the ranking minority member of such committee.

(b) During such test period—

(1) final procedures for camera direction control shall be established;

(2) coverage of Senate proceedings shall not be transmitted, except that, at the direction of the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, such coverage may be transmitted over the coaxial cable system of the Architect of the Capitol; and

(3) recordings of Senate proceedings shall be made and retained by the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

SEC. 6. The use of tape duplications of broadcast coverage of the proceedings of the Senate for political or commercial purposes is strictly prohibited; and any such tape duplication furnished to any person shall be made on the condition that it not be used for political or commercial purposes.

SEC. 7. Any changes in the regulations made by this resolution shall be made only by Senate resolution. However, the Committee on Rules and Administration may adopt such procedures and such regulations, which do not contravene the regulations made by this resolution, as it deems necessary to assure the proper implementation of the purposes of this resolution.

SEC. 8. Such funds as may be necessary (but not in excess of $2,500,000) to carry out this resolution shall be expended from the contingent funds of the Senate.

SEC. 9. Rule XXVI, paragraph 7.(a)(1), is amended to read as follows:

"7. (a)(1) Except as provided in this paragraph, each committee and each subcommittee thereof is authorized to fix the number of its members (but not less than one-third of its entire membership) who shall constitute a quorum thereof for the transaction of such business as may be considered by said committee, except that no measure or matter or recommendation shall be reported from any committee unless a majority of the committee are physically present, and no report or legislative or executive measure or matter from a committee shall be accepted at the desk except on the representation of the committee chairman that it was not reported by polling."

SEC. 10. Rule XXX, paragraph 1(b), is amended to read as follows:

"(b) When a treaty is reported from a committee with or without amendment, it shall, unless the Senate unanimously otherwise direct, lie over one day for consideration; after which it may be read a second time, after which amendments may be proposed. At any stage of such proceedings the Senate may remove the injunction of secrecy from the treaty."

SEC. 11. Rule XII, paragraph 1, is amended by striking the first clause thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Except as provided in subparagraph 5 of this rule, when the yeas and nays are ordered."

SEC. 12. Rule XII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"5. Whenever the Majority Leader, with concurrence of the Minority Leader, shall determine, the names of Senators voting upon any roll call shall be recorded by electronic device. Senators shall have not more than fifteen minutes from the beginning of the roll call to have their vote recorded.

6. The Majority Leader, with concurrence of the Minority Leader, may announce that any recorded vote that is scheduled to or does occur immediately after another recorded vote shall be no longer than five minutes in duration."

SEC. 13. Paragraph 4 of rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" after "4"; and

(2) by adding at the end of such paragraph the following new subparagraph:

"(b) If a point of order is made by any Senator against an amendment to a general appropriations bill on the ground that such amendment proposes general legislation or proposes a limitation or restriction not authorized by law and is to take effect or cease to be effective upon the happening of a contingency, it shall not be in order to raise the defense of germaneness unless there is House legislative language on that subject contained in the bill."

SEC. 14. Rule VIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"3. Debate on any motion to proceed to the consideration of any matter, other than an amendment to the Standing Rules of the Senate, made at any time other than the morning hour shall be limited to two hours, to be equally divided between and controlled by the Majority Leader and Minority Leader or their designees, at the conclusion of which, without any intervening action, the Senate shall proceed to vote on the motion."

SEC. 15. Rule XVII, paragraph 5, of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended to read as follows:

"5. Any measure or matter reported by any standing committee shall not be considered in the Senate unless the report of that committee upon that measure or matter has been available to Members for at least two calendar days (excluding Sundays and legal holidays) prior to the consideration of that measure or matter. If hearings have been held on any such measure or matter so reported, the committee reporting the measure or matter shall make every reasonable effort to have such hearings printed and available for distribution to the Members of the Senate prior to the consideration of such measure or matter in the Senate. This paragraph—

(1) may be waived by joint agreement of the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader of the Senate; and

(2) shall not apply to—

(A) any measure for the declaration of war, or the declaration of a national emergency, by the Congress, and

(B) any executive decision, determination, or action which would become, or continue to be, effective unless disapproved or otherwise invalidated by one or both Houses of Congress."

SEC. 16. Rule XV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended—

(1) by inserting after "Motions" in the caption a semicolon and the following: "GERMANENESS";

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"6. (a) At any time during the consideration of a bill or resolution, it shall twice be in order during a calendar day to move that no amendment, other than the reported committee amendments, which is not germane or relevant to the subject matter of the bill or resolution, or to the subject matter of an amendment proposed by the committee which reported the bill or resolution, shall thereafter be in order. The motion shall be privileged and shall be decided after one hour of debate, without any intervening action, to be equally divided and controlled by the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader or their designees.

"(b) If a motion made under subparagraph (a) is agreed to by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Senators present and voting, then any floor amendment not already agreed to (except amendments proposed by the Committee which reported the bill or resolution) which is not germane or relevant to the subject matter of the bill or resolution, or the subject matter of an amendment proposed by the committee which reported the bill or resolution, shall not be in order.

"(c) When a motion made under subparagraph (a) has been agreed to as provided in subparagraph (b) with respect to a bill or resolution, points of order with respect to questions of germaneness or relevancy of amendments shall be decided without debate, except that the Presiding Officer may entertain debate for his own guidance prior to ruling on the point of order. Appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer on such points of order shall be decided without debate.

"(d) Whenever an appeal is taken from a decision of the Presiding Officer on the question of germaneness of an amendment, or whenever the Presiding Officer submits the question of germaneness or relevancy of an amendment to the Senate, the vote necessary to overturn the decision of the Presiding Officer or hold the amendment germane or relevant shall be two-thirds of the Senators present and voting. No amendment proposing sense of the Senate or sense of the Congress language that does not directly relate to the measure or matter before the Senate shall be considered germane.

SEC. 17. Paragraph 7 of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended to read as follows:

"7. Notwithstanding the provisions of rule II or rule IV or any other rule of the Senate, at any time a motion signed by sixteen Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer, or clerk at the direction of the Presiding Officer, shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and one hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the clerk call the roll, and upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question:

" 'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?' "

And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by two-thirds of the Senators present and voting-except on a measure or motion to amend the Senate rules, in which case the necessary affirmative vote shall be two-thirds of the Senators duly chosen and sworn-then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be proposed after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless it had been submitted in writing to the Journal Clerk by 1 o'clock p.m. on the day following the filing of the cloture motion if an amendment in the first degree, or a complete substitute and unless it had been so submitted at least one hour prior to the beginning of the cloture vote if an amendment in the second degree. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate. Whenever an appeal is taken under this rule from a decision of the Presiding Officer on the question of germaneness of an amendment, the vote necessary to overturn the decision of the Presiding Officer shall be two-thirds of the Senators present and voting.

"After no more than twenty hours of consideration of the measure, motion, or other matter on which cloture has been invoked, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the majority leader and minority leader, or their designee, the Senate shall proceed, without any further debate on any question, to vote on the final disposition thereof to the exclusion of all amendments not then actually pending before the Senate at that time and to the exclusion of all motions, except a motion to table, or to reconsider and one quorum call on demand to establish the presence of a quorum (and motions required to establish a quorum) immediately before the final vote begins.

"If, for any reason, a measure or matter is reprinted after cloture has been invoked, amendments which were in order prior to the reprinting of the measure or matter will continue to be in order and may be conformed and reprinted at the request of the amendment's sponsor. The conforming changes must be limited to lineation and pagination.

"No Senator shall call up more than two amendments until every other Senator shall have had the opportunity to do likewise.

"After cloture is invoked, the reading of any amendment, including House amendments, shall be dispensed with.".

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 3) informing the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

The resolution reads as follows:

S. RES. 3

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk dealing with the hour of convening and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 4) fixing the hour of daily meeting of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

The resolution reads as follows:

S. RES. 4

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. MATHIAS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

COUNTING OF THE ELECTORAL VOTES

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I send to the desk Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 1 to provide for a joint session of the Congress to meet on the 7th day of January next for the purpose of counting the electoral votes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 1) to provide for the counting on January 7, 1985, of the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

The resolution reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 1

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 7th day of January 1985, at 1 o'clock post meridian, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their Presiding Officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed by the President of the Senate on the part of the Senate and two by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter "A"; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the resolution, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MATHIAS] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], are appointed as tellers on the part of the Senate.

The majority leader.

ELECTION OF THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 5) to elect the Honorable Strom Thurmond, of the State of South Carolina, to be President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am going to present an amendment shortly to substitute the name of the Honorable JOHN C. STENNIS, the Senator from the State of Mississippi, for the name of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. THURMOND.

I think it would be appropriate at this time to note that Mr. STENNIS is with us today under circumstances that would have greatly discouraged most people from doing so. But Senator STENNIS is a very special person who is determined to fulfill his responsibilities and duties to this institution as long as God permits him to do so. The people of his State undoubtedly support him in that.

He has provided a shining inspiration—not just in this late circumstance but also throughout his career for the rest of us who would like to try to emulate the conduct and the dedication to duty, so apparent in the national service rendered by this distinguished—very distinguished—Senator from Mississippi.

I have no illusions, of course, as to the outcome of this amendment, but I think that the Senate owes the distinguished Senator from Mississippi its recognition for the services that he has so assiduously performed over the many years that he has served in this Senate.

He is No. 1 in seniority in this Senate. He is a Senator who, as I have said many times before, acts like a Senator, talks like a Senator, looks like a Senator, and is a Senator's Senator. Not only do the people of Mississippi do themselves proud by repeatedly sending this Senator back to the Senate, but they also recognize his importance to the Senate and the contributions that he will continue to make to this great Nation, through his work here.

So I ask for a vote on the amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I do not mean to seem facetious because I agree with everything that our distinguished colleague, the minority leader, has stated about our able colleague from Mississippi, Senator STENNIS.

I think the most outstanding characteristic of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi is that he really hails from the HOLLINGS' clan of South Carolina. [Laughter.] He should head up the family reunion. I would love to referee between two South Carolinians there.

I would simply state that as distinguished is the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. STENNIS, he is most distinguished for the priorities of the Presidency of the U.S. Senate itself and that he be the first to second the nomination of Senator THURMOND, my senior colleague, as our President pro tempore.

AMENDMENT NO. 1

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send my amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes an amendment numbered 1 as follows:

At the appropriate place strike "the Honorable Strom Thurmond, a Senator from the State of South Carolina" and insert in lieu thereof "the Honorable John C. Stennis, a Senator from the State of Mississippi".

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The amendment (No. 1) was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further debate on the resolution? If not, the question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from Kansas, Mr. DOLE.

The resolution (S. Res. 5) was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, on this historic opening of the 99th Congress, I could not let this day pass without recognizing my good friend and distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi, JOHN STENNIS.

As my colleagues are all aware, JOHN is continuing to recover from serious surgery, and all of us are pleased to see him here today for the opening of this Congress.

In fact, his presence here today is an indication of the courage and dedication to duty that has characterized Senator STENNIS' entire public service career—which spans three decades in the Senate alone.

I have been privileged to serve with Senator STENNIS since I first came to the Senate in 1954, and I have the utmost respect and admiration for this fine gentlemen. He is recognized throughout his home State, and indeed throughout the entire Nation, as a man of great principle and integrity who has truly earned the distinction of "Dean of the United States Senate."

He has served as chairman of two of the Senate's most powerful and prestigious committees—Armed Services and Appropriations—and distinguished himself as an effective and articulate leader for a strong national defense and fiscal integrity in government.

Although a native of Mississippi, Senator STENNIS' family roots are firmly planted in my home State of South Carolina, where his daughter and her husband still reside in the Greenville area. I can assure my colleagues that the name of JOHN C. STENNIS is well-known in South Carolina, where the people of my State know him as a man of great ability and dignity.

As the senior Democrat serving in the Senate, the position of President pro tempore, which I am honored to hold, would go to Senator STENNIS if his party held a majority of seats in this body. There is no doubt that he would serve with distinction in that leadership position, and since we have chosen new Senate officers today, I wanted to take this opportunity to commend him on his many years of outstanding service to his State and our Nation.

The majority leader addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The majority leader is recognized.

ELECTION OF SENATOR STROM THURMOND AS PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE FOR THE 99TH CONGRESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would like to congratulate the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina on his re-election as President pro tempore of the Senate. But, first, I would like to pay my respects to the distinguished Senator from Mississippi.

When I first came to the Senate, my predecessor, Senator Carlson, said "Keep your eye on one man. If you do what this man does in the Senate, and act like he does in the Senate, you are going to have a lot of respect from your colleagues." That man was Senator STENNIS. Senator Carlson and Senator STENNIS were close friends. They formed a prayer breakfast group together. They worked very closely together.

I had an opportunity recently to visit Senator STENNIS in the hospital. He would not let me in the room until he was seated. He did not want me to visit him while he was in bed.

We had a good visit. We talked about a lot of things. But he is an outstanding Member of this body, and in any other circumstances I would be compelled to vote for you, Senator STENNIS. But I would also say that we have an outstanding candidate who has been elected, Senator THURMOND. Senator THURMOND has certainly meant a lot to this body. He is a senior Member in every way. He has been chairman of the Judiciary Committee for 4 years, and under that chairmanship we have enacted a number of major pieces of legislation.

So, Senator THURMOND, I speak, I think, for all Senators, Republicans and Democrats, in extending congratulations to you for a job well done and congratulating you in your re-election for more years of service in the Senate.

Mr. President, I can think of no individual more highly deserving of this position than my good friend STROM THURMOND. During his service as President pro tempore of the Senate in the 97th and 98th Congresses, Senator THURMOND fulfilled the responsibilities and duties of that high office with great dedication and vigor. His long and productive public career reveals that he is a man of great principle and integrity.

In addition, his chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee over the past 4 years has produced a list of accomplishments of which he and all Americans can be justly proud. Under STROM THURMOND's aggressive leadership, the Judiciary Committee has been one of the most active and productive of all Senate committees, ushering into law last year, among other measures, the most comprehensive crime bill ever considered by the Congress.

Having worked closely with this dedicated man over the years, I have witnessed first hand his keen devotion to our Nation. His unbounded talent and sound judgment are the cornerstones of his true patriotism and love for America. As a representative of the people of South Carolina, STROM THURMOND has handled his duties in the U.S. Senate with the utmost dignity and responsibility.

Our Nation is much stronger and safer today because STROM THURMOND, as a long time member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has emphasized the necessity of rebuilding our national defense system and pursued peace through strength. Today, as senior member and chairman of the Military Construction Subcommittee, he ably supervises one of the most important aspects of our military complex.

We are fortunate that STROM THURMOND has taken such a strong interest in Veterans' Affairs, where he is ranking majority member, and authored many important pieces of legislation which are crucial to the services our veterans deserve.

We also look forward to the continued hard work and dedication to duty that STROM THURMOND has exhibited as a member of the Labor and Human Resources.

Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate STROM THURMOND for being re-elected President pro tempore. The U.S. Senate and our Nation will long benefit from the loyal service of this true statesman.

We are looking forward to participating in your next election in 1990.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The President pro tempore will proceed to the desk, escorted by the minority leader and the majority leader, for the purpose of taking the oath.

The President pro tempore, escorted by Senator DOLE and Senator BYRD, advanced to the desk of the Vice President; the oath was administered to him by the Vice President; and he subscribed to the oath in the official oath book.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield to me?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think the RECORD should show that our distinguished senior Senator [Mr. STENNIS]—I say senior in point of service with respect to both parties—our senior Senator on this side of the aisle received every vote cast by the minority Senators and, had the minority been the majority, of course, our distinguished senior Senator would have been the President pro tempore. This is an indication of the great respect in which the Senator from Mississippi is held by all of his colleagues. I hope he will be with us a long time.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for yielding.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed to the desk, escorted by the majority leader, to take the oath of office as Secretary of the Senate.

The Honorable Jo-Anne L. Coe, escorted by the Honorable ROBERT DOLE, advanced to the desk of the Vice President; the oath prescribed by law was administered to her by the President pro tempore.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A Senate Resolution (S. Res. 14) notifying the President of the United States of the election of a Secretary of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to as follows:

S. RES. 14

Resolved, That the President of the United States be notified of the election of the Honorable Jo-Anne L. Coe, of Virginia, as Secretary of the Senate.

LEADERSHIP TRIBUTES AND ASSURANCES OF COOPERATION

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, before I present this resolution to the Senate, I should like to commend the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], who has been elected as the majority leader in the Senate and as the leader of his party. He is a man who is greatly talented, has great ability, and we all know he has a personality that rightly wins friends on both sides of the aisle, from Members of both parties. I congratulate him on the honor that has been accorded him by his party in the Senate.

I am confident that he is going to do his job well. It will be a pleasure for us to cooperate with Senator DOLE when we can on this side of the aisle, and, where we cannot, we will be able, hopefully, to suggest other approaches and to do so with good grace and with respect for the distinguished majority leader and his party in the Senate.

(Applause, Senators rising.)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. BYRD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, first, I thank my distinguised colleague from West Virginia. We have had a number of opportunities to visit since my election as majority leader. For that, I am very thankful to my colleagues. We will obviously work together where we can. I have nothing but the greatest respect for the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. I advise him to be a bit patient with me while I learn the rules half as well as he knows the rules. Otherwise, I look forward to an exciting 1985 working with the minority leader and Members on both sides of the aisle to do what I think we must do. That is to address the Federal deficit.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

NOTIFICATION TO HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF ELECTION OF SECRETARY OF THE SENATE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A Senate resolution (S. Res. 15) notifying the House of Representatives of the election of a Secretary of the Senate.

COMMENDATION OF WILLIAM F. HILDENBRAND

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 16) to commend William F. Hildenbrand.

The resolution was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution (S. Res. 16) with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 16

Whereas, at the beginning of the Ninety-ninth Congress William F. Hildenbrand will have fulfilled four years of service as the Secretary of the United States Senate; and

Whereas, as an elected officer of the Senate, both as Secretary for the Minority and Secretary of the Senate, the said William F. Hildenbrand has performed the duties and discharged the responsibilities of his offices with unfailing dedication and a high degree of efficiency; and

Whereas, the said William F. Hildenbrand has upheld the high standards and traditions of the Office of Secretary of the Senate with abiding devotion; and

Whereas, he has gained trust, confidence, and respect of his associates and the Members of the United States Senate; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate recognizes the notable contributions of William F. Hildenbrand to the Senate and to his Country and express to him its appreciation and gratitude for his long, faithful, and outstanding service.

AUTHORIZATION FOR ADMINISTRATION OF OATH OF OFFICE TO THE HONORABLE JAY ROCKEFELLER OF WEST VIRGINIA ON JANUARY 15, 1985

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 17) authorizing the President of the Senate to administer the oath of office to the Honorable Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia.

The resolution (S. Res. 17) was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 17

Resolved, That the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to administer the oath of office to the Honorable Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia in the Senate Chamber on January 15, 1985, and that the said oath, when administered as herein authorized, shall be accepted and received by the Senate as the oath of office of the said Jay Rockefeller.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR TRANSMISSION OF BUDGET MESSAGE AND ECONOMIC REPORT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a joint resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 6) extending the time within which the President may transmit the budget message and the economic report to the Congress and extending the time within which the Joint Economic Committee shall file its report.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, will the majority leader have the kindness to tell us what are the extensions involved?

Mr. DOLE. It would be February 4 on the budget, February 7 on the economic report.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. The budget would come subsequent to the State of the Union Message, or would it be the other way around?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. Senators will take their seats.

Mr. DOLE. It is my understanding that the budget will precede the State of the Union Message, which I think is now temporarily set for February 6.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. It will precede?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the majority leader.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 6) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S.J. RES. 6

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, (a) notwithstanding the provisions of section 201 of the Act of June 10, 1922, as amended (31 U.S.C. 1105), the President shall transmit to the Congress not later than February 4, the Budget for the Fiscal Year 198 ; (b) notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the Act of February 20, 1946, as amended (15 U.S.C. 1022), the President shall transmit to the Congress not later than February 7, the Economic Report; and (c) notwithstanding the provisions of clause (3) of section 5(b) of the Act of February 20, 1946 (15 U.S.C. 1024(b)), the Joint Economic Committee shall file its report on the President's Economic Report with the House of Representatives and the Senate not later than

SEC. 2. That (a) notwithstanding the provisions of section 605(a) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (31 U.S.C. 11(a)), the President shall submit to the Senate and the House of Representatives the estimates required to be submitted by said subsection for the Fiscal Year 198 not later than the date on which the President transmits to the Congress the budget for the Fiscal Year 198 , and (b) notwithstanding the provisions of section 605(b) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, the Joint Economic Committee shall submit to the Committees on the Budget of both Houses the evaluation required to be submitted by said subsection for the Fiscal Year 198 not later than the date on which the report for the Fiscal Year 198 pursuant to section 5(b)(3) of the Employment Act of 1946 (15

U.S.C. 1024b) is filed with the Senate and House of Representatives.

EXTENSION OF LIFE OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE INAUGURAL

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I send to the desk Senate Concurrent Resolution 2, to extend the life of the Joint Committee on the Inaugural.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) to extend the life of the Joint Committee on the Inaugural.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 2

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That effective from January 3, 1985, the joint committee created by Senate Concurrent Resolution 122 of the Ninety-eighth Congress, to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration, is hereby continued with the same power and authority.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have a number of unanimous-consent requests which have been cleared. I will go through them as quickly as I can.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order.

AUTHORIZATION FOR ETHICS COMMITTEE TO MEET

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 99th Congress, the Ethics Committee be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the 99th Congress, Senators may be allowed to bring to the desk bills, joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, and simple resolutions, for referral to appropriate committees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION TO REFER TREATIES AND NOMINATIONS ON THE DAY THEY ARE RECEIVED FROM THE PRESIDENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 99th Congress, it be in order to refer treaties and nominations on the day when they are received from the President, even when the Senate has no executive session that day.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate, so that Senators can understand the distinguished majority leader when he makes the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALLOP). The Senate will be in order.

Without objection, the request of the majority leader is agreed to.

ORDER FOR TIME LIMITATION ON ROLLCALL VOTES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 99th Congress, there be a limitation of 15 minutes each upon any rollcall vote, with the warning signal to be sounded at the midway point, beginning at the last 7½ minutes, and when rollcall votes are of 10-minute duration, the warning signal be sounded at the beginning of the last 7½ minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR MEMBERS OF THE STAFF TO RECEIVE REPORTS AT THE DESK WHEN PRESENTED BY A SENATOR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the 99th Congress it be in order for the proper members of the staff to receive reports at the desk when presented by a Senator at any time during the day of the session of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER DESIGNATING DAILY ASSIGNMENT OF LEADERSHIP TIME

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the majority and minority leaders may daily, as during the past Congresses, have up to 10 minutes each on each calendar day following the prayer and the disposition of the reading of, or the approval of, the Journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it so ordered.

ORDER GRANTING PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR TO THE PARLIAMENTARIAN OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives and his three assistants be given the privilege of the floor during the 99th Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROCEDURES FOR PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR DURING THE 99TH CONGRESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the duration of the 99th Congress, Senators be allowed to leave at the desk with the Journal clerk a list of no more than two staff members who will be granted the privilege of the floor during the consideration of the specific matter noted on the list, and that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to rotate such staff members as space allows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRINTING OF CONFERENCE REPORTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act, conference reports and statements accompanying them not be printed as Senate reports when such conference reports and statements have been printed as a House report, unless specific request is made in the Senate in each instance to have such a report printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO TAKE CERTAIN ACTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be authorized during the 99th Congress to file reports during adjournments or recesses of the Senate on appropriation bills including joint resolutions, together with any accompanying notices of motions to suspend rule XVI, pursuant to rule V, for the purpose of offering certain amendments to such bills or joint resolutions, which proposed amendment shall be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE TO TAKE CERTAIN ACTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, for the duration of the 99th Congress, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make technical and clerical corrections in the engrossments of all Senate-passed bills and resolutions, Senate amendments to House bills and resolutions, Senate amendments to House amendments to Senate bills and resolutions, and Senate amendments to House amendments to Senate amendments to House bills and resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORITY TO RECEIVE AND SIGN

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the duration of the 99th Congress when the Senate is in recess or adjournment, that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive and appropriatelyt refer messages from the President of the United States and, with the exception of House bills and joint resolutions, messages from the House of Representatives and that the President of the Senate, the President protempore be authorized to sign duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROVISION FOR ADJOURNMENT OF BOTH HOUSES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a concurrent resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3) providing for an adjournment of the Senate from January 7, 1985, to January 21, 1985, and an adjournment of the House from January 7, 1985, to January 21, 1985.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3) was agreed to, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 3

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the Senate adjourns on Monday, January 7, 1985, at the conclusion of the joint session to count the electoral votes, it stand adjourned until 4:00 p.m. on Monday, January 21, 1985, and when the House of Representatives adjourns on January 7, it stand adjourned until 10:00 a.m. on Monday, January 21, 1985, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of the concurrent resolution.

SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader of the Senate, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the House and the Minority Leader of the Senate, shall notify the Members of the House and the Senate, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS ON JANUARY 21, 1985

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes on Monday, January 21, 1985, the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, no resolutions come over under the rule, that the call of the calendar be dispensed with, and that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to exceed 30 minutes in length, with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each, and that the morning hour be deemed to have expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader reserves the right to object.

There being no objection, the request of the majority leader is agreed to.

THE GENEVA RESOLUTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we had hoped at this time to take up a resolution concerning the Geneva meeting of the Secretary of State and the Soviet Foreign Minister. We are clearing that with the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee and the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. Hopefully we could do that within the next few moments.

THE AGENDA

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish at this time to take only a few moments to explain what I think could happen in the next 60 days.

The next 60 days are likely to be busy ones for the Senate. On January 7, 1985, the Senate will convene at 12 noon for the sole purpose of participating in a joint meeting of the House and Senate to count electoral ballots. No rollcall votes will be conducted. Although not scheduled to meet again in working session until the week of January 21, the majority leader is hopeful that a great deal of work can be accomplished in the interim period.

During this period of time before the Inauguration, we expect that working groups will meet to discuss the administration's budget proposals and begin the process of identifying those areas of potential agreement. Working groups will also be asked to review the recommendations for changes in the Senate rules as suggested by the so-called Quayle report. The majority leader hopes that Members from both sides of the aisle will be involved in this review so that, when the Senate returns, rapid action can be taken on those areas of agreement.

In addition to work being done on the suggested changes in the rules, progress might also be made during this interim on the recommendations for changes in the committee structure. This morning the chairman of the Republican conference, my distinguished colleague from Rhode Island, Senator CHAFEE, announced his appointments to the Committee on Committees. I am hopeful that the committee can begin its discussions on the suggestions incorporated in the Quayle Committee report. Obviously the committees need to get on with the business of organizing and the more quickly the decisions are made, the better.

I might add as an aside that we cannot expect the distinguished minority leader to move ahead until we take action on our side.

The Senate is scheduled to return for business January 21, 1985, Inauguration Day. On January 21 the Senate will meet at 4 p.m. for a brief time in order to receive nominations and conduct any necessary business. No rollcall votes will be conducted.

During the remainder of that first week, the Senate will be scheduled to meet at 12 noon each day. To the extent possible, decisions might be made on rules changes.

In February, the Senate expects to be in session, with the exception of the Lincoln Day recess scheduled for February 11 to February 17. February 18 is a Federal holiday. However, the Senate will convene at 12 noon for the sole purpose of the reading of Washington's Farewell Address. On that day, no business will be conducted, nor will there be any rollcall votes.

As many of my colleagues are aware, I believe that one of the most serious issues facing this country to be the looming Federal deficit. On February 4, 1985, we will receive the administration's budget for fiscal year 1986. Hopefully action on the budget might well begin, at least on the committee level, early in the month.

During the month of February, the majority leader also hopes that action can be completed on the nomination of Mr. Edwin Meese to be Attorney General.

As I indicated at the outset, it is my hope that the next 2 months can be fruitful ones. I certainly look forward to working with the distinguished minority leader and all Members of the Senate as we start this year.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for laying out for all Senators what he sees as the likely program for the next few weeks.

Mr. President, I would hope that we on this side of the aisle might be apprised of what the President intends to include in his budget, what reductions he intends to propose therein, what his ideas are for reducing the budget deficits, and I would hope that the President would be able to submit a balanced budget to the Senate.

I hope that the Members of the minority, especially those on the Budget Committee, will be apprised as soon as possible of what the President has in mind insofar as the budget is concerned.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will indicate now to the minority leader that I obviously will keep him apprised, and as soon as we have any information that I think may be helpful to all of us in the Senate I will certainly notify the minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

ORDER FOR THE RECORD TO REMAIN OPEN UNTIL 5 P.M. TODAY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the record remain open until 5 p.m. today for the introduction of bills, resolutions, and submissions of statements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMUNICATION ON FINAL ASCERTAINMENT OF ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the majority leader will yield for a statement, the Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Administrator of General Services transmitting, pursuant to law, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the Electors for President and Vice President which are ordered to lie on the table.

I thank the majority leader.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to exceed 2 hours in length, with statements limited therein to 3 minutes each, with the exception of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who will be permitted to address the Senate for not to exceed 30 minutes; provided further that no limitation apply to the two leaders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SEVERAL SENATORS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate is now operating under the resolution providing for routine morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

TV AND ELECTRONIC VOTING DEVICES IN THE SENATE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I shall introduce for referral later today various proposals intended to open the way, hopefully, for television and radio broadcasts of debate in the Senate.

The principal problem, as I see it—and I attempt to look at this matter through the eyes of a former majority leader and through the eyes of the present minority leader—is that of assuring Members on both sides of the aisle and particularly the minority that they will be recognized in a fair and equitable fashion and receive equal time when the debate in the Senate is being broadcast.

I also am introducing proposals to provide for electronic voting in the Senate as now occurs in the House of Representatives and in many State legislatures.

I also propose to amend rule XXII in ways that would relieve the Senate of the kind of abuses that have occurred so many times heretofore after cloture has been invoked.

I am also proposing that the Senate be in session Mondays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays for floor action and that no committee meetings may occur when the Senate is being televised. Committees could meet on days of the week when the Senate is not in session, or before and after Senate sessions that are being televised.

I have to say also that I believe that, until we move in this direction, the Senate will continue to be unable to hold our own with respect to the media coverage at the White House and in the other body. The Senate at the present time is somewhat of an unknown institution in this country to many people. They think of Congress as being the House of Representatives. Of course, the Senate is also a House of the Congress. At the present time, the White House and the House of Representatives are seen much on television. The Senate should also move in this direction. The American people are entitled to see and hear what the Senate is doing. As Woodrow Wilson once said, "The informing function of the Congress is as important as is the legislative function." The practical problems facing TV and radio broadcasts in the Senate are difficult but not insurmountable. The Senate has vastly different rules from those of the House.

It is imperative that the minority be protected and have its equal access to time when and if such Senate broadcasts begin. And it is not easy to provide such equity in the time agreements under which we normally approach many of the more controversial measures that come before this body. But we should make the effort to do so. My proposals provide for proceeding with audio and video coverage on a trial basis so that the bugs can be ironed out.

I shall offer these and other rules changes for referral, and I hope that the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration will consider these proposals as soon as it is possible for that committee to do so.

Mr. SIMPSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, if I might just take a moment to thank my peers for selecting me as the assistant majority leader of the Senate, I consider that a great honor and a rugged responsibility, and it is my intention to serve the leader as his lieutenant, he indeed being the captain of this particular body as the majority leader. He has my deepest admiration and respect. That has been very evident. I have shared that with him many times in the past for he is an absolutely extraordinary legislator.

To Senator ROBERT BYRD, who also commands my deep regard and respect, who is an extraordinary parliamentarian, he and I have had some thoughtful differences of opinion on various items.

I have learned much from him. He has been a fine counselor and assistant, and a great source of information to me since I came here.

So it is my wish that we can smooth the duties in this body, reach out across the aisle not for purposes of obtaining votes, but for the purposes of legislating. We are all in this one together. There is much to do. The American people look toward us. They are tired of partisanship for partisanship's sake. It is a feckless exercise when performed. I have never engaged in it in my 20 years in legislating, and the Presiding Officer and I both served in the same legislative body before we came here. Both of us know what a feckless issue that can be when you just become involved and enmeshed in partisanship for no other purpose.

So with that, I hope we might bring a genuine frankness and honesty to our deliberations and a sensitivity toward the needs of others on the other side of the aisle. We are a legislature. We should be about the issue of legislating. That is what is expected of us. Let us be about our business. I hope we can do that in the spirit of cooperation. I look forward very much to working with Senator CRANSTON, also the whip on the other side of the aisle, a man I have served with on the Veterans' Affairs Committee.

And so to those on the other side of the aisle, to our leader, I pledge my support and my best assistance.

Mr. STAFFORD addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority whip for his perceptions, observations, and good intentions.

I know that he has the ability to do a tremendous job on that side of the aisle. I am confident that there will be many times when we will work together on matters of mutual concern. I congratulate the distinguished Senator. The Senator knows that I served here with his father, and that I am proud to see his illustrious son elected to be assistant Republican leader in the Senate. We have no doubt that the record will reflect well upon the actions of the distinguished Senator from Wyoming in the days ahead.

Mr. STAFFORD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

FORMER SENATOR GEORGE DAVID AIKEN

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, George David Aiken of Putney, VT, who graced the Senate with his service for more than 30 years until he retired a decade ago, died in Vermont on November 19, 1984, while the Congress was in recess.

I know that all those who served in the Senate with George Aiken remember him with affection and with respect. I suspect that others who came to know him after his retirement feel the same way.

It is only fitting that Members of this body be given the opportunity to express their feelings about George Aiken. The leadership has agreed to a special order to set aside time for Members of the Senate to pay their respects to our former colleague, and I take this opportunity to invite each of you to participate.

The special order to permit Members of the Senate to pay their respects to George Aiken is set for Tuesday, January 22d.

SENATOR RUDY BOSCHWITZ

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, earlier today I had the distinct honor and special personal privilege of accompanying RUDY BOSCHWITZ to the desk of the U.S. Senate for the beginning of his service in a second term as a U.S. Senator from Minnesota.

RUDY and I came to this body together as a result of the 1978 elections. We were the "Minnesota Massacre" in those days. In 1978, and for the first time in a very long time in Minnesota, the Republican Party held both seats in the U.S. Senate and the governorship at the same time. The 1978 Minnesota election provided the opportunity to sweep all three of those elective offices in one year because of very unique circumstances—the elevation of a former Minnesota Senator to the Vice Presidency—the death of another Senator who had served the State and the Nation as Senator, Vice President and then Presidential nominee of his party. So those were unique days in the history of our State. And perhaps in the history of the country. RUDY and I believed that we were here to herald a change in the public spirit and the sense that the people had for the Government. The "Minnesota Massacre" did, in fact, point to the changes which swept the Nation in 1980 and brought a Republican majority to the U.S. Senate.

When we got here, we found that we were the Minnesota Twins. Two freshman from the same party and same State were bound to be compared. For a time we were not particularly comfortable with the comparisons. Those who have observed our work over the past 6 years know that we are very different. We knew that in 1978. We came here for different reasons, from very different backgrounds and had different goals and objectives. After a time, and I suspect particularly now that we have both been reelected, the need to compare us, one with the other, has disappeared and our linkage as Minnesota Republicans is only a minor aspect of the public perception.

But the bond between us remains close and personal. My admiration for RUDY, the strengths he brings to the Senate, his devotion to his family and community, and his qualities as friend and colleague grows each year. On this special day for he, his wife Ellen and his sons Gerry, Ken, Dan and Tom, I wanted to make sure that the RECORD contained the story of RUDY BOSCHWITZ. It is a remarkable story—the path by which he came to the U.S. Senate. It is the American story.

Assessing RUDY BOSCHWITZ' future in the U.S. Senate, a Minnesota editor once predicted that he "will become a person of national prominence because of his understanding and staunch support of the small businessman and farmer."

RUDY built his reputation during his 15 years as a Minnesota businessman—prior to his election to the Senate in November 1978. He frequently took the lead to show what a relatively small business can do to counter the forces of inflation and increasingly high prices from suppliers.

As head of Plywood Minnesota, a mass merchandiser of paneling, cabinets, and carpet, RUDY campaigned for the "little guy" through a number of efforts, including: A Plywood Minnesota price freeze—when inflation raged—a "Don't Do It, Dupont" movement to hold down prices on carpet fiber, and well-publicized divorces from large suppliers who wouldn't hold the line on prices.

During his Senate campaign, RUDY stressed that our Government needs more representatives from business; men and women who truly understand fiscal responsibility, and have a working knowledge of free enterprise.

"Free enterprise," RUDY says, "should not connote a series of corporate giants growing larger. It means that people have access into the economic mainstream and that the economic system responds to supply and demand."

In the Senate—a body which currently has 60 lawyers—RUDY is among the dozen or so who have had active business careers, and among only three or four who were entreprenuers.

BOSCHWITZ' belief in free enterprise is deeply rooted. An immigrant to America at the age of 5, he was born in Berlin in 1930 during the declining days of the Weimar Republic. His father, whom RUDY cites as the most eminent of his heroes, sensed what was ahead in Hitler's Germany and took his family on a vacation to Czechoslovakia. The family eventually settled in New Rochelle, NY, and began to rebuild their lives.

Some 43 years later BOSCHWITZ told a crowd at a reception following his swearing in as a U.S. Senator of his gratitude to a system that allowed a boy who got off the boat at the age of 5 to achieve so much and attain one of the highest offices our Nation has to offer.

RUDY attended college at Johns Hopkins University and received his law degree, at age 22, from New York University. He served in the U.S. Army Signal Corps, practiced law for a couple of years, but then decided to make some real money.

He began his business career with his brother's fledgling firm in Oshkosh, WI. In 1963 RUDY moved to Minnesota, took over an old railroad building in a Twin Cities suburb, and began Plywood Minnesota, an enterprise that grew in 15 years to include 68 warehouse stores in 8 States.

Though his involvement in politics began quite by chance, RUDY's participation is based upon his belief that a person who has received much from the American system needs to return it as well.

As Minnesota's Republican National Committeeman from 1971 through 1978 and now as a Senator, and as a private citizen as well, he has followed his practice of returning. He has served as Minnesota State Chairman for a number of organizations including the American Cancer Society—3 years, the Minnesota Mental Health Association—1 year, the Minnesota Kidney Foundation—2 years, and the Lubavitch House in St. Paul—many years, and that's only a small sampling of his many involvements.

He and his wife Ellen have moved to McLean, VA, with their two younger sons, Dan, 18, and Tom, 15. Sons Gerry, 23 and Ken, 22, graduated from two small Minnesota colleges, Gerry from Carleton in Northfield and Ken from Macalester in St. Paul. They are now associated with Plywood Minnesota.

A jogger, RUDY's quiet moments—there are few—are spent listening to music and reading a variety of newspapers and magazines, newsletters and books on political history. Mostly, BOSCHWITZ says, "I work."

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL MONDAY, JANUARY 7, 1985

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 12 noon on Monday, January 7, 1985. That consent motion has been cleared with the minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

THE SILENT SCREAM

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a new film has just been released. It is so new, I doubt that more than a few hundred Americans have seen it. Yet it is a film that I believe millions of Americans will see before long, and I believe it is a film that will change American history.

The film lets us see something no human being had ever seen until just recently. Such a film was not possible to make because technology did not exist until now.

I want to tell my colleagues about the narrator of the film. His name is Bernard Nathanson. Bernard Nathanson is a specialist in obstetrics and gynecology and practices in New York.

In the 1960's Dr. Nathanson was an activist in the movement to repeal State laws that prohibited abortion. In fact he was a founder of the National Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws, the most active and successful of such organizations. I say successful, because he and his colleagues achieved their goal when the Supreme Court in 1973 overturned the abortion laws and abortion became legal and increasingly widespread.

After the 1973 decision, Dr. Nathanson became the director of the largest abortion clinic in the world. Some 60,000 abortions were performed during his tenure.

Today, Dr. Nathanson is one of the leading antiabortion advocates in the world, and probably the most eloquent. How did it happen? What changed the mind of this once ardent advocate of abortion?

The evolution of Dr. Bernard Nathanson parallels the evolution of fetology as a medical specialty. Fetology is the medical care of the human fetus. Fetology is a new specialty. In fact, in 1973, when the Supreme Court struck down the laws prohibiting abortion, fetology was so early in its development it was not yet recognized as a medical specialty.

In 1973, the human fetus could not be seen on an x-ray film until the end of the fourth month of pregnancy, when bones had sufficiently calcified, and so, since the human fetus was invisible to us, it was easy to dismiss abortion as simply the removal of amorphous tissue.

But then in the 1970's, came the refinement of ultrasound, and a window on the womb was opened up to those who cared to look. Realtime ultrasound revealed in a continuous motion picture the human child in the womb. The first scientific papers based on the use of realtime ultrasound in fetology began appearing in 1976, technology was advancing rapidly.

Realtime pictures show the tiny heart beating at 4 weeks. Organs are studied, and indeed surgery performed on the unborn child to correct defects detected by ultrasound. Eye movements are seen at 20 weeks. Sexual organs are identified at 14 weeks. The child is seen to breathe, just like us, and to increase the rate when subjected to stress, just like us. His legs and arms and even fingers become visible to us. In short, realtime ultrasound shows us not a vague "product of conception" but a human being, a child, in the womb.

The new film about which I began my remarks is a film about the child in the womb. It features realtime ultrasound images of a child not yet born. Its title is "The Silent Scream." The title is most apt, for the ultrasound images show an abortion being performed—they show a living human being, a 12-week child in the womb, being torn apart by an abortionist's instruments. "The Silent Scream" shows an abortion from the victim's vantage point.

Mr. President, I urge every American to view this film. And, while the transcript of the sound track is much less revealing than the film itself, the effect is still profound. Before placing the transcript in the RECORD, I wish to acknowledge the 1984 copyright owned by American Portrait Films of Anaheim, CA, and to thank that firm for permitting me to use the transcript in this fashion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the transcript of the film, "The Silent Scream."

My remarks from this point are those of Dr. Bernard Nathanson, former abortionist, now one of the world's leading pro-life advocates.

THE SILENT SCREAM

Now we can discern the chilling silent scream on the face of this child who is now facing imminent extinction.

My name is Bernard N. Nathanson. I'm a physician, practicing obstetrician and gynecologist. And I think I've had a passing experience in matters of abortion. Now, when I was a medical student, in 1949, we had no such science as fetology. We were taught that the unborn child, the fetus, was something in the uterus but it was really an article of faith as to whether or not it was a human being, and whether or not that human being had any unique personal qualities. But the whole story has changed since the 1970's. It was at that time that the science of fetology exploded in the medical community. It exploded by means of the introduction of great new technologies such as ultrasound imaging, electronic fetal heart monitoring, fetology, hysteroscopy, radio immuno chemistry and a host of other dazzling technologies which today constitute in fact the corpus of the science of fetology.

Realtime ultrasound, that is, imaging of the child in motion, has been available as a clinical tool since 1976. The room for the ultrasound examination consists of a conventional examining table as well as the ultrasound imaging device itself, a bulky appearing machine here.

Now the pregnant woman is positioned on the table for the examination. The abdomen is suitably draped. The head of the instrument is now placed over the uterus. This device in turn consists basically of a crystal which sends out pulsing high frequency sound waves and a transducer which collects the echoes of these waves. The echoes are then collated by a computer which in turn assembles them into a recognizable image of the living unborn child, and the child can be imaged by either a linear scan which is useful for later pregnancies or a sector scan which is more accurate for delineating the child in an early pregnancy such as this one. The image reconstructed from the echo pattern is capable of truly amazing resolution, and so discerning is this instrument that the tiny valves of the heart can be studied as they snap open and shut during the contractions of the heart.

Mothers and fathers for the first time have been afforded a view of their unborn child by this spectacular technology. And those technologies, those apparatuses and machines which we now use every day have convinced us that beyond question the unborn child is simply another human being, another member of the human community, indistinguishable in every way from any of us.

Now for the first time we have the technology to see abortion from the victim's vantage point. Ultrasound imaging has allowed us to see this, and so for the first time we are going to watch a child being torn apart, dismembered, disarticulated, crushed and destroyed by the unfeeling steel instruments of the abortionist.

What we are looking at here is a depiction of the development of this child in its prenatal stage of life, from virtually the very beginnings to the end of that stage. We have here the child at 4 weeks, at 8 weeks, at 12 weeks, at 16 weeks, at 18 weeks, at 20 weeks and at 28 weeks.

(At this point Mr. MATTINGLY assumed the Chair.)

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I would parenthetically interject here that in this part of the film, Dr. Nathanson is showing models of the human fetus at the various age levels. Now I return to the script.

As you can see there is no revolutionary or dramatic change in the form or in the substance of this person throughout this developmental stage. Now this little person, at 12 weeks, is a fully formed absolutely identifiable human being. He has had brain waves for at least 6 weeks, his heart has been functioning for perhaps 8 weeks, and all the rest of his human functions are indistinguishable from any of ours.

Now this book is "Williams Obstetrics," the 16th edition, written in 1980. It is a standard textbook used throughout every medical school in the United States. Preface of this book, published in 1980, cautions us as follows, "Happily we have entered an era in which the fetus can be rightfully considered and treated as our second patient. Who would have dreamed even a few years ago that we could serve the fetus as physician." Traditional medical ethics and precepts command us that we must not destroy our patients, that we are pledged to preserve their lives. Now let's see what abortion does to this, our second patient.

We have then the 12 week unborn child in the uterus, the uterus being this muscle surrounding the child. When the abortionist commences the procedure, he will first place this instrument, which is known as a speculum, into the woman's vagina and will then open it in order to visualize the cervix, the neck of the womb, here. Having visualized the cervix, the abortionist then takes this instrument which is known as a tenaculum, and fastens it securely through the speculum, onto the cervix in this manner, clamping shut the tenaculum and getting a firm grasp on the cervix.

The next instrument which is brought into play is called the sound. This instrument is then introduced into the uterus and it is then removed, the abortionist having ascertained exactly how deep and in fact how large the uterus is. And then this set of dilators, these metallic, curved instruments are used to effect the opening of the cervix in order to introduce finally the abortion instruments themselves. The abortionist first introduces the most slender of these instruments into the cervix to dilate the cervix, turns the instrument around to a slightly larger end, introduces that end, and then works his way through the various graduated, increasingly larger ends of this dilating instrument. He will then take the instrument known as the suction apparatus which is opened, it is in a sterile container prior to the actual use of the instrument, and then this will be inserted through the dilated cervix up into the uterus and will then puncture the sac surrounding the child allowing the amniotic fluid to escape.

The instrument then will come into direct contact with the child and with a pressure of approximately 55 or so millimeters of mercury applied to the end of this instrument as it is attached to a long, thick suction tubing at this end and to the abortion instrumentation, that is the machine at the other end. The suction tip will begin to tear the child apart. The pieces of the body are torn away, one by one, until finally all that remains are shards of the body and the head itself. The head will be too large to come through this instrument itself. This will necessitate the introduction of this instrument called a polyp forcep into the uterus through the already dilated cervix and the abortionist will then attempt to grasp the free floating head of the child in the uterus between the rings of this instrument. The head is then crushed, the contents of the head removed and finally the bones of the head, and the abortion is then effectively at an end.

We've seen what the 12 week child appears on the ultrasound screen. And we have also seen the mechanics, the actual steps of a 12 week abortion. Now for the first time we're going to see a film made with realtime ultrasound imaging of a 12 week abortion. Bear in mind that this is not an unusual instance, a late abortion. This is one of the 4,000 or so a day—done every day—in the United States.

This film was made at an abortion clinic. The physician who performed the abortion was a young man who was working in two different abortion clinics at the time. He had already done close to 10,000 abortions in his young life. When he was asked to attend the editing session to view the film, he was so appalled at what he had done that he left the room momentarily, came back to finish the editing, but never again did another abortion. The young woman who used the realtime ultrasound camera was a feminist and a strong pro-abortionist, but she too was so moved by what she saw at the editing session that she never again discussed the subject of abortion. Now let's turn to the actual film itself.

We are now looking at a sector scan of a realtime ultrasound imaging of a 12 week unborn child. The child is orientated in this direction. You are looking now at the head of the child here, the body of the child here, and this image is the child's hand approaching its mouth. Looking a little more closely at the child, we can discern the eye, or the orbit of the eye here, the nose of the child here, the mouth of the child here, and we can even look at the ventricle of the brain here. This is a fluid filled space in the brain. We see the body of the child here with the ribs in silhouette and the spine of the child at the back. This rather granular area of tissue at the top of the sector appears to be the placenta, or afterbirth, of the child. And we can begin to see down here the thighs, the lower extremities of the child coming off the body in this manner.

Now, let's move to the action. We now see the heart beating here in the child's chest. The heart is beating at a rate of approximately 140 a minute. And we can see the child moving rather serenely in the uterus. One can see it shifting position from time to time. It is still orientated in this manner, and the mouth is receiving the thumb of the child, the child again is moving quietly in its sanctuary. Now this shadow which we are seeing down at the bottom of the screen is the suction tip. We have colored the suction tip deliberately in order for you to discern it more clearly. But the abortionist has now dilated the cervix and is now inserting this suction tip which you can see moving back and forth across the screen. You will note, that as the suction tip which is now over here, moves toward the child, the child will rear away from it and undergo much more violent, much more agitated movements. The child is now moving in a much more purposeful manner. Its orientation changes from time to time, it is rearing again here. Now the suction tip has not actually touched the child, even though the child is extremely agitated, and moving in a violent manner.

The child has now moved back to the profile view and the suction tip is flashing once again across the screen. The child's mouth is now open and we will see that again on a freeze frame in a moment. But this suction tip, which you can see moving violently back and forth on the bottom of the screen is the lethal instrument which will ultimately tear apart and destroy the child. It is only after the fluid has been broken, the sac has been disrupted, that the tip will actually come against the child. But we can see the tip moving back and forth as the abortionist seeks the child's body.

Once again we see the child's mouth wide open in a silent scream in this particular freeze frame. This is the silent scream of a child threatened imminently with extinction. Now the heart rate has speeded up dramatically and the child's movements are violent at this point. It does sense agression in its sanctuary. It is moving away, one can see it moving to the left side of the uterus in an attempt, a pathetic attempt, to escape the inexorable instruments which the abortionist is using to extinguish its life.

Now the heart has again perceptibly speeded up. We can time this at approximately 200 beats per minute. And there is no question this child senses the most mortal danger imaginable. The membrane has now been punctured and the fluid has escaped. One no longer sees that large reservoir of fluid surrounding the child. But once the fluid has been drained off the suction tip has now been firmly clamped to the child's body, and the child is being pulled in a downward direction by the abortionist's suction tip with a negative pressure applied to it and the body is now being torn systematically from the head. The head of the child being in this direction here.

I am now outlining the child's head. The lower extremities have already been lost and we see the suction tip flashing from time to time in the screen as a typhoon like series of echoes, and the child is being tugged back and forth, as the suction tip has now been applied to the body and the abortionist is exerting his traction on the child in this manner. The child's head is still discernible here. The body is no longer discernible. It has now been torn from the head. What we see now is the head itself with what is called the midline echo of the head and the spicules or fragments of bone.

Now this head, which I am outlining here, on this 12 week child is simply too large to be pulled in one piece out of the uterus. The abortionist is going to have to employ this instrument, the polyp forcep in an attempt to grab the head. The abortionist will attempt to crush the head with this instrument, in this manner, and remove the head piecemeal from the uterus. The abortionist and the anethesiologist have a secret language between them which shields them from the grizzly reality of what is going on. The abortionist and the anethesiologist together refer to the head of this child which is now being sought, as number one. And the anethesiologist will inquire of the abortionist, "Is number one out yet? Are we finished?"

We now see, intermittently, the shanks, or blades, of this instrument appearing in the image here. The head tends to float freely in the uterus, here are the shanks or blades of the instrument coming across here, and the head is now being locked on by this polyp forcep and the head is being pulled down toward the cervix. Now all we see remaining are simply the shards, the broken fragments, the pieces of tissue which document that there was once a living defenseless tiny human being here.

In considering the impact of abortion on our society, let's look at some figures as to what has actually happened in the last 20 years. We have reliable figures indicating that in 1963, long before abortion became legalized by the infamous Roe versus Wade decision there were approximately 100,000 illegal abortions done annually in the United States, and very few legal abortions. In 1973, the first year in which that Roe versus Wade decision prevailed in this country, there were 750,000 abortions done and in 1983, the last year for which we have full and complete figures, there were 1.5 million abortions.

Now let's look at abortion as an industry. Last year, there were 1.5 million abortions done in this country, and the average cost of an abortion is about three to four hundred dollars per operation. This has created an industry in this country of about five to six hundred million dollars a year which would qualify to be on the Fortune 500 list of largest indsutries in the world. Ninety percent of these moneys are going into the pockets of physicians and the remainder into the pockets of the entrepreneurs who run the clinics.

Now we've had some recent investigations on the question of these clinics. Clinics are being franchised out like fast food services across the country. We know there are chains of them in California and through the Southwest, and even in the Southeast of the United States, and there is some evidence now, that increasingly these clinics are falling into the hands of the mob, of the crime syndicate here in the United States, and that this money, abortion money, is tainted, not only by the blood of the innocent victims of abortion, but by the dark hand of the crime syndicate in the United States.

When discussing abortion, we must also understand that the unborn child is not the only victim. Women themselves are victims just as the unborn children are. Women have not been told of the true nature of the unborn child, they have not been shown the true facts of what an abortion really is. Women, in increasing numbers, hundreds, thousands, even tens of thousands, have had their wombs perforated, infected, destroyed. Women have been sterilized and castrated, all as a result of an operation of which they have had no true knowledge. This film, and other films which may follow like it, must be made a part of the informed consent for any woman before she submits herself to a procedure of this sort.

I accuse the National Abortion Rights Action League, I accuse Planned Parenthood and all its co-conspirators in the abortion industry, of a consistent conspiracy of silence of keeping women in the dark with respect to the true nature of abortion. And I challenge all those purveyors of abortion to show this realtime video tape or one similar to it to all women before they consent to abortion.

You know, I think I know a little bit about abortion. I was one of the founders of NARAL in 1969. It's now known as the National Abortion Rights Action League. And for a period of two years I was the director of the largest abortion clinic in the Western world.

Since those times we have a science which is known as fetology, which has allowed us to study the human fetus, and all of those studies have concluded without exception that the unborn child is a human being, indistinguishable from any of us and an integral part of our human community. Now, the destruction of a living human being is no solution to what is basically a social problem. And I believe a resort to such violence is an admission of scientific and even worse, ethical impoverishment.

Somehow I refuse to believe that Americans who have put men on the moon, can't devise a better solution than the resort to violence. I think we should all here and now devote ourselves to an untiring effort to devise a better solution, a solution compounded equally of love, and compassion, and a decent regard for the overriding priority of human life. Let's all, for humanity's sake, here and now, stop the killing.

Mr. President, that concludes the transcript of the film "The Silent Scream."

Just as the abortionist and the anesthesiologist, according to Dr. Nathanson, have a secret language among them to disguise the true nature of what they are doing, so has our society created a secret language to shield each of us from the true reality of abortion. Too many think of abortion as a procedure to remove some amorphous tissue from the womb. In fact, when we look through the window on the womb with realtime ultrasound, we see that the unborn child is just that—a child and a human being.

I congratulate Dr. Nathanson, once one of the world's foremost advocates and practitioners of abortion, for the courage and the intellectual honesty to examine new evidence emerging since the 1973 decision, and for not only changing his mind but also for his actively seeking to redress this grievous wrong.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT TO BALANCE THE FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the first bill I introduced as a Senator in 1979, proposed a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget. Since that time, I and many of my colleagues have worked to formulate a consensus approach to curb Federal spending. In the 97th Congress, the Senate did pass a constitutional amendment to balance the Federal budget, but Congress as an entire body has yet to enact this vital legislation. Unfortunately, the House's failure to pass this amendment has only allowed the Federal deficit more time to increase at an alarming rate.

It is with a sense of frustration and urgency that I rise today to introduce Senate Joint Resolution 7, a Senate joint resolution, once again proposing a constitutional amendment to require the Federal Government to achieve and maintain a balanced budget.

I am convinced that Congress and the administration do not have the willpower to cut Government spending and balance the Federal budget without a constitutional amendment providing the discipline to do so. Maybe, as some argue, there is no need for a constitutional amendment, but the helter-skelter fiscal irresponsibility demonstrated within the past 25 years indicates otherwise.

For much of the history of this great Nation, a balanced Federal budget was part of our "unwritten constitution." In the first 100 years of this Republic, a balanced or surplus budget was the norm. There have been periods in our history when the exigencies of war or recession have necessitated operating the budget with a deficit—but initially there were always attempts to balance the lean years with the more prosperous ones. In the past two decades, however, Americans have seen higher and higher levels of deficits, taxes, and spending. Legislators tend to look at each program separately, not realizing that every dollar appropriated becomes part of a larger debt, a debt that is threatening the economic stability of our Nation.

In 1789, when the Constitution was adopted, Thomas Jefferson warned, "the public debt is the greatest of dangers to be feared by a republican government." Somewhere we lost sight of our forefathers' admonitions.

In 1963, 174 years after the adoption of our Constitution, the national debt was $300 billion. Today, as we begin the new year, 1985, the total Federal debt is $1,622,966,000,000. It has taken less than 25 years to more than triple our national debt. Currently, on an annual basis, we are operating at a defict of approximately $200 billion. If we continue our current course, it will take less than 5 years to double the existing debt.

As we look at the millions of Americans out of work, the high interest rates, and the increasing number of businesses forced to close their doors each year, we can no longer pretend that the economic ills will simply disappear. Recently, there have been periods of economic improvement, but if we stop to commend ourselves on the improvements we will fail to see that ultimately our present fiscal policy will lead to economic disaster. We can no longer pretend that mounting Federal deficits are a means of achieving future economic stability.

As the debt grows, the interest required in paying the principal consumes an ever increasing share of the Federal budget. In 1984, the interest alone on the national debt was $153 billion.

I cannot promise that the amendment I am offering today is a panacea for all the economic tragedies plaguing our country. But it is part of a pledge that I made to the people of Alabama when I came to the Senate—to bring Federal spending under control. It is a pledge I intend to honor.

Senate Joint Resolution 7 is very similar to legislation passed by the Senate in the 97th Congress, Senate Joint Resolution 58. The Senate, by a vote of 69 to 31 passed a measure on August 4, 1982, to balance the Federal budget. However, the legislation fell short of the required two-thirds vote in the House of Representatives.

In the 98th Congress, I sponsored and cosponsored legislation aimed at curbing the bias toward Federal spending. Senate Joint Resolution 5, introduced by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, was reported out of the Senate Judiciary Committee on September 13, 1984, by an overwhelming majority. Unfortunately, in the closing days of the 98th Congress, the Senate leadership was unable to bring the measure before the full Senate for a vote.

I am convinced that we can no longer use the simple rhetoric that we, as elected officials "will do our best to control Federal spending," our best is not good enough. Elected officials are constantly bombarded with requests from different organized lobbyist groups to help one program or another. Well, it is time we listened to a larger lobbying group—a group that while not as well organized is just as powerful and just as worthy of our attention as any other lobbying group—the American taxpayer. All over this country, individuals and States, are demanding a policy of fiscal restraint. Thirty-two of our States have petitioned Congress under a provision of article V of the Constitution, to call a constitutional convention to consider a balanced Federal budget. With the addition of two more States, Congress will have abdicated its responsibility to another body—something which has never occurred in the history of our Nation.

I believe that a convention would be unwise and certainly would be unnecessary of this body fulfills its own duties for providing the leadership in this area.

The legislation I am introducing today retains most of the language from Senate Joint Resolution 58, with some needed additions.

Section 1 of the proposed amendment requires a three-fifths vote of each House of Congress before the Federal Government can engage in deficit spending. This requirement establishes the norm that spending will not exceed receipts in any fiscal year. If the Government is going to spend money, it should and must have the money on hand to pay for the goods and services required. Under this section, Congress would be required to adopt an initial statement prior to each fiscal year, and this statement would be subject to the limitations established in this section.

I have included with section 1, language which was offered as an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 58 by Senator Randolph, Senator DENTON, and myself, allowing for an exception to the requirements of this article in the event of a threat to the national security of the United States. Section 3 of the proposed constitutional amendment authorizes Congress to waive any of the requirements imposed upon it by the amendment in a year in which a declaration of war is in effect. While this exception to the general requirements of the amendment is necessary, in my judgment, it does not go far enough for there may be times when our Nation is facing a threat to its national security short of war. Congress must be given the necessary flexibility to respond rapidly when such national emergencies arise. Indeed, there have been at least 183 instances in which American troops were deployed abroad without a formal declaration of war. The language I have added to section 1 would ensure the Congress' ability to respond to emergencies of this type in a timely way, and with the resources necessary to deal with that emergency.

The language of this exception has been drafted in a manner designed to safeguard against its misuse. First, a budget must be adopted by the Congress prior to each fiscal year. Second, if after the adoption of the budget, there arises a threat to the national security of the United States and is declared so by a joint resolution adopted by a majority vote of the whole number of each House of Congress, only then can Congress provide for additional outlays for the defense of the Nation in order to finance a response to the threat to national security.

Section 2 operates in conjunction with section 1 to ensure a balanced budget. Under this section, a spending ceiling is established, requiring Congress to adopt a level of receipts for each fiscal year that represents a proportion of the national economy no greater than that for the prior year. Therefore, revenues could not grow at a rate exceeding the growth of national income. Congress would not be entitled to spend at increased levels resulting from inflated tax revenues. This spending ceiling could only be overcome by a vote of a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress.

Section 3 authorizes Congress to waive the requirements imposed upon it by this amendment for a fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect.

Section 4 is a definitional section also retaining the language of Senate Joint Resolution 58. This section defines the terms "receipts" and "outlays" in the broadest possible sense so as to reflect the intent of this amendment to fully cover Government spending.

Section 5 states that there will be no further increases in the national debt except upon a three-fifths majority vote of each House of Congress. This language was offered as an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 58 by Senators ARMSTRONG and BOREN, and adopted to that bill. In my judgment, this section adds needed specificity to the constitutional amendment.

Section 5 also contains an exception in the case of a threat to our national security. If additional outlays are approved for the defense of the Nation under the threat to national security provisions of section 1, Congress may increase the amount of the public debt by a joint resolution approved by a majority vote of both Houses. However, the public debt may only be increased under this section to the extent of the additional outlays.

Finally, section 6 establishes the effective date of the amendment as the second fiscal year following its ratification.

Mr. President, we cannot afford to let another Congress or another year go by without resolving to do more than out best to balance the Federal budget. As elected officials both in the executive and legislative branch we must do what it takes to once again restore America to a sound financial basis.

Economic stability is not a partisan issue. Deficit spending cannot be blamed on one branch of Government or one political party. It has simply been a way of life that must not be corrected.

But in our attempts to balance the Federal Budget, we must remember that these problems did not arise overnight—nor can they be solved overnight. My legislation offers not a cure-all, but a blueprint for progress and stability.

Our forefathers not only cherished public credit, but protected it to ensure our future.

If we fail to act now, we not only risk economic disaster but we will be guilty of mortgaging the future of our children and grandchildren. We do not have the right to deprive future generations of the opportunity to do a better job than we have done.

I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this amendment, one of the most significant additions to the constitution since the bill of rights.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution that I send to the desk be printed in the RECORD.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution follows:

S.J. RES. 7

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution if ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after its submission to the States for ratification:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. Prior to each fiscal year, the Congress shall adopt a statement of receipts and outlays for that year in which total outlays are no greater than total receipts. The Congress may amend such statement provided revised outlays are no greater than revised receipts. Whenever three-fifths of the whole number of each House of the Congress shall deem it necessary, Congress in such statement may provide for a specific excess of outlays over receipts by a vote directed solely to that subject, except that if Congress, after the adoption of the statement of receipts and outlays, should find the Nation with an unforeseen and imminent threat to the national security and so declare by a joint resolution adopted by a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress, the Congress may then, by a majority vote of the whole number of each House of Congress, provide for such additional outlays for the defense of the Nation as are necessary to finance the military response to the emergency which would cause the total outlays set forth for such year in such statement to be greater than the receipts set forth for such year in such statement. The Congress and the President shall ensure that actual outlays do not exceed the outlays set forth in such statement.

"SEC. 2. Total receipts for any fiscal year set forth in the statement adopted pursuant to this article shall not increase by a rate greater than the rate of increase in national income in the last calendar year ending before such fiscal year, unless a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress shall have passed a bill directed solely to approving specific additional receipts and such bill has become law.

"SEC. 3. The Congress may waive the provisions of this article for any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect.

"SEC. 4. Total receipts shall include all receipts of the United States except those derived for borrowing and total outlays shall include all outlays of the United States except those for repayment of debt principal.

"SEC. 5. On and after the date this article takes effect, the amount of the Federal public debt limit as of such date shall become permanent and there shall be no increase in such amount unless three-fifths of the whole number of each House of Congress shall have passed a joint resolution providing for such increase and such joint resolution has become law; however, a joint resolution approved by a majority of the whole number of each House of Congress shall be sufficient to increase the amount of the Federal public debt limit if additional outlays are approved for the defense of the Nation under the threat to national security provisions of section 1, but only to the amount of such additional outlays.

"SEC. 6. This article shall take effect for the second fiscal year beginning after its ratification.".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I have two bills which I shall shortly offer to accomplish the purpose of putting these bills on the calendar.

Obviously, I will be using rule XIV.

S. 46—A BILL TO PROTECT THE LIVES OF UNBORN HUMAN BEINGS

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill, and ask that the first reading be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill to protect the lives of unborn human beings.

UNBORN CHILDREN'S CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, as a result of the Supreme Court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion, America is now witnessing a staggering loss of human life on a daily basis. It is estimated that as many as 4,000 unborn babies now lose their lives each day in the United States. This is utterly intolerable, and the new Congress should act to remedy it at the earliest possible point.

That is why I am today introducing the Unborn Children's Civil Rights Act of 1985 and starting the procedure to have it place directly on the Senate Business Calendar. Although the specifics of this bill may be new to my colleagues, the general purposes are the same as the antiabortion amendment I proposed to the debt limit bill in late summer of 1982. As many of my colleagues will recall, there was extensive debate on it at that time.

In essence, the bill seeks to accomplish four things. First, it puts Congress clearly on record as finding that Roe against Wade was erroneously decided and that the Constitution sanctions no right to abortion. Second, it amends title 42, United States Code, so that nothing therein could be construed to authorize abortion funding and that no appropriations of Congress can be used to pay for or support abortion. In this regard, it effects a permanent defunding of abortion, thereby relieving Congress of annual fights over abortion restrictions in appropriations bills.

Third, it stops certain indirect Federal support for abortion by providing protection against discrimination at federally funded institutions for individuals who object in conscience to abortion and by curtailing attorneys' fees in abortion-related cases. Fourth, it provides for appeals to the Supreme Court as of right if a Federal court declares State regulation of abortion unconstitutional. As a practical matter, this provision will assure Supreme Court reconsideration of the abortion issue in the future.

Mr. President, I know that today's opening session of the 99th Congress is scheduled to be a short one, and therefore I will not consume further time to explain the provisions of this bill. There will be ample opportunity for that later.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to protect the lives of unborn human beings.

S. 46

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Unborn Children's Civil Rights Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Congress finds that—

(a) scientific evidence demonstrates that abortion takes the life of an unborn child who is a living human being;

(b) a right to abortion is not secured by the Constitution;

(c) in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, and Doe v. Bolton, 410 U.S. 179, the Supreme Court erred in not recognizing the humanity of the unborn child and the compelling interest of the States to protect the life of each person before birth.

SEC. 3. At an appropriate place in title 42, United States Code, add the following:

"SEC. . Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to authorize the use of funds appropriated by Congress to take the life of an unborn child, and no such funds may be used for such purpose; provided, however, that such funds may be used for only those medical procedures required to prevent the death of either the pregnant woman or her unborn child so long as every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each.

"SEC. . Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to authorize the use of funds appropriated by Congress to promote, encourage, counsel for, refer for, pay for (including travel expenses), or do research on any procedure to take the life of an unborn child, and no such funds shall be used for such purposes; provided, however, that such funds may be used in connection with only those medical procedures required to prevent the death of either the pregnant woman or her unborn child so long as every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each.

"SEC. . Nothing contained in this title shall be construed to authorize the United States to enter into any contract for insurance that provides for payment or reimbursement for any procedure to take the life of an unborn child, and the United States shall not enter into any such contract; provided, however, that the United States may enter into contracts for payment or reimbursement for only those medical procedures required to prevent the death of either the pregnant woman or her unborn child so long as every reasonable effort is made to preserve the life of each.

"SEC. . No institution, organization, or other entity receiving Federal financial assistance shall (a) discriminate against any employee, applicant for employment, student, or applicant for admission as a student on the basis of such person's opposition to procedures to take the life of an unborn child or to counseling for or assisting in such procedures, or (b) require any employee or student to participate, directly or indirectly, in a health insurance program which includes procedures to take the life of a child or which provides counseling or referral for such procedures.

"SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, attorneys' fees shall not be allowable in any civil action involving, directly or indirectly, a law, ordinance, regulation, or rule prohibiting or restricting procedures to take the life of an unborn child."

SEC. 4. At the end of the first sentence of section 1252 of Title 28, United States Code, add the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the absence of the United States as a party, should any State or its subdivisions enforce or enact a law, ordinance, regulation, or rule prohibiting procedures to take the life of an unborn child, and such law, ordinance, regulation, or rule is declared unconstitutional in an interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order of any court of the United States, any party in such a case may appeal to the Supreme Court."

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for a second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I object on behalf of the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

S. 47—A BILL TO RESTORE THE RIGHT OF VOLUNTARY PRAYER IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND TO PROMOTE THE SEPARATION OF POWERS

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send a bill to the desk, and ask for first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 47) to restore the right of voluntary prayer in public schools and to promote the separation of powers.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOL PRAYER ACT OF 1985

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am today introducing my voluntary school prayer bill. This bill is the same as my bill from the 98th Congress which unfortunately was not considered by the Senate before adjournment sine die.

Mr. President, this bill is substantially similar to my legislation that twice passed the Senate in 1979, only to die in the House Judiciary Committee without ever reaching the House floor for a vote. It is also substantially similar to the amendment I offered to the debt limit bill in 1982 which received 53 votes in favor of it on a tabling motion before being set aside on a procedural motion.

Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to restore freedom to the States to allow voluntary prayer, Bible reading, and religious meetings in the public schools. Through a series of Supreme Court decisions, this freedom—elementary to the drafters of the Constitution—has been taken away from the States. It is time we in Congress did something to restore this fundamental American liberty.

Mr. President, my bill takes advantage of the congressional authority, given explicitly in article III of the Constitution, to regulate the general jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts and the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. The bill curtails such jurisdiction so that Federal courts no longer have the power to hear cases involving voluntary prayer, Bible reading, and religious meetings in the public schools.

The result is that such cases become exclusively a matter for the States to handle as they see fit. In effect, prayer would be a local option. This result is fully consistent with the original purpose of the establishment clause of the first amendment, which was to prohibit the establishment of a national church and to leave the remaining issues of church-state relations strictly with the States.

Mr. President, some of my friends have advocated that we adopt a constitutional amendment to correct the courts and restore the freedom to pray in the schools. That is one approach among many which the Constitution allows, and it is an approach that I have supported in the past and still favor today.

But, Mr. President, it is not the only way for Congress to correct erroneous Federal court rulings, nor in my opinion is it the best. The Constitution provides several other more direct ways for Congress to check abuses of the judicial branch, including control of jurisdiction, Senate confirmation of judicial appointments, specific congressional enforcement of constitutional provisions, and impeachment.

As is well known, the constitutional amendment process was intentionally set up to be difficult. The normal procedure is for a two-thirds vote in both Houses of Congress followed by ratification from three-quarters of the State legislatures. This procedure presents an extremely heavy burden to meet. The framers of the Constitution specifically wanted it this way to protect the constitutional text from constant change.

If, however, Congress relegates itself solely to the amendment process to correct judicial errors and usurpations, then the very difficulty of the amendment process would thus serve to subvert the Constitution rather than to preserve it.

In this school prayer matter, Mr. President, the problem has arisen, not because of the text of the Constitution, but because of the outright judicial distortions of that text. The text is fine, and the text never prohibited voluntary prayer in the public schools, as American history and experience before the Supreme Court's first prayer decision in 1962 so clearly attest. The text leaves the matter of school prayer, along with all matters of church-state relations, exclusively up to the States. Thus, although we could add a specific constitutional amendment on school prayer, we do not have to do so in order to restore this fundamental freedom.

The problem in the prayer matter, as in so many areas of constitutional law, is runaway Federal judges bent on imposing their own personal views of good public policy on the American public irrespective of the Constitution. More often than not in recent years, these views have been hostile to both the Constitution and longstanding American traditions. It is no understatement to say that American society has been radically altered in the recent past because of activist Federal judges.

We in Congress have tolerated this judicial usurpation long enough in many areas of the law, particularly in the area of school prayer, and it is time to put a stop to it.

Mr. President, I know that today's opening session of the 99th Congress is scheduled to be a short one, and therefore I will not take further time to explain the provisions of this bill. There will be ample opportunity for that later.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 47

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Voluntary School Prayer Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. (a) Chapter 81 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§———. Appellate jurisdiction; limitations

"(a) Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 1253, 1254, and 1257 of this chapter, the Supreme Court shall not have jurisdiction to review, by appeal, writ of certiorari, or otherwise, any case arising out of any State statute, ordinance, rule, regulation, practice, or any part thereof, or arising out of any Act interpreting, applying, enforcing, or effecting any State statute, ordinance, rule, regulation, or practice, which relates to voluntary prayer, Bible reading, or religious meetings in public schools or public buildings.

"(b) As used herein, 'voluntary' means an activity in which a student is not required to participate by school authorities.".

(b) The section analysis of chapter 81 of title 28 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"———. Appellate jurisdiction; limitations.".

SEC. 3. (a) Chapter 85 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§———. Limitations on jurisdiction

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the district courts shall not have jurisdiction of any case or question which the Supreme Court does not have jurisdiction to review under section 1259 of this title.".

(b) The section analysis at the beginning of chapter 85 of title 28 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"———. Limitations on jurisdiction.".

SEC. 4. The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment, except that such amendments shall not apply to any case which, on such date of enactment, was pending in any court of the United States.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the second reading.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, while I am not personally disagreeing with the intent of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, and intend to support such, I do object on behalf of the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, perhaps it ought to be stated for the record that the Senator from Alabama is simply following the procedures of the Senate. As I stated at the outset, my purpose only was to accord the bills being placed on the calendar, and that will happen on the next legislative day and that is the reason the Senator from Alabama objected. He objected procedurally, not because he is opposed to the bills but because that is the way things are done around here. In order to move something to the calendar, we have to go through the rule XIV procedure. But I do thank the Senator from Alabama.

S. 48—GUARANTEEING SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill for appropriate reference. I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read the first time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 48) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide for the issuance of a certificate of guaranteed tax-exempt benefits to each individual who is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit under such title or who is 62 years of age and entitled to any other benefit under such title, and for other purposes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the pending legislation, which will be referred, I am sure, to the Finance Committee, is intended to guarantee full Social Security benefits to everyone who has earned or will earn them, and to back that guarantee with the full faith and credit of the United States. The Social Security Guarantee Act of 1985, is almost identical to a part of a comprehensive package to strengthen the Social Security retirement system I first proposed in 1983. I reintroduced this section of that bill again this past September.

The Senate has passed 12 of the 25 sections of my comprehensive package. The bill I am now introducing is one of the 13 sections not adopted, but it is the most important part of my Social Security plan.

Mr. President, constant efforts are being made to strengthen our Social Security system. Changes have been made, but the task is not finished by any means. Now, in the 99th Congress, we have the opportunity to go a step further and to guarantee for all our citizens a system on which they can depend for their retirement years.

We must act now. In 1935 16 workers supported each Social Security recipient. Now three workers support each recipient. During the next two decades the system will have to borrow more than $2 trillion. Fewer than two workers will be supporting each retired person. The system's former Chief Accountant, A. Haeworth Robertson, warns that in order to honor obligations to today's workers, workers in the future may be required to pay 40 percent of their income in payroll taxes. Employee taxes would go up to $5,000 for the worker earning $20,000. As the number of recipients increase and the number of contributors decrease, the burden of the system will be borne by fewer and fewer workers. With each passing day, the Social Security system continues to strangle economically the American worker rather than to ensure a secure economic future.

Today Social Security beneficiaries cannot count on getting full benefits because the Supreme Court ruled in 1960 (Fleming v. Nestor, 363 U.S. 603) that the Federal Government can renege on Social Security benefits at any time. It is not surprising then, that most Americans, young and old, are pessimistic about ever collecting a dime from Social Security. Older Americans despair because they fear losing an important source of income. Young Americans do not believe they will receive the benefits they are paying for now.

Mr. President, I will not sit back and watch the Social Security system cripple the American worker and threaten the economic security of the Social Security recipient. For too long, the Social Security system has been used as a political football to scare the elderly and to create pessimism among our young. We must end this political rhetoric and present to the American people an honest plan to secure retirement funds for ourselves and for our children.

The bill I am introducing will help restore confidence in the system. Under my plan, Mr. President, every person who pays into Social Security would receive, upon retirement, a certificate made out in their name. It would be an obligation backed by the "full faith and credit of the United States." This bond would guarantee Social Security benefits. In addition, each recipient would have a legal remedy to sue the Government in Federal court for the amount guaranteed. Never again would a retired American fear their Social Security benefits could be cut by an act of Congress, the courts, or any other agency of the Government. No one could ever—let me emphasize, ever—be denied the credits they have earned or will earn under the Government system.

Mr. President, citizens of North Carolina, as well as other parts of this great country, know of my strong commitment to a reliable retirement system. The bill I am introducing today underscores that commitment.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 48

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) title II of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"CERTIFICATE OF GUARANTEED TAX-EXEMPT BENEFITS

"SEC. 234. (a) The Secretary shall issue to each individual who is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit, or who has attained age 62 and is entitled to any other benefit under this title, a certificate or guaranteed tax-exempt benefits. Such certificate shall be issued at the time such individual first becomes entitled to a benefit under this title, or attains age 62, whichever is later.

"(b) The certificate issued pursuant to this section shall pledge the full faith and credit of the United States to guarantee that benefits shall be paid to such individual (and to other individuals on the basis of such individual's wages and self-employment income) under the provisions of this title as in effect on the date of issuance of such certificate (or as such benefits may be increased thereafter by Congress or under any automatic cost-of-living adjustment), and that such benefits shall not be subject to the tax on income under subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(c) The certificate issued under this section shall also contain—

"(1) a statement of the total amount of the taxes paid by such individual and his employers under sections 3101(a), 3111(a), and 1401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to such individual's wages and self-employment income; and

(2) a statement that the certificate is nonnegotiable and nontransferrable.

"(d)(1) Any individual who is entitled to an old-age insurance benefit under this title, or who has attained age 62 and is entitled to any other benefit under this title, may bring a claim against the Secretary in the appropriate court of the United States for payment of any benefit guaranteed by this section for which payment is due (plus interest for the period for which payment of such benefit has been withheld, at a rate equal to the rate specified in section 201(d)).

"(2) In any action brought under this section in which the plaintiff substantially prevails, the court may assess against the United States reasonable attorney fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred.

"(3) The remedies provided for in this section shall be in addition to and not in lieu of any other remedies provided by law.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to all individuals entitled to a monthly benefit under title II of the Social Security Act on or after the date of the enactment of this Act. The Secretary shall issue such certificates to those individuals who have attained age 62 and are entitled to such benefits on the date of the enactment of this Act within six months after such date of enactment, in the same manner as if they had first become entitled to an old-age insurance benefit on such date of enactment.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for his indulgence. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN, for objecting to the second reading of the two bills which, just a few minutes ago, were introduced by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Mr. HELMS.

As was explained by Mr. HELMS, the distinguished Senator from Alabama was merely performing a function under rule XIV of the Standing Rules of the Senate which will provide that the bills eventually will go on the calendar. By virtue of the fact that the distinguished Senator from Alabama did object, I think that the RECORD should show again that his objection does not necessarily mean that he opposes the bills or that he supports them. So nothing should be read into the fact that he objected to them. If I had been on the floor, I would have done so. I appreciated the action by the distinguished Senator from Alabama.

A TIME TO SPEAK OUT

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, Ecclesiastes is one of the most beautiful books of the Old Testament. It is also one of the wisest. And, of all the wise and beautiful passages in Ecclesiastes, none is more compelling than Chapter 3. While every verse in Chapter 3 contains counsel of rare value, one verse in particular commends itself to our attention today. It follows those beautiful opening lines—"To every thing there is a season and a time to every purpose under the heaven"—and speaks of there being "a time to keep silence, and a time to speak . . ."

Mr. President, today in the United States, and more particularly in this area and in this body, it is a time to speak—a time to speak out against the vicious wave of terrorist attacks that has been launched recently against abortion facilities throughout the country. We have a special responsibility in this regard as lawmakers and as either full- or part-time residents of an area that has witnessed eight such attacks in less than 3 years, four of these in the past 3 months. Nationwide, 24 abortion facilities were attacked last year.

Mr. President, we are not dealing here with the question of how one feels about abortion. No one in this Chamber, I am sure, is entirely comfortable with the idea of abortion. I certainly am not. But abortion is legal and constitutionally protected and has been adjudged to be by the Supreme Court. The issue is not abortion—the issue is terrorism.

So far, very few public figures have condemned these terrorist attacks, although many have been outspoken about terrorism encountered abroad. We have heard it said that these attacks on abortion clinics are not terrorist because they are not politically motivated. But I do not think any would argue the thesis that the various Muslim extremist groups are any less terrorist because they are activated by religious rather than political motives. It is not the motive, but the method, that makes a terrorist.

Just as we cannot condone terrorism abroad, we cannot condone it at home. Honorable men and women must speak out now. Silence leads nowhere but to the brink of disaster.

As we consider our duty in this area that is so charged emotionally for all of us, it is useful to remember the very poignant reflections of Pastor Martin Niemoller, who survived the scourge of Nazism in Germany to tell of his personal experience. He said:

> When they came for the Communists, I didn't speak out because I wasn't a Communist. When they came for the Jews, I didn't speak out because I wasn't a Jew. When they came for the Catholics, I didn't speak out because I wasn't a Catholic. Finally, when they came for me, there was no one left to speak out.

Clearly, silence can sometimes be as resonant as speech. Our silence now could echo down the corridors of time—corridors that would surely be strewn with the pillars of the wrecked edifice of a republic founded on the rule of law.

For the sake of that republic, we must take alarm at the slightest feint in the direction of our laws and our liberties. Let us not make Pastor Niemoller's fatal mistake. Let us speak out now against this violence and let us continue to speak until there is no corner of this land hospitable to those who defy the law.

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON 28—UNIVERSITY OF OKLAHOMA 17

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, few events will be remembered longer than those which transpired on January 1, 1985. Facing formidable opponents from the great University of Oklahoma, up against oddsmakers and pollsters, and in spite of the notorious "horse and buggy scheme" led by Booner and Sooner, representatives of the University of Washington produced victory and found immortal glory on the gridiron of the Orange Bowl.

More dramatic or deserved victories have scarcely been achieved. Led by the unsurpassed coaching of Don James and his staff, the Huskies combined a brilliant game plan with disciplined, inspired execution. They moved the football and scored often and especially when they had to in the fourth quarter of the game. They rushed for nearly 200 yards against the best defense against the rush in college football. The Husky defense, clearly also one of the stingiest in the country, rose to the occasion as it had throughout the fall by forcing crucial turnovers and stopping the Sooner attack. All this against a team observers around the country felt might be the best in the land.

Quarterbacks Sicuro and Millen, running backs Robinson and Fenney, receivers Greene and Pattison, and defensemen Meamber, Rodgers, and the incomparable Holmes, exemplied the best that football can produce in individual and team accomplishment. To be sure, it is in the realm of team effort that the University of Washington performed most admirably, and for which this university's teams are becoming famous around the nation. In the hearts of Husky fans everywhere, there is no doubt about who was No. 1 on New Year's Day!

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

(Mr. GORTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

A TEAM EFFORT

Mr. EVANS. Mr. President, I rise to join with my senior colleague from Washington in commenting on the events of January 1 in Miami.

I had the privilege of being in the Orange Bowl, of watching the University of Washington Huskies as they won a hard-fought, splendid game against a team which I truly believed up to that time was No. 1 in the Nation.

But perhaps as important or more important than all of the comments of my senior colleague is the fact that the pride we feel in the University of Washington is not just in the record of the team but the way in which the team does its job.

Coach James has on several occasions been named the "Coach of the Year" nationally, including this year. He richly deserves that honor, for he typifies the very best of college coaching. He is a person who is looked up to universally by his team members, by the representatives of the university, and by the entire State which he serves.

So, it is not only splendid to see the record of the University of Washington but to honor the way in which that record was compiled and the outstanding representatives each member of that team make not only for the university but as examples to the young men who will come after them in years following.

REPORT ON COMMUNICATION WITH THE PRESIDENT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish to indicate that the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD, and I have talked with the President, Ronald Reagan. He expressed his best wishes to the two of us and all of our colleagues and indicated he was happy to see us back in Washington. I hope that continues throughout the year and next year. He expressed his hopes that we could come to grips with some of the problems. He indicated this was a unique time and an opportunity in a sense to deal with some of the very serious problems.

I mentioned to the President we were certainly going to be cooperative wherever we can be and that we will be working together, myself and Senator BYRD with our colleagues on both sides of the aisle, where we can, to work with the administration and with the President.

That, in essence, I think sums up my part of the conversation. I am happy to yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I can add nothing to what the distinguished majority leader has said, inasmuch as his statement is an accurate statement with reference to our conversation.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

S. 49—PROTECTING FIREARM OWNERS' CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS, CIVIL LIBERTIES, AND RIGHTS TO PRIVACY

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a bill to the desk on behalf of Senator MCCLURE, Senator HATCH, Senator SYMMS, Senator THURMOND, and Senator DENTON and ask for first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 49) to protect firearm owners' constitutional rights, civil liberties, and rights to privacy.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be read a second time.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I object. I do so not as any indication that I might be opposed to the substance of the bill—I may very well be supportive of it. But, in order to fulfill the functions required under rule XIV and get the bill on the calendar, which is what the authors of the bill hope to do, I have objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MCCLURE. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation which would correct some of the more egregious abuses in the 1968 Gun Control Act. With one minor exception—made necessary to accommodate legislative changes made by the 98th Congress—the bill is identical to an amendment on last year's continuing resolution. That amendment was supported on two separate occasions by Senate votes of 63-31 and 77-20, respectively. The single change would shift the responsibility for storing and maintaining out-of-business and multiple sales records from the General Services Administrator to the National Archivist. It was originally the intent of the administration and the Senate that the Archives, which was previously a part of the General Services Administration, be the repository for these records. However, because the 98th Congress severed the Archives from the GAO, it is now necessary to specify this in statutory language.

My staff and I have discussed this matter with the chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and his staff; and it is our opinion that, because this bill is very similar to a proposal approved unanimously by the Senate Judiciary Committee last year, it would be appropriate to bring it directly onto the Senate calendar under rule XIV.

When Congress enacted the Gun Control Act of 1968, it intended to curb violent firearms crime by controlling the sale, transportation, and possession of guns. Did this approach work? No; it did not. Extensive hearings and study of the actual enforcement of this law clearly show that the ones who bear the brunt of this law are not necessarily the most dangerous criminals. The ones who have been harassed by the enforcement of this act are often innocent men and women who have bungled their paperwork. Punishment has been swift and severe. While genuine criminals are all too often let free to roam the streets, these law-abiding gun owners and dealers have had their property unconstitutionally seized and held and their businesses and lives ruined. People who have done their best to comply with the law are forced to bear the stigma of Federal felons.

We have a duty to provide for the legal protection of the citizens of this country, and when the force of the law is directed at the innocent, and does nothing to the guilty, we are neglecting that duty.

My colleagues on the Judiciary Committee have worked long and hard, as I have, to hammer out changes in the law that will prevent the abuses we have seen. This law touches on many people, on many branches of the Government. We have labored to balance the need for effective law enforcement with the right of honest citizens to constitutional protections. We have all spent time ironing out our differences on this complicated and emotionally charged issue.

At length, we arrived at a compromise that solved the major problems. I have met with representatives from different groups in the firearms rights community, and I believe that we now have a piece of legislation that everyone can honestly support. The bill was unanimously voted out of committee.

The Firearm Owners Protection Act is designed to correct demonstrated abuses in present law. It would make the following reforms:

Define "engaging in the business" to clarify who needs a Federal firearms license;

Liberalize the interstate sale of firearms when these sales are legal in both State of sale, and State of purchase;

Mandate an element of criminal intention for prosecution and conviction of Federal firearms law violations;

Clarify procedures for dealer sales of firearms from his private collection;

Permit inspection of dealer's records for reasonable cause;

Require mandatory penalties for the use of a firearm during a Federal crime;

Limit seizure of firearms;

Provide for the return of seized firearms, and grant attorney's fees in spiteful or frivolous suits;

Allow the interstate transportation of unloaded, inaccessible firearms.

The bill would not do the following:

Allow "mail order" sales of firearms;

Allow unlicensed pawn shop gun sales;

Restrict legitimate inspection of records.

In short, this bill has been painstakingly crafted to focus law enforcement on the kinds of Federal firearms law violations most likely to contribute to violent firearms crime. Enactment of this amendment into law will insure that the intent of Congress is carried out.

We must compel the enforcing agency to stop harassing honest people and to direct their efforts at the violent criminals who give all gun owners a bad name. This can only be done by changing present Federal firearms law. We must change that law.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 49

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress finds that the rights of citizens to keep and bear arms under the second amendment to the United States Constitution; their rights to security against illegal and unreasonable searches and seizures under the fourth amendment; their protections against uncompensated taking of property, double jeopardy, and assurance of due process of law under the fifth amendment; and their rights against unconstitutional exercise of authority under the ninth and tenth amendments; require additional legislation to correct existing firearms statutes and enforcement policies. The Congress further finds that additional legislation is required to reaffirm its intent, as expressed in section 101 of title I of the Gun Control Act of 1968, that "it is not the purpose of this title to place any undue or unnecessary Federal restrictions or burdens on law-abiding citizens with respect to the acquisition, possession, or use of firearms appropriate to the purpose of hunting, trapshooting, target shooting, personal protection, or any other lawful activity, . . ." or "to discourage or eliminate the private ownership or use of firearms by law-abiding citizens for lawful purposes."

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 18, UNITED STATES CODE (18 U.S.C. 921-928)

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 921

SEC. 101. Section 921 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(10) by deleting the words "manufacture of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "business of manufacturing";

(2) in subsection (a)(11)(A) by deleting the words "or ammunition";

(3) in subsection (a)(12) by deleting the words "or ammunition";

(4) in subsection (a)(13) by deleting the words "or ammunition";

(5) by amending subsection (a)(20) to read as follows:

"(20) The term 'crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year' shall not include (A) any Federal or State offenses pertaining to antitrust violations, unfair trade practices, restraints of trade, or other similar offenses relating to the regulation of business practices, or (B) any State offense classified by the laws of the State as a misdemeanor and punishable by a term of imprisonment of two years or less: Provided, however, That what constitutes a conviction shall be determined in accordance with the law of the jurisdiction in which the proceedings were held: Provided further, That any conviction which has been expunged, or set aside or for which a person has been pardoned or has had his or her civil rights restored shall not be considered a conviction under the provisions of this Act, unless such pardon, expungement, or restoration of civil rights expressly provides that the person may not ship, transport, possess, or receive firearms."; and

(6) in subsection (a) by inserting new paragraphs (21) and (22) after paragraph (20), to read as follows: "(21) The term 'engaged in the business' means—

"(A) As applied to a manufacturer of firearms, a person who devotes time, attention, and labor to manufacturing firearms as a regular course of trade or business with the principal objective of livelihood and profit through the sale or distribution of the firearms manufactured.

"(B) As applied to a manufacturer of ammunition, a person who devotes time, attention, and labor to manufacturing ammunition as a regular course of trade or business with the principal objective of livelihood and profit through the sale or distribution of the ammunition manufactured.

"(C) As applied to a dealer in firearms, as defined in section 921(a)(11)(A), a person who devotes time, attention, and labor to dealing in firearms as a regular course of trade or business with the principal objective of livelihood and profit through the repetitive purchase and resale of firearms. The term shall not include a person who makes occasional sales, exchanges, or purchases of firearms for the enhancement of a personal collection or hobby, or who sells all or part of his personal collection of firearms.

"(D) As applied to a dealer in firearms, as defined in section 921(a)(11)(B), a person who devotes time, attention, and labor to engaging in such activity as a regular course of trade or business with the principal objective of livelihood and profit. The term shall not include a person who makes occasional repairs of firearms or who occasionally fits special barrels, stocks, or trigger mechanisms to firearms.

"(E) As applied to an importer of firearms, a person who devotes time, attention, and labor to importing firearms as a regular course of trade or business with the principal objective of livelihood and profit through the sale or distribution of the firearms imported.

"(F) As applied to an importer of ammunition, a person who devotes time, attention, and labor to importing ammunition as a regular course of trade or business with the principal objective of livelihood and profit through the sale or distribution of the ammunition imported.

"(22) The term 'with the principal objective of livelihood and profit' means that the intent underlying the sale or disposition of firearms is predominantly one of obtaining livelihood and pecuniary gain, as opposed to other intents, such as improving or liquidating a personal firearms collection.

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 922

SEC. 102. Section 922 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (a)(1) to read as follows:

"(1) for any person (A) except a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer to engage in the business of importing, manufacturing, or dealing in firearms, or in the course of such business to ship, transport, or receive any firearm in interstate or foreign commerce; and (B) except a licensed importer or licensed manufacturer to engage in the business of importing or manufacturing ammunition, or in the course of such business, to ship, transport, or receive any ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce";

(2) in subsection (a)(2)—

(A) By deleting the words "or ammunition"; and

(B) by deleting the words "or licensed dealer for the sole purpose of repair or customizing," and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "licensed dealer, or licensed collector;";

(3) by amending clause (B) of subsection (a)(3) to read as follows: "(B) shall not apply to the transportation or receipt of a firearm obtained in conformity with the provisions of subsection (b)(3) of this section,";

(4) in subsection (b)—

(A) by deleting in paragraph (2) "or ammunition" each place it appears;

(B) by deleting clause (A) in paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(A) shall not apply to the sale or delivery of any firearm to a resident of a State other than a State in which the licensee's place of business is located if the sale, delivery and receipt fully comply with the legal conditions of sale in both such States: Provided, however, That any licensed manufacturer, importer or dealer shall be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have had actual knowledge of the State laws and published ordinances of both States,";

(C) by inserting "and" before "(B)" in paragraph (3);

(D) by striking out ", and" in clause (B) of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon;

(E) by repealing clause (C) of paragraph (3); and

(F) by deleting from paragraph (5) "or ammunition except .22 rimfire ammunition";

(5) in subsection (d)—

(A) by deleting "licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector" the first time they appear and inserting in lieu thereof "person";

(B) by deleting in paragraph (3) the word "or" following the semicolon;

(C) by replacing the period in paragraph (4) with a semicolon; and

(D) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following:

"(5) who, being an alien, is illegally or unlawful in the United States;

"(6) who has been discharged from the Armed Forces under dishonorable conditions; or

"(7) who, having been a citizen of the United States, has renounced his citizenship.";

(6) in subsection (g)—

(A) by deleting the words "is under indictment for, or who" in paragraph (1);

(B) by deleting in paragraph (3) the word "or" following the semicolon;

(C) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following:

"(5) who, being an alien, is illegally or unlawfully in the United States;

"(6) who has been discharged from the Armed Forces under dishonorable conditions; or

"(7) who, having been a citizen of the United States, has renounced his citizenship;"; and

(D) by deleting the words "to ship or transport any firearm or ammunition in interstate or foreign commerce" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.";

(7) in subsection (h)—

(A) by inserting after the word "any" and before the word "person" the words "individual who to his knowledge and while being employed by any";

(B) by deleting the words "is under indictment for, or who" in paragraph (1);

(C) by deleting in paragraph (3) the word "or" following the semicolon;

(D) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following:

"(5) who, being an alien, is illegally or unlawful in the United States;

"(6) who has been discharged from the Armed Forces under dishonorable conditions; or

"(7) who having been a citizen of the United States, has renounced his citizenship;"; and

(E) by deleting the words "to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "in the course of such employment to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting commerce, any firearm or ammunition; or to receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce."; and

(8) by inserting after subsection (m) a new subsection to read as follows:

"(n) It shall be unlawful for any person who is under indictment for a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year to ship or transport in interstate or foreign commerce any firearm or ammunition or receive any firearm or ammunition which has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce.".

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 923

SEC. 103. Section 923 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1)(A) in subsection (a)—

(i) by deleting the words "No person shall engage in business as a firearms or ammunition importer, manufacturer, or dealer until he has filed an application with, and received a license to do so from the Secretary." and inserting in lieu thereof the words "No person shall engage in the business of importing, manufacturing, or dealing in firearms, or importing or manufacturing ammunition, until he has filed an application with and received a license to do so from the Secretary."; and

(ii) by deleting the words "and contain such information", and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and contain only that information necessary to determine eligibility for licensing.";

(B) in subsection (a)(3)(B) by deleting the words "or ammunition for firearms other than destructive devices";

(2) in subsection (b) by striking out "and contain such information", and inserting in lieu thereof "and contain only that information necessary to determine eligibility for licensing";

(3) in subsection (c) by adding at the end thereof the following: "Provided, however, That nothing in this chapter shall be construed to prohibit a licensed manufacturer, importer, or dealer from maintaining and disposing of a personal collection of firearms, subject only to such restrictions as apply in this chapter to dispositions by a person other than a licensed manufacturer, importer, or dealer: Provided further, That if any firearm is so disposed of by a licensee within one year of its transfer from his business inventory into his personal collection or if such disposition or any acquisition is made for the purpose of willfully evading the restrictions placed upon licensees by this chapter, then such firearm shall be deemed part of his business inventory.";

(4) in subsection (e) by inserting before the word "Violated" the word "willfully";

(5) in subsection (f)—

(A) by inserting the words "de novo" before the word "judicial" in paragraph (3);

(B) by adding the words ", whether or not such evidence was considered at the hearing held under paragraph (2)." after the words "to the proceeding" in paragraph (3); and

(C) by inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) If criminal proceedings are instituted against a licensee alleging violations of this chapter or regulations promulgated thereunder, and the licensee is acquitted of such charges, or such proceedings are terminated, other than upon motion of the Government prior to trial upon such charges, the Secretary shall be absolutely barred from denying or revoking any license granted under the provisions of this chapter where such denial or revocation is based in whole or in part on the facts which form the basis of such criminal charges. No proceedings for the revocation of a license shall be instituted by the Secretary more than one year after the filing of the indictment or information.";

(6) by amending subsection (g) to read as follows:

"(g)(1) Each licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, and licensed dealer, shall maintain such records of importation, production, shipment, receipt, sale, or other disposition, of firearms at his place of business for such period, and in such form, as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. Such importers, manufacturers and dealers shall not be required to submit to the Secretary reports and information with respect to such records and the contents thereof, except as explicitly required by the Act entitled 'An to protect firearms owners' constitutional rights, civil liberties and rights to privacy'. The Secretary, when he has reasonable cause to believe a violation of this law has occurred, and that evidence thereof may be found on such premises may, upon demonstrating such cause before a Federal magistrate, and securing from him a warrant authorizing entry, enter during business hours the premises (including places of storage) of any licensed firearms importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, licensed collector or any licensed importer or manufacturer of ammunition, for the purposes of inspecting or examining (1) any records or documents required to be kept by such licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector under the provisions of this chapter or regulations issued under this chapter, and (2) any firearms or ammunition kept or stored by such licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, licensed dealer, or licensed collector, at such premises. The Secretary may inspect the inventory and records of a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer without such cause or warrant, (A) for a reasonable inquiry during the course of a criminal investigation of a person or persons other than the licensee; or (B) no more than once in any twelve consecutive months, upon reasonable notice, but no criminal charges shall be brought against the licensee based upon such inspection except for willful violations of the record-keeping requirements of this chapter or sales or other dispositions of firearms to prohibited persons; or (C) when such inspections or inquires may be required for determining the disposition of one or more particular firearms in the course of a bona fide criminal investigation. The Secretary may inspect the inventory and records of a licensed collector without such reasonable cause or warrant (A) no more than once in any twelve consecutive month period, upon reasonable notice, but no criminal charges shall be brought against such licensee based upon such inspection except for willful violations of the recordkeeping requirements of this chapter or sales or other dispositions of firearms to prohibited persons; or (B) when such inspections or inquiries may be required for determining the disposition of one or more particular firearms in the course of a bona fide criminal investigation. At the election of a licensed collector, the annual inspection of records and inventory permitted under this paragraph shall be performed at the office of the Secretary designated for such inspections which is located in closest proximity to the premises where the inventory and records of such licensed collector are maintained. Such procedure shall not be construed as authorizing the Secretary to seize any records or other documents other than those records or documents constituting material evidence of a violation of law. If the Secretary seizes such records or documents, copies shall be provided the licensee within a reasonable time. The Secretary may make available to any Federal, State, or local law enforcement agency any information which he may obtain by reason of the provisions of this chapter with respect to the identification of persons prohibited from purchasing or receiving firearms or ammunition who have purchased or received firearms or ammunition, together with a description of such firearms or ammunition and he may provide information to the extent such information may be contained in the records required to be maintained by the provisions of this chapter, when so requested by any Federal, State, or local law enforcement agency.

"(2) Each licensed collector shall maintain in a bound volume the nature of which the Secretary may by regulations prescribe, records of the receipt, sale, or other disposition, of firearm. Such records shall include the name and addresses of a firearm. Such collector shall not be required to submit of a firearms. Such collector shall not be required to submit to the Secretary reports and information with respect to such records and the contents thereof, except as explicitly required by the Act entitled 'An Act to protect firearms owners' constitutional rights, civil liberties and rights to privacy'.

"(3)(A) Within thirty days of the absolute discontinuance of the business of a licensee, any records maintained by such licensee under this chapter shall be delivered to the joint custody of the Archivist of the United States and the Secretary to be stored in a records center maintained and operated by the Archivist, unless state law or local ordinance requires delivery to another authority, in which event the Archivist and the Secretary may arrange for delivery to such authority.

"(B) The Secretary shall have access to records stored under this paragraph solely for the purposes of tracing firearms, organizing and preserving such records, and certifying to facts on the basis of such records in any court or any administrative proceeding of the United States or of any state. The Secretary may remove such records from the record center maintained by the Archivist only in connection with proceedings in any court or any administrative proceeding of the United States or of any state.

"(C) the Archivist may promulgate regulations governing the storage, processing and servicing of records stored under this paragraph: Provided, That no such regulations may restrict the authority of the Secretary under this paragraph to have access to or to remove such records.

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Archivist shall dispose of records kept by licensed dealers and licensed collectors, and records relating to the disposition of firearms kept by manufacturers and importers, and stored under this paragrpah twenty years after such records are received by the Archivist and the Secretary.

"(4)(A) each licensee shall, when required by letter issued by the Secretary, and until notified to the contrary in writing by the Secretary, submit on a form specified by the Secretary, for the periods and at the times specified in such letter, all record information required by this chapter or such lesser record information as the Secretary in his letter may specify.

"(B) The Secretary may authorize the information to be submitted in a manner other than that prescribed in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph when it is shown by a licensee that an alternate method of reporting is reasonably necessary and will not unduly hinder the effective administration of this chapter.

"(C) No warrant shall issue nor shall any criminal charges be brought against the licensee based solely upon information provided pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph.

"(5)(A) Each licensee shall prepare a report of multiple sales or other disposition whenever the licensee sells or otherwise disposes of, at one time or during any five consecutive business days, two or more pistols, or revolvers, or any combination of pistols and revolvers totaling two or more, to an unlicensed person. The report shall be prepared on a form specified by the Secretary and forwarded to the office specified thereon not later than the close of business on the day that the multiple sale or other disposition occurs.

"(B) Ten years after receiving any report submitted under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Secretary shall deliver such report to the joint custody of the Archivist of the United States and the Secretary to be stored in a records center maintained and operated by the Archivist, subject to the provisions of sections 923(g)(3) (B) and (C) of this title. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Archivist shall dispose of records stored under this subparagraph ten years after such records are received by the Archivist and the Secretary.

"(C) No record, form, or information delivered, submitted, or forwarded pursuant to this paragraph or paragraph (3) or (4) of this subsection may be kept by the Secretary at a centralized location, nor shall it be entered into a computer for storage or retrieval."; and

(7) by amending subsection (j) to read as follows:

"(j) A licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, conduct business temporarily at a location other than the location specified on the license if such other location is in the State which is specified on the license. Records of receipt and disposition of firearms transactions conducted at such temporary location shall include the location of the sale or other disposition and shall be entered in the permanent records of the licensee and retained on the location specified on the license. Nothing in this subsection shall authorize any licensee to conduct business in or from any motorized or towed vehicle. Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, a separate fee shall not be required of a licensee with respect to business conducted under this subsection. Except for records directly related to receipts, sales, or other dispositions of firearms made at the temporary premises within the period of time the licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer conducted the business of which such receipts, sales, or other dispositions were a part, nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to inspect or examine the inventory or records of a licensed importer, licensed manufacturer, or licensed dealer at any location other than the location specified on the license. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to diminish in any manner any right to display, sell or otherwise dispose of firearms or ammunition which is in effect prior to the date of enactment of the Act entitled 'An Act to protect firearms owners' constitutional rights, civil liberties and rights to privacy'.".

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 924

SEC. 104. Section 924 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending subsection (a) to read as follows:

"(a) Whoever—

"(1) knowingly makes any false statement or representation with respect to the information required by the provisions of this chapter to be kept in the records of a person licensed under this chapter, or in applying for any license or exemption or relief from disability under the provisions of this chapter;

"(2) knowingly violates subsections (a)(4), (a)(6), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), or (k) of section 922;

"(3) knowingly imports or brings into the United States or any possession thereof any firearm or ammunition in violation of section 922(l);

"(4) knowingly violates any provisions of this section; or

"(5) willfully violates any other provision of this chapter, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both, and shall become eligible for parole as the Board of Parole shall determine: Provided, That no person shall be prosecuted under this subsection where the conduct of such person involves simple carelessness.".

(2) by amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Whoever, during and in relation to any crime of violence, including a crime of violence which provides for an enhanced punishment if committed by the use of deadly or dangerous weapon or device, for which he may be prosecuted in a court of the United States, uses a firearm, or carries a firearm in furtherance of any such crime of violence, shall, in addition to the punishment provided for such crime of violence, be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of five years. In the case of his second or subsequent conviction under this subsection, such person shall be sentenced to imprisonment for a term of ten years. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court shall not place on probation or suspend the sentence of any person convicted of a violation of this subsection, nor shall the term of imprisonment imposed under this subsection run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment including that imposed for the crime of violence in which the firearm was used or carried. No person sentenced under this subsection shall be eligible for parole during the term of imprisonment imposed herein: Provided, That no person shall be sentenced under this subsection if he establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the use of the firearm or destructive device was to protect his person or the person of another from the good faith perception of immediate danger other than the danger which was the direct result of the commission of or attempt to commit a felony by either such person and the court must find that a sentence under this subsection would constitute a severe and substantial miscarriage of justice and such court must provide in writing each finding of fact and law necessary to establish the applicability of this proviso.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection the term 'crime of violence' means an offense that is a felony and—

"(A) has as an element the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, or

"(B) that by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense.".

(3) by amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d)(1) Any firearm or ammunition involved in or used in any knowing violation of subsections (a)(4), (a)(6), (f), (g), (h), (i), or (k) of section 922, or knowing importation or bringing into the United States or any possession thereof any firearm or ammunition in violation of section 922(l), or knowing violation of section 924, or willful violation of any other provision of this chapter or any rule or regulation promulgated thereunder, or any violation of any other criminal law of the United States, or any firearm or ammunition intended to be used in any offense referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection, where such intent is demonstrated by clear and convincing evidence, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture, and all provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to the seizure, forfeiture, and disposition of firearms, as defined in section 5845(a) of that Code, shall, so far as applicable, extend to seizures and forfeitures under the provisions of this chapter: Provided, That upon acquittal of the owner or possessor, or dismissal of the charges against him other than upon motion of the Government prior to trial, the seized firearms or ammunition shall be returned forthwith to the owner or possessor or to a person delegated by the owner or possessor unless the return of the firearms or ammunition would place the owner or possessor or his delegate in violation of law. Any action or proceeding for the forfeiture of firearms or ammunition shall be commenced within one hundred and twenty days after such seizure.

"(2)(A) In any action or proceeding for the return of firearms or ammunition seized under the provisions of this chapter, the court shall allow the prevailing party, other than the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee, and the United States shall be liable therefor.

"(B) In any other action or proceeding under the provisions of this chapter, the court, when it finds that such action was without foundation, or was initiated vexatiously, frivolously, or in bad faith, shall allow the prevailing party, other than the United States, a reasonable attorney's fee, and the United States shall be liable therefor.

"(C) Only those firearms or quantities of ammunition particularly named and individually identified as involved in or used in any violation of the provisions of this chapter or any rule or regulation issued thereunder, or any other criminal law of the United States, or as intended to be used in any offense referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection, where such intent is demonstrated by clear and convincing evidence, shall be subject to seizure, forefeiture, and disposition.

"(3) The offenses referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2)(C) of this subsection are—

"(A) any crime of violence, as that term is defined in section 924(c)(2) of this title;

"(B) any offense punishable under the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.) or the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.);

"(C) any offense described in sections 922(a)(1), 922(a)(3), 922(a)(5), or 922(b)(3) of this title, where the firearm or ammunition intended to be used in any such offense is involved in a pattern of activities which includes a violation of any offense described in sections 922(a)(1), 922(a)(3), 922(a)(5), or 922(b)(3) of this title;

"(D) any offense described in section 922(d) of this title where the firearm or ammunition is intended to be used in such offense by the transferor of such firearm or ammunition;

"(E) any offense described in sections 922(i), 922(j), 922(l), 922(n), or 924(b) of this title; and

"(F) any offense which may be prosecuted in a court of the United States which involves the exportation of firearms or ammunition.".

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 925

SEC. 105. Section 925 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (c)—

(A) by deleting the words "has been convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment for a term exceeding one year (other than a crime involving the use of a firearm or other weapon or a violation of this chapter or of the National Firearms Act)" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "is prohibited from processing, shipping, transporting, or receiving firearms or ammunition";

(B) by inserting the word "transportation," after the word "shipment";

(C) by deleting the words "and incurred by reason of such conviction,"; and

(D) by adding after the words "the public interest." the words "Any person whose application for relief from disabilities is denied by the Secretary may file a petition with the United States district court for the district in which he resides for a judicial review of such denial. In a proceeding conducted under this subsection, the scope of judicial review shall be governed by section 706 of title 5, United States Code. The court may in its discretion admit additional evidence where failure to do so would result in a miscarriage of justice."; and

(2) in subsection (d)—

(A) by deleting the words "may authorize" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "shall authorize";

(B) by deleting the words "the person importing or bringing in the firearm or ammunition establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that"; and

(C) by deleting in paragraph (3) the words "generally recognized and particularly"; and

(D) by deleting the words "may permit" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "shall permit".

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 925

SEC. 106. Section 926 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(a)" before "The Secretary" the first place it appears;

(2) inserting the word "only" after the word "prescribe";

(3) deleting the words "as he deems reasonable" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "as are";

(4) deleting the words "The Secretary shall give reasonable public notice, and afford interested parties opportunity for hearing, prior to prescribing such rules and regulations" and inserting in lieu thereof the words: "Provided, That no such rule or regulation promulgated after the effective date of this Act may require that records required to be maintained under this chapter or any portion of the contents of such records, be recorded at or transferred to a facility owned, managed, or controlled by the United States or any State or any political subdivision thereof, nor that any system of registration of firearms, firearms owners, or firearms transactions or dispositions be established: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be deemed to expand or restrict the Secretary's authority to inquire into the disposition of one or more firearms pursuant to a criminal investigation."; and

(5) inserting at the end thereof the following:

"(b) The Secretary shall give not less than ninety days public notice, and shall afford interested parties opportunity for hearing, prior to prescribing such rules and regulations.

"(c) The Secretary shall not prescribe regulations that require purchasers of black powder under the exemption provided in section 845(a)(5) of title 18, United States Code, to complete affidavits or forms attesting to that exemption.".

AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 927

SEC. 107. Section 927 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ": Provided however, That any provision of any legislation enacted, or of any rule or regulation promulgated, by any State or a political subdivision which prohibits or has the effect of prohibiting the transportation of a firearm or ammunition in interstate commerce through such State, when such firearm is unloaded and not readily accessible, shall be null and void.".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 108. (1) All amendments (including any repeals) made by this Act shall become effective one hundred and eighty days after the date of enactment of this Act. At that time the Secretary shall publish and provide to all licensees a compilation of the State laws and published ordinances of which licensees are presumed to have knowledge pursuant to chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by this Act. All amendments to such State laws and published ordinances as contained in the aforementioned compilation shall be published in the Federal Register, revised annually, and furnished to each person licensed under chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by this Act.

The provisions of sections 103(5)(C), 104(2), 105, and 107 of this Act shall be applicable to any action, petition, or appellate proceeding pending on the effective date of this Act. In considering any petitions for Presidential pardons submitted by persons convicted of violations of chapter 44 of title 18, United States Code, prior to the effective date of this Act, the Congress recommends that consideration be given to whether the violation would have been punishable under this Act, and to the purposes and findings contained in the preamble thereto.

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE VII OF THE OMNIBUS CRIME CONTROL AND SAFE STREETS ACT OF 1968

SEC. 201. Title VII of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (sections 1201, 1202, and 1203 of the appendix to title 18, United States Code) is hereby repealed.

EXTENDING THE PERIOD FOR THE PAYMENT OF EXPENSES OF THE TEMPORARY SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE COMMITTEE SYSTEM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 18) to extend the period for the payment of expenses of the temporary Select Committee on the Committee System.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not intend to object. May I ask about the duration of the period that is contained in the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 18

Resolved, That section 5 of Senate Resolution 127, Ninety-eighth Congress, agreed to June 6, 1984, is amended by striking out "December 15, 1984" and insert in lieu thereof "February 13, 1985".

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Senator FORD, who is the ranking member on the Rules Committee and who is also ranking on the Quayle ad hoc committee, has cleared this resolution, and therefore, there is no objection on our part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 18) was agreed to.

ARMS CONTROL NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send a resolution to the desk on behalf of myself and the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 19) expressing the sense of the Senate regarding the upcoming meeting in Geneva of the Secretary of State with the Soviet Foreign Minister, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 19

Whereas the control and reduction of nuclear arms are among the most pressing problems confronting the world;

Whereas all reasonable efforts, consistent with the national security of the United States and the responsibilities of the United States as the leader of the Free World, need to be undertaken in pursuit of nuclear arms control and reduction;

Whereas the issue of nuclear arms control and reduction must be pursued on the basis of the national interest of the United States without regard for partisan considerations;

Whereas the control and reduction of nuclear arms are central to the relations of the United States with the Soviet Union, the only other nation on Earth possessing a comparable nuclear arsenal; and

Whereas the President has declared that one of the highest priority goals of his second administration is to pursue nuclear arms control and reduction talks with the leaders of the Soviet Union which are aimed at the mutual, balanced, and verifiable reduction of the strategic arsenals of both countries: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate hereby—

(1) commends the commitment by the President to make nuclear arms control and reduction talks with the Government of the Soviet Union a high priority goal of his second administration;

(2) offers full support for any effort by the President to engage the Government of the Soviet Union in dialogue and negotiations in pursuit of agreements to control and reduce the nuclear arsenals of the United States and the Soviet Union;

(3) urges the President to approach such talks with creativity and flexibility consistent with the requirements of the security of the United States and the security of those nations that are allies and friends of the United States;

(4) extends to Secretary of State Shultz full support for his efforts and best wishes for success in his meetings with Foreign Minister Gromyko in Geneva January 7-8, which are aimed at setting a more concrete agenda for the resumption of nuclear arms control and reduction negotiations in the immediate future, negotiations to which both the United States and the Soviet Union have agreed; and

(5) recommends that the President include, as official observers on the United States delegation to any formal negotiations which take place, a bipartisan group of Senators, designated upon the recommendation of the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader of the Senate.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the President.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this is a day which, by tradition, is largely occupied by important ceremonial and organizational activities. Today, though, with the support of the distinguished minority leader, I would ask that the Senate put aside this tradition briefly and consider immediately one substantive resolution, which I have sent to the desk.

This resolution deals with what may be the most important issue which any of us in the 99th Congress will face: The issue of the control and reduction of nuclear arms.

I need not dwell on the importance of this issue. It is central to our national security. It is central to our relations with our most formidable adversary, the Soviet Union. And it is central to the peace—indeed, to the very existence—of the civilized world as we know it. On these grounds alone, the issue of nuclear arms control is a fitting focus for the first substantive act of this new Senate.

But there is another reason for us to act now. As we all know, Secretary of State Shultz will be leaving for Geneva this Saturday, to engage Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko in an initial round of talks aimed at setting an agenda for follow-on arms control negotiations. As he begins those talks, Secretary Shultz needs, and he deserves, our strong support.

If history is a guide, the Russians are going to be tough and effective negotiators. They will try to exploit any chinks they see in our negotiating armor, any divisiveness, any impatience. If we let them know now that we are united in our wish for sound and verifiable arms control agreements—united in our determination to work hard and patiently for such agreements—and united in our support for the administration's efforts to achieve them—our prospects for success will be much greater.

This resolution also serves other ends. It recognizes the success of the administration's strategy in getting these talks started and, in so doing, encourages the continuation of the negotiating process.

It underscores the deep interest of the Senate, as an institution, in nuclear arms control, both as an issue and as a negotiating process. It makes clear that this body intends to play its constitutionally mandated role in helping shape and confirm our country's arms control policies and strategies.

It also recommends a mechanism for appropriate and responsible Senate input into the negotiating process, through a body of designated Senate observers from both sides of the aisle, which, I would say, was the idea of the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD. Fully, cognizant of the executive's primacy in carrying out our foreign policies, these Senators would not be negotiators. The Secretary of State, or other officials designated by the President, would have the sole authority to speak for our Government to the Soviet representatives in the intricate bargaining process which will inevitably characterize these negotiations. But these Senators would serve as this body's channel for information and feedback as formal negotiations ensue, so the the Senate could more knowledgeably play the ratifying or other role which might later be required.

The distinguished minority leader, I know, has already been in communication with the President on this matter, and I, too, have discussed it with administration representatives, including the Secretary of State.

We will certainly want to have further discussions, to insure that the functions and responsibilities of Senate observers are as clearly delineated as possible. In that regard, and for the information of the Senate, I would like to include in the RECORD a letter which I received yesterday from Acting Secretary of State Ken Dam, which gives some initial thoughts on the State Department's perception of what role these observers might best play.

Finally, the resolution which I offer can be an important first manifestation of what I hope—what I plan—will be an on-going process to reestablish a bipartisan spirit in this body's consideration of vital national security and foreign policy issues. The distinguished minority leader and I have worked together on this resolution. Without his support and his substantive contributions, we could not hope to see its passage today. Without the support of the Democratic Members of this body, its passage would have far less meaning and impact.

I would also indicate we have cleared the resolution on this side with the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee, Senator GOLDWATER, and with the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator LUGAR.

Rebuilding this spirit of bipartisanship will not be a quick or easy process. But it is a task we must undertake, and there is no issue more important on which to begin than the issue of nuclear arms control. There is no time better to begin than right now.

Mr. President, I have asked for the immediate consideration of this resolution and the support of all Senators for its immediate passage.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letter to which I refer be made a part of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 2, 1985.

HON. ROBERT DOLE,
U.S. Senate

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: In the Secretary's absence, I would like to follow-up on our breakfast meeting and share some further thoughts with you regarding Senator Byrd's proposal for Senate observers on the negotiating team.

It would aid our efforts if, once formal negotiations are underway, the negotiating team and the Secretary could have available the advice of the Senate on a continuing basis. To this end, in addition to our normal consultations with the Congress, it would be useful if you and Senator Byrd could designate a small group of Senators with which to consult on a regular basis. We would keep this group fully informed on the status of the negotiations: they would also be welcome to meet with the delegations at the negotiations where they would be provided full briefings on the status of the negotiations. We will seek to have them meet with the Soviet delegates as well.

We will discuss this approach with the House Leadership and see if they are interested in forming a similar group.

The Secretary greatly appreciates your draft resolution that supports our efforts to seek meaningful reductions in nuclear weapons with the Soviet Union. It is our hope that in the near future the Soviet Union will be prepared to engage in serious negotiations.

I look forward to working closely with you in the new year.

Sincerely yours,

KENNETH W. DAM,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor and coauthor this resolution supporting the resumption of arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union—negotiations which I hope will result in an agreement with the Soviet Union deserving of the approval of the Senate. I understand that the talks that will take place in Geneva on January 7 and 8 are preliminary, and are for the purpose of establishing an agenda and a structure for the resumption of formal negotiations in the near future. I am hopeful that these preliminary discussions between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko will succeed in establishing such an agenda and structure.

I do not presume that the conclusion of responsible arms control agreements, particularly those which might provide for reductions in the military muscle of our Nation and of the Soviet State, will come quickly or easily. The Soviets are well known as tough negotiators, and this process will take some time. Nevertheless, we must negotiate, persistently and with creativity, to fully explore the possibilities for responsible agreements.

The Soviets are a brutal adversary. Since we inhabit the world together, and since each of the two superpowers possess the means to destroy the other with nuclear weaponry, agreements which serve our national interest, which reduce the risk of war and the misunderstandings which lead to war, which are fair, verifiable and clear, and which save the Nation money to be better spent elsewhere—these are worth our best efforts.

I am, therefore, pleased to join the distinguished Republican leader, Mr. DOLE, in commending the commitment by the President to making arms control negotiations a high priority goal in his second term. I am pleased to extend the Secretary of State, Mr. Shultz, my full support for his efforts to set the stage for the resumption of negotiations with the Soviets. I wish him every success.

Mr. President, any accord with the Soviet Union to restrict, control, or reduce our strategic weapons will carry considerable weight for our country. It will vitally affect our national security, and the security of all of our constituents. Such an agreement must be, I believe, supported by a substantial national consensus to stand the test of time. Such a consensus is best achieved through the traditional treatymaking process which has been followed in the field of strategic arms control agreeements entered into by the United States. The role of the Senate is, of course, central to this process. In order for the Senate to be more informed on a regular basis about the progress of the negotiations which may take place, I suggested to the President by telephone on December 9, 1984, that a small, bipartisan group of Senators, to be appointed by the majority and minority leaders, be afforded observer status on our delegation to any arms control negotiations which may occur as a result of the Shultz-Gromyko meetings. I followed up this discussion with a letter to the President on December 11, 1984. As I stated in that letter, it should be of benefit to the knowledge and understanding of all Senators if access to the negotiating sessions were to be established on a regularized basis. In addition, I believe the informal reactions and views of Senators to any ongoing talks should be of real value to our negotiating team at a time before final decisions of specific issues are made.

The President's initial reaction to my suggestion was positive, and I am pleased that the distinguished Republican leader has joined with me in including a recommendation for observers in the resolution now before the Senate. I have discussed this proposal with a number of my colleagues on this side of the aisle as well as with Mr. DOLE. I appreciate his remarks on the need for the Senate to work in bipartisan way on those issues which are of such national magnitude as this. On matters of foreign policy, and particularly superpower relations, we are stronger as a nation when we speak with one voice. Bipartisanship in foreign affairs, in our relations with the rest of the world, has been a wise tradition for the United States—and I can assure my friend from Kansas that I will continue to make every effort to strengthen it in every possible instance. I am sure the specific details of the arrangements for a Senate observer group can be developed in a fashion satisfactory to both the administration and the Senate over the next several weeks.

I am pleased to join Mr. DOLE in sponsoring this sense of the Senate resolution—as he has stated, it is fitting that this resolution be the first item on the agenda of the 99th Congress. There is a fresh promise for renewed efforts to control the nuclear arsenals of the two great powers, to build better safeguards against misunderstanding. I know I speak for my colleagues in wishing the Secretary of State the best in his discussions with Mr. Gromyko.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I will only add one additional word. I want to thank the distinguished minority leader for his strong support and for his suggestion, that we do have observers.

Mr. President, I would only say at this time I am certain we can define more precisely the role of the observers but it would be my thought, at least on this side of the aisle, that we are looking at Senators who have some experience in the area, and I think that one Senator, through no choice of his own, must leave the Intelligence Committee, Senator Wallop, of Wyoming.

Obviously, Mr. President, I would clear such appointments with the appropriate committee chairmen, but I have in mind such Senators as Senator Wallop and others who may serve on the Armed Services Committee and the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. President, it is an opportunity. I think in our private discussions we have talked about the need to make certain there is some outline, some specificity, on what the observers should or should not do.

Mr. President, I am very pleased that we have the resolution before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 19), with its preamble, was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Wilson). Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS TO SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, pursuant to Senate Resolution 400 of the 94th Congress and Senate Resolution 4 of the 95th Congress, appoints the following Senators to the Select Committee on Intelligence:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], Chairman.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH].

The Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN].

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH].

The Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI].

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER].

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT].

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCONNELL].

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], Vice Chairman.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN].

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN].

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. EAGLETON], 2-year term.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] 4-year term.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], 6-year term.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], 8-year term.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the 8-year limitation on service on the Intelligence Committee will result in several members leaving the committee today if this resolution is not adopted. Extended delay in making Intelligence Committee assignments could jeopardize our oversight responsibility and, thus our national security.

As I understood it, the distinguished occupant of the Chair read Mr. LEAHY's name as being the ranking member on the Democratic side. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the pending resolution, the vice chairman will be Mr. LEAHY.

Mr. BYRD. So Mr. LEAHY will be the vice chairman?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair. That is in accordance with my recommendation.

Also, I wish to make clear that my recommendations to the President pro tempore were as follows: that Mr. EAGLETON be appointed for a 2-year term; that Mr. HOLLINGS be appointed for a 4-year term; that Mr. BRADLEY be appointed for a 6-year term; and that Mr. BOREN be appointed for an 8-year term.

I have thus staggered the terms of the four new appointees to that committee from this side of the aisle.

Also, it is my recommendation that Messrs. LEAHY, BENTSEN, and NUNN each be appointed to complete 8-year terms on the committee.

Members are, of course, appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority leader and the minority leader.

I hope these statements will clarify any questions that Senators or persons other than Senators may have.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me also indicate that both the majority leader and the minority leader felt it important that we take care of this committee today, because with the pending Shultz-Gromyko talks and the need for Members to have some time in January to apprise themselves of some of the areas that the Intelligence Committee will cover, it would give them some opportunity, when we are not otherwise occupied, to spend a great deal of time on this effort.

I am not certain how many requests for vacancies the minority leader received, but the majority leader first had 13 and finally 15 requests, before I handed in the paper.

In order to comply with Senate Resolution 400 to have a member of the Judiciary, Foreign Relations, and Armed Services, plus additional at large members, there obviously are some who will be dissappointed, because there are two or three Appropriations Committee members who desired committee membership.

In any event, we spent a great deal of time this morning in the Republican conference talking about 2A committees and 1B committee; and I must say that there is a general consensus that we should stick to the current rule.

It seemed to me that I would be in a rather bad position to come to the floor, because we had one Member who wanted to stay another 8 years or 4 years, to immediately suggest that, well, even though we are thinking about tightening up the committees, I want to stand here and ask for the first exception to be granted.

I know that is a disappointment to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP], who has done an excellent job on this committee, but it is difficult to tell other Senators that they cannot serve on the committee. Senator WALLOP thinks it should be a permanent committee, just as the Finance Committee and others are. With that in mind, we are not going to stagger the terms of the five appointed. They will all have 8-year appointments, on the theory that if there is some effort for a joint committee with the House or some need to change it when we get into the other committee structures, we can make those changes at that time. I think the minority leader has a good point in staggering those appointments. It is our thought, when we get into committee structure and committee organization, that this is one that has been subject to some discussion and some consideration.

So, in my view, we have on this side of the aisle three members of the A who have had experience; and those three members—DURENBERGER, ROTH, and COHEN—will leave after this Congress. In the 100th Congress, there will be three vacancies.

Excuse me: Senator DURENBERGER leaves after 2, Senator ROTH after 4, and Senator COHEN after 6.

So we believe we have a good representation on the committee.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with 22 U.S.C. 276, as amended, the Chair makes the following appointments to the Senate delegation to the Interparliamentary Union during the 99th Congress:

Senator ROBERT STAFFORD, of Vermont, Chairman.

Senator QUENTIN BURDICK, of North Dakota, Vice Chairman.

NOMINATION OF EDWIN MEESE III

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish to report on another phone call I have had from the President, this one a few moments ago.

Earlier today, the distinguished minority leader and the Senator from Kansas told the President that we were prepared to do business, and the President called me back, with a suggestion in mind. It is with respect to the Meese nomination.

The President hopes we can find some way to take care of this nomination at the very earliest opportunity. I indicated to him that we had some problem because the committees have not been designated, but that I would be visiting with the minority leader and would be happy to visit with the President further.

I know there are some who oppose the nomination. I am certain there will be 2 or 3 days or more of hearings, but I hope we can report the nomination to the Senate floor and move as quickly as we can on that nomination.

Obviously, Mr. Meese would like his nomination confirmed prior to the so-called Lincoln Day recess, in order to give him those 7, 8, or 9 days to settle in at the Justice Department, in the event his nomination is confirmed.

I indicated to the President that we would try to meet that schedule. It may not be possible, but I wanted to make that point, since the President just raised it with me.

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY—NATIONAL CHAMPION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today on an occasion that I have to admit I would never have dreamed of during my days as a college student. As I am sure every sports fan in the country is now aware, Brigham Young University has been named the national champion of collegiate football. As an alumnus of this great university, as well as the Senator from the great State of Utah, I am as proud of this accomplishment as anyone.

Before we go any further, I think that we should give credit where it is really due. I want to congratulate Lavell Edwards and his staff on a job well done. Coach Edwards has been the head football coach at BYU for the past 12 years and has compiled a record that stands among the most successful in the Nation. In addition, I have come to know Coach Edwards as a man who is interested in the future of the young men who play for him. He is dedicated to the school and those that have followed his career know that he has turned down many lucrative offers from other universities and professional teams. His choice to remain at BYU is a testimony of his love for this fine institution.

During the tenure of Lavell Edwards the fortunes of BYU football teams have steadily improved. From a team that was happy to win half of its games and draw 25,000 fans, BYU has now progressed to be a team that is consistently mentioned as a power; a team that time and again leads the nation in passing; a team that currently possesses the longest winning streak in college football; a team that is considered the cradle of great quarterbacks, and a team that plays to a sold out stadium of 60,000-plus fans.

Last September I drove with my family to Pittsburgh to watch BYU take on the powerful and then third ranked Pitt Panthers. The night before I happened to run into Coach Edwards and his all-American quarterback, Robbie Boscoe, in the lobby of the hotel. At that time he told me that he felt this was one of the finest teams he has had. He emphasized the strong defense, led by such stalwarts as Kyle Morrell and Leon White and anchored by Jim Hermann. He told me that a lot of people were going to be a little surprised the next day. He was, of course, worried about the game. He was coming into Pitt Stadium with a new quarterback, having seen Steve Young graduate to the professional ranks the previous year. He said at that time, "All Robbie has to do is complete a few passes and he will be just fine. He has as good an arm as any quarterback I have coached." The next day, as I sat in the stands and watched this young man lead his team to a comeback victory I was hoarse from cheering. At the time I thought this was the greatest victory in BYU football history. I thought back on Coach Edwards' words and I knew that another quarterback had arrived.

Throughout the year I watched as the Cougars kept on winning and slowly moved up in the national rankings. As one who is unaccustomed to such heady rankings, I watched half with hope for continued success and half with fear that the bubble would burst. It didn't. Victory followed victory until the team record stood at 13-0, the only undefeated and untied record among the major football powers.

Mr. President, I am also aware that my colleagues from the great State of Washington had hoped to take the floor today to claim the national championshp for the University of Washington. They are truly an excellent football team, and I offer my congratulations to them for an excellent season. Their victory in the Orange Bowl on New Year's night was certainly an exciting time for these young men and their coaches. My hat is off to Coach Don James of the University of Washington. He demonstrated a great deal of class in the manner in which he handled the controversy surrounding who is number one. All football fans can look forward to next September when these two fine collegiate teams will meet on the gridiron in Provo, UT.

In closing, I again want to congratulate the young men of the Brigham Young University football team, the fine athletic director of the university, Glen Tuckett, the president of BYU, Jeffery Holland, and especially the student body, for it is really their team.

"We're number one": It has a nice ring to it and something that I hope we will be saying again next year at BYU. But whether or not the Cougars win a national football championship the student body and the alumni will know that in fact they are No. 1.

THE U.N.'S PRIORITIES

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an editorial printed in the December 29, 1984, issue of the Charleston News & Courier. The editorial is entitled "The U.N.'s Priorities," and concerns a recent vote by the United Nations to spend $73.5 million for a lavish international conference center to be built in Ethiopia.

Mr. President, this is a very wasteful expenditure. That same amount of money could be put to more humanitarian uses, such as: Inoculate 1 million Ethiopian children against all the most common childhood killers in Africa or, feed 125,000 Ethiopian families for a year.

Instead, Mr. President, this money will be used to build an unnecessary convention center to make an unpopular Marxist dictatorship look good. This is the same Communist government that recently chose to spend more than $100 million to celebrate a decade of Marxist rule rather than use the money to feed their starving masses. The task of feeding starving Ethiopians has now fallen to the charity of other nations.

Mr. President, actions such as this by the United Nations make a mockery of the purpose that institution was created to serve. I urge all my colleagues to read this editorial, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Charleston News & Courier, Dec. 29, 1984]

THE U.N.'S PRIORITIES

Who says those people in the glass tower on New York's East River have muddled priorities? Why, just the other day they voted 122-5, with 16 abstentions, to spend $73.5 million for a lavish international conference center to be built—you guessed it—in Ethiopia!

Once in place, the center will accommodate the occasional meetings of the Economic Commission for Africa, one of the U.N. agencies. But it wasn't the commission that demanded the lavish palace for their sporadic meetings. It was Ethiopia's Marxist government that insisted the center be ostentatious enough to handle all sorts of international conferences.

In a bout of sanity in that otherwise insane world of international intrigue, a member of the U.S. Mission to the United Nations not only spoke out against such an extravagance when millions of Ethiopians are starving but went on to list more needed things $73.5 million could pay for such as:

Inoculate one million Ethiopian children against all of the most common childhood killers in Africa.

Drill 25,000 wells complete with pumps which would provide enough fresh water for 12.5 million Ethiopians.

Enough cash to feed 125,000 Ethiopian families for a year.

Supply neighboring Chad with all of its cereal import needs for a year.

But then again, the Marxist-Leninists running around in Addis Ababa, guided by their Cuban and Soviet advisors, don't see things with that perspective. They want to host their chums on a first-class basis and get the U.N. to foot the bill, not them.

ROBERT R. COKER OF HARTSVILLE, SC, JANUARY 3, 1985

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, during the recess between the end of the 98th Congress and the start of the 99th Congress, it was brought to my attention that Mr. Robert R. Coker of Hartsville, SC, was honored by the National Cotton Council for his efforts in regard to the Boll Weevil Eradication Program.

Mr. President, Robert R. Coker is truly deserving of this honor. As far back as 1958, Mr. Coker exerted efforts to resolve problems confronting cotton growers as a result of boll weevil infestation. His tireless work in this area has begun to pay off with big dividends for cotton farmers. In 1978, the U.S. Department of Agriculture initiated a 3-year boll weevil eradication trial program in North Carolina and Virginia. The trial program was a technical and biological success. The pest was eradicated from the trial areas, and cotton yields have increased.

As a result of this success, a new expanded Boll Weevil Eradication Program was developed in 1983 that invokes 59,000 acres of planted cotton in North Carolina and 68,000 acres in South Carolina. The goal of the program is to eliminate boll weevil populations in these areas by 1986.

Mr. President, efforts of dedicated agricultural scientists like Robert Coker have helped cotton make a strong comeback in the Southeast. In recent years planted acreage has sharply increased, yields have improved, and profitability has returned to this once beleaguered industry.

Mr. President, again I commend Mr. Coker on his efforts, and I congratulate him and the entire domestic cotton industry on the success they have experienced in this important program—a program that I have been pleased to strongly support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the September 24, 1984 edition of the Hartsville Messenger concerning Mr. Coker be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Hartsville Messenger, Sept. 24, 1984]

COKER RECEIVES PLAQUE

The man whose burning desire is to be "a pallbearer at the funeral of the last boll weevil" has won high recognition from his peers.

Robert R. (Bob) Coker, Hartsville, cotton producer and former seed company executive, was recently presented a plaque from the National Cotton Council in recognition of being the guiding force that made the weevil eradication program a reality.

Presenting the plaque at the Council's recent board meeting, North Carolina cotton producer Marshall Grant told the 79-year-old Coker, "With your vigor and the progress being made in this project, I do believe you'll achieve your objectives of being the last boll weevil's pallbearer."

Grant noted that Coker and a fellow South Carolinian, the late Skeet McLaurin, introduced a resolution at the Council's 1958 annual meeting declaring the boll weevil to be the No. 1 enemy of efficient cotton production and calling on the Council to begin plans to eliminate the weevil at the earliest possible time. The resolution met with standing applause by Council delegates and was adopted unanimously.

"From the day on, Bob Coker's name has been synonymous with boll weevil eradication," Grant said.

Coker, was named chairman of a special Council committee on boll weevil eradication the following year. Under his leadership, a boll weevil research laboratory was established at Mississippi State University and a pilot eradication experiment was conducted in the southern part of the state. In 1972, Coker named a special technical committee to draw up an overall master plan for eradication. It was in presenting this plan to Agriculture Secretary Earl Butz in 1973 that Coker made his now-famous statement about yearning to be the weevil's pallbearer.

Grant pointed out that Coker succeeded in convincing Congress, USDA, and federal budget officials to go along with the program.

"The quadrupling of cotton acreage in the Carolinas, the addition of seven new gins, and the 75 percent reduction in chemical applications in the area all attest to the success of Bob Coker's idea and his willingness to follow up with 26 years of work to make it happen," he said. "No other one project has as much potential for lowering the cost of cotton production."

In accepting the plaque, Coker, a former Council president, described himself as "overwhelmed by gratitude."

He said the Council had given "full unqualified, and enthusiastic" support to the effort. "More cooperation has come from many people—not the least of which are producers," Coker stated. He also singled out J. Ritchie Smith, the Council's technical services director who retired last year, for his extended work in behalf of the eradication program.

HALLMARK'S 75TH ANNIVERSARY

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I wish to take a moment to note an event next week, on January 10, that is an important one for Kansas City and that I think says something about who we are and what we are as a people.

Next Thursday marks the 75th anniversary of the founding of Hallmark Cards, Inc. While that may seem unremarkable in the rush of today's events, in fact the story of Hallmark and its founding by Joyce C. Hall and his brother, Rollie B. Hall, is remarkable. It is an event worth noting because it is a tribute to those values that built not only the Hallmark corporation but our Nation.

It was 75 years ago that an 18-year-old man arrived in Kansas City with a shoebox full of postcards and an idea. Joyce Hall, even at the age of 18, was already a man because circumstance and poverty had forced him to be. He did not take poverty as a personal insult or even as a burden. Instead, he viewed it as a spur to move ahead and to better his situation and himself.

Years later, Joyce Hall wrote: "I never could sit around waiting for things to happen; it's more fun making them happen."

That brief comment sums up how Hallmark was built through years of painstaking labor, through initiative and hard work, through intelligence and foresight, and through an obsession with quality.

What began with a shoebox and an idea now is an international corporation with operations in 15 States and sales worldwide. Today, Hallmark sells 12 million greeting cards and related items every day of the year. That is ample evidence of the truth in Hallmark's slogan, "When you care enough to send the very best."

The theme for Hallmark's 75th anniversary—"Commitment to Excellence"—celebrates the values that Joyce Hall instilled in his company from its founding. They are values that still propel Hallmark under the leadership of his son, Donald J. Hall.

Hallmark is to be congratulated for 75 years of business growth and expansion, for enriching the communities in which it lives and for its enduring commitment to excellence in everything that bears the Hallmark name.

I congratulate Hallmark, its founders, its present leaders, and its thousands of employees for 75 years of achievement that stand as a testament to all that is good in the American dream and all that is vital to America's future.

RETIREMENT OF JACK FLOYD

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, on January 11, 1985, a retirement ceremony will be held honoring Jack Floyd, executive director of the Memorial Hospital of Sarasota, FL, who is retiring after 26 years of dedicated service. I take this opportunity to commend and congratulate Jack on a job well done.

Jack, who is greatly respected throughout the entire Sarasota area, has devoted countless hours to help make his community a better place to live and work. He has been a driving force in cost-effective health care services and has been responsible for the growth of the Memorial Hospital from 198 beds to a 788-bed medical center. He has received the Florida Hospital Research Foundation Award of Merit for his outstanding contribution in his profession.

Jack has also worked tirelessly on behalf of numerous charitable organizations. These include the United Way, the Sarasota Welfare Home, and Kiwanis Club.

Somehow, Jack has also found the time to become actively involved in many professional organizations. Among these are the Florida Hospital Association, the Florida chapter of the Hospital Finance Management Association, the West Central Florida Hospital Council, and the Florida Hospital Research and Education Foundation.

Jack Floyd has been a driving force in the community for many years. His contributions have been many, and I'm sure he will be sorely missed by his colleagues at the Memorial Hospital. His dedication and involvement in the community is a model for all to follow.

I congratulate Jack on this memorable occasion, and wish him and his wife, Doris, and their three children, all the best in their future endeavors.

NOW WE KNOW: NUCLEAR WINTER IS A CLEAR POSSIBILITY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, in 1983, the Defense Department asked the National Research Council, which is run by the National Academy of Science, to make a study of the possible "nuclear winter" consequences of nuclear war. On December 11, 1984, the Council released that study. The study found "a clear possibility" that a major nuclear war would generate enough smoke and dust to blot out the Sun in the Northern Hemisphere and cause a severe drop in temperature.

The Defense Department deserves commendation for calling for this study. The results of this study provide no certainty. But they do raise the definite prospect that in addition to the terrible devastation that would surely befall the combatants in a nuclear war, most of the human beings on Earth might suffer an unprecedented catastrophe. Through the combination of bone-chilling temperatures, weeks of darkness, radiation, disease and starvation, a major nuclear war might all but extinguish life on Earth.

The big fact that emerged from this study was the immense uncertainty. The Council could not tell us that a nuclear winter will certainly follow a nuclear war, or will not. They simply do not know. What are the odds? They cannot tell us. They can tell us that nuclear winter is "a clear possibility." The Council recommended "a major research effort" by the Federal Government to narrow the uncertainties.

Mr. President, this finding by the Nation's most respected scientific experts in a report commissioned by the Department of Defense should add greater urgency than ever to our arms control and peace efforts. For the first time, it now appears possible that a major war involving the superpowers could lead to the end of mankind on Earth. It has been obvious for a long time that any war involving superpowers would almost certainly lead to a nuclear response from the losing side. Indeed, leaders of this country have actually declared that we will not renounce first use of nuclear weapons for that very reason. The first use of such weapons could be at a very low level, a level that would not threaten nuclear winter. But, in all likelihood, the response to such first use would be a rapid escalation of nuclear attacks, perhaps in a matter of hours. The threat of nuclear winter could persuade both of the major nuclear countries to redesign their nuclear weapons drastically.

The nuclear winter threat will put a premium on weapons that can be delivered with pinpoint precision and low kilotonnage exactly on target. Because nuclear winter is a phenomenon of burning cities' targets outside of cities, missile sites, submarine pens, onground bomber concentrations will be selected targets. But let us not kid ourselves: such a war would be so terrible, the stakes so immense, that military targets in or near cities would not be immune. Indeed, in both superpowers, and especially in the Soviet Union, most military targets are near large population centers.

In World War II, the most devastating blow to Nazi Germany was the intense fire bombing of Hamburg, with the loss of tens of thousands of German defense workers in a single air raid with conventional weapons. How tempting to carry out the standby nuclear war scenario of a few years ago and hit Leningrad with more than 40 nuclear warheads and Moscow with more than 100, with a comparable allocation to other Soviet cities. Such a strike—in a matter of a very few hours—could totally destroy the Soviet Union. Oh, yes, there would be retaliation; but there would very likely be vast nuclear retaliation against the United States in any event once we fired the first tactical nuclear weapons in defense of NATO.

Conceivably, we can design nuclear weapons that would not trigger a nuclear winter. But without inconceivable restraints on both sides, after a nuclear war started, we could not possibly confine it to any finite nuclear megatonnage. Think of it. Both the United States and the Soviet Union are sitting on thousands of nuclear warheads. Each has what the Defense Department's commissioned study shows has the "clear possibility" of igniting a nuclear winter that could destroy most—maybe all—of mankind. As our top leaders have said over and over again, we should not engage in any military action unless we intend to do whatever it takes to win. We must win. It sounds so logical until we recognize that what it takes to win may very possibly bring on a nuclear winter that would destroy most or all of the people who live on this Earth, including our own countrymen. Some victory.

PROPOSAL THAT THE UNITED STATES AND U.S.S.R. JOINTLY COMMEMORATE THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LINKUP OF THEIR ARMED FORCES WHICH SEALED THE DEFEAT OF NAZI GERMANY IN WORLD WAR II

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, as are many of my distinguished colleagues, I am a veteran of World War II who served in Europe during the multipronged offensive from the south, the east, and the west, that finally crushed fascism in Italy and the awful Nazi regime in Germany. Memories of that period are sharply etched in my memory. Among them is an event, or rapid series of events, whose 40th anniversary will take place this spring. I am referring to the historic linkup of American and Soviet forces on April 25, 1945, near the Elbe River in what is now East German, as President Harry S. Truman announced: "The enemy has been cut in two."

Mr. President, it has occurred to me that, at a time when the superpowers are seeking ways to reduce tensions that have set the world on edge, it would be fitting to commemorate jointly the historic linkup that sealed the fate of nazism and that reminds us today that even ideological antagonists can find unity in a higher cause. Combat veterans of World War II representing the United States, the U.S.S.R., and their allies, might participate in the commemoration ceremonies, as well as active-duty military personnel and civilian officials. I have, therefore, composed a letter to President Reagan suggesting that he approach President Chernenko on this subject, perhaps through Secretary Shultz when he meets Foreign Minister Gromyko in Geneva next week.

The letter clearly states that the proposal makes no pretensions to reconcile fundamental differences between the United States and the U.S.S.R. Rather, it is submitted with the belief that contacts between the American and Soviet peoples that remind us of our common humanity can only serve the cause of peace and are worth pursuing in that spirit. Finally, the letter suggests that Presidents Reagan and Chernenko might care to link such commemoration ceremonies with ceremonies commemorating another historic event that, by an extraordinary coincidence, also took place on April 25, 1945—namely, the initial convening of the United Nations in San Francisco.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have my letter printed in the RECORD at this time and I invite those of my colleagues who are interested in signing it to contact me directly, since it is important that the letter be dispatched no later than tomorrow.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 2, 1985.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: April 25, 1945, will mark the 40th anniversary of one of the most dramatic events of World War Two that holds special significance at this point in our history. At 11:30 a.m. on April 25, 1945, a patrol from G Company, 273rd Regiment, 69th Infantry Division, 1st U.S. Army, spotted a Russian soldier on horseback in the farming village of Leckwitz, about two miles from the Elbe River in what is now East Germany. The long-awaited linkup of two armed forces which had united to crush the Nazi military machine had occurred. Word passed quickly up the two chains of command. Other contacts between advance units followed. By afternoon, American and Russian soldiers were cheering and embracing each other up and down the line. The following afternoon the linkup was formalized when Major General Emil F. Reinhardt, commander of our 69th Infantry, met Major General Vladimir Rusakov, commander of the Russian 58th Guards Infantry Division, across the Elbe from Torgau. According to one historian, "the order of the day included camaraderie, photographs, newsreel cameras, a hastily assembled feast with a main dish of fried eggs, dancing in the streets, and toast after toast after toast."

During the forty years since American and Russian soldiers celebrated their common victory, the U.S. and U.S.S.R. have established themselves as the most powerful nations on earth, and as archrivals who hold the fate of all earth's peoples in their hands. At a time when the superpowers are seeking ways to reduce tensions that have set the world on edge, we believe it would be fitting to commemorate the historic linkup that sealed the fate of Nazism, invoking the spirit of Harry Truman, when he announced to the American people:

"The Anglo-American armies under the command of General Eisenhower have met the Soviet forces where they intended to meet—in the heart of Nazi Germany. The enemy has been cut in two . . . Nations which can plan and fight together shoulder to shoulder in the face of such obstacles of distance and of language and of communications as we have overcome, can live together and can work together in the common labor of the organization of the world for peace."

We have no illusions about the nature of the Soviet regime. But we believe, as we know you do also, that the American people and the Soviet people do not want war, and that contacts between the two peoples that remind us of our common humanity can only serve the cause of peace. Joint commemoration of April 25, 1945, will help make us aware that even ideological antagonists can find unity in a higher cause.

Permit us to suggest, therefore, that you contact President Chernenko and propose that ceremonies be jointly arranged to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the U.S.-Soviet linkup at the Elbe. Perhaps the message could be transmitted by secretary of State Shultz during his meeting in Geneva next week with Foreign Minister Gromyko. The commemorative ceremonies might be attended by veterans of the participating units and by active duty forces of the U.S. and U.S.S.R. and their allies. Ranking civilian officials might also participate.

Joint commemoration of April 25, 1945, will not reconcile U.S.-Soviet differences, by any means. Neither will any other single initiative. But we believe that the sentiments awakened by a joint commemoration of April 25, 1945, can only serve as a positive force, a source of inspiration perhaps, for reducing tensions in our troubled world.

Should you choose linking those commemorative activities with other activities commemorating the 40th anniversary of the convening of the United Nations in San Francisco, which, by an extraordinary coincidence, also occurred on April 25, 1945, you would, of course, enjoy our wholehearted support.

Sincerely,

SPARK MATSUNAGA,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. MATSUNAGA. One final footnote, Mr. President. After I had drafted my letter to President Reagan, I was delighted to learn that my thoughts evidently were on the same wavelength with those of the distinguished columnist for the New York Times, Mr. James Reston. Yesterday's New York Times carried a column by Mr. Reston under the headline "Dates to Remember." Although it did not mention April 25 specifically, the column called attention to the approaching 40th anniversaries of the conclusion of World War II and the founding of the United Nations, and it proposed that the United States and the Soviet Union "set aside a few days in 1985 to celebrate together the days when they did something in common." The column is a blend of that humanity and wisdom which has earned Mr. Reston a special, honored place in contemporary affairs, and in American history in my view, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this time, so that those who missed it might profit from Mr. Reston's remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DATES TO REMEMBER

(By James Reston)

WASHINGTON.—Nineteen eighty-five marks the 40th anniversary of two important dates in the history of U.S. Soviet relations: the end of the Second World War and the beginning of the United Nations' long, tormented search for peace.

It would be interesting if the United States and the Soviet Union set aside a few days in 1985 to celebrate together the days when they did something in common. For they have disagreed for so long now about everything that they can't quite believe they can agree on anything.

This is the psychological cancer that is growing in the world: a general acceptance of pessimism and even cynicism about whether these two clumsy nuclear giants will ever really work together, even marginally, for a safer world.

It's unreasonable to suppose that Secretary of State Shultz and the Soviet Foreign Minister, Andrei Gromyko, meeting in Geneva next week, will make much progress on the control of nuclear weapons on earth let alone in outer space.

This is the hardest part of the tangle, the end result and not the cause of 40 years of distrust. But if they start at the beginning, the two might at least be able to agree on the possibility of compromise, if not peace, and use 1985 to recall their common sacrifices and hopes.

There's no doubt that the 40th anniversary of the end of World War II will be celebrated. The question is whether Washington and Moscow will celebrate it together in remembrance of their cooperation or celebrate it separately, each taking credit for their common victory and adding to their present disunity.

It all depends on how the thing is done and who's invited to the ceremony. It could be a vengeful remembrance of victory over the Nazis and the Japanese militarists, or a reminder of the fantastic revival of Germany and Japan and their reconciliation with the peaceful family of nations.

The chances are that less attention will be paid to the 40th anniversary of the signing of the United Nations Charter in San Francisco on June 26, 1945. If so, this would be a misjudgment of history, for if the U.N. has "failed" as many people suppose, the fault lies with its member nations—particularly with its five principal "veto powers"—and not with the principles of its Charter.

The tragedy of these 40 years is simply that the nations have not been faithful to the principles of the Charter they signed in San Francisco. Maybe the Charter expected too much, but the signatories committed themselves in a solemn treaty to do certain things that are worth remembering:

"To practice tolerance and live together in peace with one another as good neighbors . . .

"To take effective collective measures for the prevention and removal of threats to the peace, and for the suppression of acts of aggression . . ."

All this, of course, has been violated, like the vows of a marriage, and after 40 years of violation, the principles are even being mocked by "realists" as the illusions of "dreamers." But there's nothing wrong with dreaming, with a gun on the night table, and keeping alive the hopes and promises of better days.

It may be that the greatest danger at the beginning of 1985 is the growing conviction that reconciliation among the nations, the races and the diverse political, economic and religious ideologies is unattainable and maybe even impossible.

History in our own time and in centuries past does not support an assumption of endless conflict. The French and the Germans have composed their ancient enmities. We have forgotten to "Remember Pearl Harbor" as President Roosevelt advised us to do.

The religious wars went on for centuries on the contested theory that there was only one road to eternal life, but even these conflicts were finally composed when the balance of power finally led to compromise and the spirit of toleration.

At the turn of the New Year, the United States and the Soviet Union are in a way at another fork in the road, where, as Robert Frost once said, the road taken and the road not taken make all the difference.

Anniversaries as symbols have their uses. Whoever divided time into years seemed to know that we all need a pause for reflection about where we've been and where we're going, and nobody needs such a pause at the beginning of the New Year more than the old men who now preside over the Kremlin and the White House.

OATH OF OFFICE

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, on December 18, in Humboldt, SD, I took the oath of office in a ceremony in the West Central School before Helen Marie Sieverding, a notary public. The ceremony was attended by school children and other invited guests. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the certificate of oath be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the Madison Daily Leader commenting on the ceremony also be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is an eloquent summary of my reasons for taking my oath of office before my fellow South Dakotans, and I am grateful to the editor for saying it so well.

Mr. President, as we begin the work of this 99th Congress, 1st session, the electoral process has again allowed the citizens of this great Nation to demonstrate their choices on how they wish to be governed. It is very important to maintain the highest degree of communication with the people we represent.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OATH OF OFFICE—HON. LARRY PRESSLER, DEC. 18, 1984

(Oath required by the Constitution and by Law, to be taken by U.S. Senators under Rule II)

I, Larry Pressler, do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter: so help me God.

[From the Madison (SD) Daily Leader, Dec. 19, 1984]

PRESSLER REMEMBERS ROOTS

We attended the swearing-in ceremony for Sen. Larry Pressler Tuesday in Humboldt, where the former 4-H'er formally began his second term in the U.S. Senate.

It would be easy for Sen. Pressler to forget his roots on a farm near Humboldt and in the Humboldt school system. He could easily spend more time with political bigwigs and at embassy parties in Washington.

The swearing-in could have taken place in Sioux Falls in a more glittering spot than the West Central school gym.

But that gym, small as it is, is where Pressler used to play basketball, and the featured speaker Tuesday was Glenn Schrader, the retired county agent who worked with 4-H clubs when Larry took a prize-winning electric motor exhibit to Chicago for a national club congress.

Others on the stage included his mother, who handled correspondence for his early campaigns, and his former English teacher, who read congratulatory letters from Pres. Ronald Reagan and Sen. Jim Abdnor.

With the limited number of chairs in the gym set aside for bigger folks, grade school kids sat on the floor and watched the swearing-in ceremony, performed by a local notary public, a woman who works in the Humboldt bank.

We think the event couldn't help but make an impression on the youngsters . . . to see close up a local farm boy who went on to become student body president at USD, a Rhodes scholar and a graduate of Harvard Law School.

It is said that America is one of the few places where any youngster can grow up to become president.

Admittedly, the chance of that happening is remote, but the youngsters at Humboldt know for sure that they have a chance to go on from West Central, acquire an excellent education and make an important contribution to their state and nation, whatever their chosen field.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S PROCLAMATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS DAY AND WEEK AND BILL OF RIGHTS DAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, in December of last year, President Reagan issued a proclamation which made December 10, 1984, Human Rights Day, the week of December 10, Human Rights Week, and December 15, 1984, Bill of Rights Day.

In this proclamation, President Reagan presented several points important to our consideration of the Genocide Convention. He reminded us that our Bill of Rights made us the first Nation to establish rights based upon the principle that certain rights are inherently given to every member of humanity. The President noted that it is our responsibility to advance basic rights. He urged us not to forget those whose rights have been denied.

President Reagan's words remind us why the United States worked so earnestly in creating the Genocide Convention. We have been a human rights leader. But his words remind us how we fail to be consistent with our proud heritage as long as we do not ratify this important treaty. As we continue to neglect ratification, we go from first place in earlier urging for the treaty, toward last place in making our formal proclamation against genocide. We go from speaking out, to silence. We neglect to speak out for those who cannot.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that President Reagan's proclamation to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROCLAMATION 5287 OF DECEMBER 10, 1984—BILL OF RIGHTS DAY, HUMAN RIGHTS DAY AND WEEK, 1984

(By the President of the United States of America)

A PROCLAMATION

On December 15, 1791, our Founding Fathers celebrated the ratification of the first ten amendments to the Constitution of the United States—a Bill of Rights that has helped guarantee the freedoms that all Americans cherish.

For the first time in the history of nations, our Founding Fathers established a written Constitution with enumerated rights based on the principle that the rights to life and liberty come not from the prerogative of government, but inhere in each person as a fundamental human heritage. Americans believe that all persons are equal in their possession of these unalienable rights and are entitled to respect because of the immense dignity and value of each human being. With these great principles in mind, the Founding Fathers designed a system of government limited in its powers, based upon just laws, and resting upon the consent of the governed.

When Americans first proclaimed this noble experiment in self-government and human liberty, it seemed to some to be a utopian, unrealistic ideal. Today, virtually every nation in the world has adopted a written constitution expressing in varying degrees fundamental human rights. One hundred and fifty-seven years after the ratification of our Bill of Rights, on December 10, 1948, the United Nations adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights affirming an international consensus on behalf of the human rights and individual liberties that we value so highly.

Thirty-six years after the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, however, it is clear that this consensus is often recognized more on paper than in practice. Throughout the world, many governments nominally adhere to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights while suppressing free elections, independent trade unions, due process of law, and freedom of religion and of the press.

The United States recognizes a special responsibility to advance the claims of the oppressed; to reaffirm the rights to life and liberty as fundamental rights upon which all others are based; and to safeguard the rights to freedom of thought, conscience, and religion. As we are free, we must speak up for those who are not.

As Americans, we strongly object to and seek to end such affronts to the human conscience as the incarceration in the Soviet Union of men and women who try to speak out freely or who seek to exercise the basic right to emigrate; the harsh treatment accorded one of the great humanitarians of our time, Andrei Sakharov; the denial of basic human rights and self-determination in Eastern Europe and the Baltic states; the failure of the Polish authorities to establish an effective dialogue with the free trade union movement in that country; the manifest injustices of the apartheid system of racial discrimination in South Africa; the persecution of the Baha'i religious minority in Iran; the lack of progress toward democratic government in Chile and Paraguay; the campaign against the Roman Catholic Church in Nicaragua; the suppression of freedom in Cuba and Vietnam; the brutal war waged by Soviet troops against the people of Afghanistan; and the continuing Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea.

The American people recognize that it is the denial of human rights, not their advocacy, that is the source of world tension. We recall the sacrifices that generations of Americans have made to preserve and protect liberty around the world. In this century alone, tens of thousands of Americans have laid down their lives on distant battlefields to uphold the cause of human rights. We honor and cherish them all. Today, it is with an abiding sense of gratitude and reverence that we remember the great gift of freedom that they bequeathed to us.

As we give special thought to the blessings that we enjoy as a free people, let us not forget the victims of human rights abuses around the world.

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim December 10, 1984, as Human Rights Day and December 15, 1984, as Bill of Rights Day, and call on all Americans to observe the week beginning December 10, 1984, as Human Rights Week.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 10th day of Dec., in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-four, and of the independence of the United States of America the two hundred and ninth.

RONALD REAGAN.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. GORTON):

S. 1. A bill requiring reductions in outlays for the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988; pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, referred jointly to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

MAJOR SPENDING REDUCTIONS FOR THE NEXT THREE FISCAL YEARS

S. 1—REDUCING SPENDING FOR FISCAL YEARS 1986, 1987, AND 1988

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce as S. 1 legislation requiring major spending reductions in each of the next 3 fiscal years. These spending reductions will constitute a major assault on our No. 1 problem: Federal deficits that are careening out of control. I am pleased to say that the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, joins me in introducing this legislation.

Let me say at the outset that this is just a modest first step toward launching our legislative efforts in the 99th Congress to reduce spending and bring the deficit under control. As drafted, S. 1 states a goal most everyone agrees on: Reducing the deficit as a percentage of the gross national product so that by fiscal year 1988 it would decline to 2 percent. The percentage prescribed for fiscal year 1986 is 4 percent, and for fiscal year 1987, 3 percent. These are essentially the targets Dave Stockman has proposed for President Reagan and which the administration is working toward in preparing their budget. They are consistent with most of the freeze proposals that have been discussed and with the growing consensus that spending has to be our first line of attack in dealing with the deficit.

SETTING GOALS

Mr. President, I believe this legislation is important because it sets goals that we very much need to meet—goals that are essential to our economic well-being. But I do not pretend that this bill is the answer to our problems, because clearly it is only a beginning. In many ways I would have preferred to have a specific budget plan to lay before Congress, or at least specific deficit numbers or spending reduction numbers that we should achieve. But as everyone knows, the specific numbers keep shifting, and the President's budget will not be available for about a month. So it is best that we proceed with goals we do know, goals we can define, and goals that should govern the budget debate for the remainder of this year. That is what S. 1 is all about. It is my hope, and I beleive Senator DOMENICI shares that hope, that this proposal can later become the vehicle for legislation action in the Senate to reduce the deficit.

In other words, at the appropriate time when we finally agree on a plan, we would substitute that plan for the bill I am introducing today.

I think cutting the budget has to be our top priority. The deficit is a problem. I do not share the view that some suggest that we do not worry about deficits. I might say some of those happen to be in the Republican Party.

But just yesterday Senator PACKWOOD and myself and other Members, Democrats and Republicans, in the Finance Committee held hearings. We had before us four economists who gave us their views, and without exception they all indicated that the deficit was a No. 1 problem and the deficit should be addressed.

I am convinced there are a number of us on both sides of the aisle to put together something that will have a positive impact on deficit reduction and on sustained economic growth.

Our witnesses yesterday were Alan Greenspan, Martin Feldstein, Paul Craig Roberts, and Charles Schultze. They represent a broad range of economic views, and I think they did an excellent job in pointing out what would happen, how much interest rates would fall if we take credible action on the deficit.

TOP PRIORITY

It is no overstatement to say that cutting the deficit must be the top priority of the new Congress. The health of our economy is the key to everything we try to achieve, both as individuals and as a nation. Without a strong economy, we cannot afford to aid the weak and the hungry around the world. Without a strong economy we lessen the reputation for leading the free world in the vanguard of human progress. And without a strong economy we lack the resources to strengthen our defenses, and the credibility we need to negotiate with the Soviet Union on our own terms. So in a very real sense, the deficit problem is linked to every one of our endeavors.

DEFICIT IS THE PROBLEM

Mr. President, let there be no doubt that reducing the deficit is the key to a healthy economy. As I said, just yesterday the Finance Committee held a hearing, organized with the able direction of the new chairman of that committee, BOB PACKWOOD, to examine just that question. Four distinguished economists—diverse individuals who do not always agree on such matters—concurred in the judgment that spending reductions that bring the deficit down would have a major favorable impact on the economy in terms of interest rates, growth, and jobs and investment over the long term. These witnesses—Alan Greenspan, Martin Feldstein, Paul Craig Roberts, and Charles Schultze—represent a broad range of economic viewpoints, yet they agreed that reducing Federal spending is probably the most vital task this Congress can address itself to. I hope their testimony will be widely read, and I am glad to have had the opportunity to join Senator PACKWOOD in conducting that hearing.

The reasons why our colleagues in the economics profession are worried are not hard to find. Deficits in the $200 billion range drain resources from the private sector, cause uncertainty in financial markets that raises interest rates, and undermine our trading position by keeping the dollar high. That means that until deficits are reduced, our economic recovery has a serious instability built into it. That instability must and will be removed, because the general welfare of the Nation is at stake.

GUIDING CHOICES

I hope that the introduction of S. 1 will help make several things clear that can guide our choices in dealing with the deficit. First, strong growth in the economy will not continue unless we have spending cuts that reduce the Government's absorption of resources. A stable and responsible monetary policy is, of course, a necessary precondition for stable growth. Second, considering major tax changes at this time would be highly controversial—particularly with the President, if they raise revenue—and might impede progress on the deficit. Besides, most revenue raisers would not have a positive effect unless linked to spending cuts of a greater magnitude. So I continue to prefer a separate track for now on deficit reduction and tax reform proposals such as that made by the Treasury.

All of this translates into a mandate to attack spending first and foremost as a means of controlling deficits. Once we have done that, and satisfied the financial markets that we are serious and will stick to our program, we can consider further options. But today we must begin focusing on the immediate challenge, and I hope that S. 1 will help do that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That outlays for the fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988 shall be reduced from projected current services levels so as to reduce the percentage of gross national product that the Federal deficit comprises to 4 percent in fiscal year 1986, 3 percent in fiscal year 1987, and 2 percent in fiscal year 1988.

S. 11. A bill to amend the Steel Import Stabilization Act; to the Committee on Finance.

STEEL IMPORT STABILIZATION ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation intended to insure effective implementation of the President's steel program.

On September 18 of last year, the President announced his intention to limit imports of steel mill products to 18.5 percent of apparent domestic consumption. That level would be a significant reduction from the over 26 percent of the last few months. The 18.5-percent figure would be achieved primarily through bilateral arrangements with importing countries, although the administration subsequently made clear its determination to take other actions should bilateral negotiations not be successful in some cases.

Subsequently, on December 19, the administration announced the successful conclusion of agreements with Japan, Korea, Brazil, Mexico, South Africa, Australia, and Spain. The shares of apparent domestic consumption allocated those countries, along with an estimated amount for the European Community, which is party to a separate kind of agreement dating back to 1982, is approximately 15.5 percent. Obviously that leaves very little room for other countries, particularly Canada, if the 18.5-percent limit is not to be breached. Nevertheless, the negotiations that were successful largely came in on target, and Ambassadors Brock and Lighthizer are to be commended for their hard work and tough negotiating.

There remain, however, a number of loose ends to be tied if the President's steel program is to be effective. This legislation is intended to address one of those loose ends.

First, negotiations must be concluded with the remaining suppliers, including Argentina, Finland, Austria, Thailand, several Eastern European countries and a number of others who suddenly seem to be in the steel business, no doubt encouraged by importers trying to find new sources of product. If such negotiations do not succeed, then unilateral action must be taken, either through antidumping or countervailing duty cases initiated by the Department of Commerce or through section 301 actions taken by the President. In view of the very large dumping margins found against some of these countries, such as over 200 percent in one Argentine case, unilateral action would probably be more effective in excluding these countries from the market than negotiated agreements. In any event, if the total program is to be effective and diversion from one supplier to another is to be prevented, restraints must be global—all suppliers must be covered.

Second, Canada must be dealt with. The President made clear in his September 18 decision that no agreement with Canada would be required. Nevertheless, they remain a significant source of supply and a potential route of diversion. Negotiations have begun and should continue to encourage the Canadians to be reasonable and to refrain from filling the gaps caused by agreements with other producers.

Third, the question of product diversion must be addressed. Several of the agreements reached so far specify only an aggregate limit. Negotiations on specific category sublimits have yet to occur, most notably with Japan, which at 5.8 percent, is our largest foreign supplier.

The issue of product diversion is important because of its potential for distorting the domestic market, raising our prices, and transferring the benefits of this program overseas. As is clear from our experience with the Japanese voluntary restraint on autos, if quantity is limited, foreign manufacturers will change their product mix in favor of their highest value items in an effort to maximize profits on limited sales. Such action distorts the market here by creating artificial increased competition for some products and decreased competition for others—primarily the low profit items that all companies like to avoid. This kind of "cream-skimming" is a particular threat in the case of relatively undifferentiated nonretail commodities like steel, and it will seriously disadvantage the domestic producers that are supposed to be benefiting from this program.

In addition, the absence of specific category sublimits permits large-scale imports of specific products over a short period of time that could adversely affect particular target companies or plants in the United States.

Because of these potential market distortions, Mr. President, our negotiators have worked hard to include sublimits for specific steel mill product categories in each agreement. In most cases they have succeeded. In the case of Japan, however, sublimits have not yet been agreed to, a major omission and yet another example of Japanese unwillingness to cooperate with the United States on major trade policy issues.

The legislation I am introducing today is designed to attack this Japanese recalcitrance. It directs the U.S. Trade Representative to negotiate sublimits within the Japanese agreement for 27 categories of steel mill products—a number sufficient to protect against the diversion I just discussed. In addition, the bill declares that if such negotiations are unsuccessful, the U.S. Trade Representative is required to set the 27 sublimits unilaterally. Finally, a Presidential waiver is provided if the President concludes that use of this provision would be detrimental to achieving the goals of the national steel policy he announced on September 18.

Mr. President, I have discussed this bill with members of the administration, and I rather expect they will ultimately take the position they oppose it—on the grounds the Congress should not be dictating the form and content of executive negotiations. No administration has ever liked the Congress to tell it what to do, and this one is no exception. At the same time, however, I can say with certainty that the administration shares my belief that sublimits must be a part of the Japanese agreement, as well as all the others, and that 27 is an appropriate number of such sublimits. Without question, our negotiators will be working to that end in their upcoming meetings with Japanese officials later this month.

Thus our objectives are the same, and there is no question in my mind that however reluctantly received the authority contained in this bill may be, it will be used with alacrity if the negotiations are unsuccessful, assuming the bill is passed quickly, which I expect to be the case, as I intend to seek a hearing in the Finance Committee as soon as the committee organizes for the 99th Congress.

Mr. President, Ambassadors Brock and Lighthizer have made a good deal of progress on steel since September 18—not as much as I would have liked, and no doubt more than others wanted. But I think we can all agree that when the President has announced a program such as this, it is in our collective interest to see that it is implemented effectively in line with his goals. In other words, we should all want it to work. The only alternative to the success of this program will be renewal of the quota legislation I introduced last year with 28 cosponsors. Enactment of the bill I am introducing today is consistent with the President's program and essential to its success. I hope all Senators will support it.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 11

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

Section 805 of the Steel Import Stabilization Act (Public Law 98-573) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) With respect to any bilateral arrangement as defined in section 804(1) negotiated with Japan and Korea that provides for a limitation on steel products imports based on an aggregate percentage of apparent domestic consumption of steel products, the U.S. Trade Representative shall further negotiate the apportionment of such aggregate limit among the subcategories specified in paragraph (2) of this subsection. If such negotiations are not successfully concluded within 30 days of the date of enactment of this subsection, the U.S. Trade Representative shall unilaterally apportion the aggregate limit among the subcategories, and may revise such subcategories from time to time as he deems appropriate, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in exercising his authority under subsection (c) of this section, shall restrict entry into the United States of steel products in such subcategories to the limits specified by negotiation or unilateral action, as the case may be.

"(2) The subcategories among which the aggregate limit referred to in paragraph (1) shall be apportioned are as follows:

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 12. A bill to protect communications among Americans from interception by foreign governments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FOREIGN SURVEILLANCE PREVENTION ACT OF 1985

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce the Foreign Surveillance Prevention Act of 1985. I introduced similar legislation in previous Congresses, in July 1977 and again in November 1981, in an effort to address what must properly be regarded as the gravest threat to Americans' right to privacy which has yet arisen. I refer to the well-known Soviet practice of making use of its diplomatic establishments in this country to monitor the telephone conversations of Americans on a truly sweeping scale.

In 1982, I had occasion to raise this issue in a letter to the New York Times. The citizens of Glen Cove had expressed concern about what was going on behind the walls of the Soviet estate located in their city. I wrote:

> Unless I am hugely mistaken, spying is going on. More precisely, eavesdropping through the interception of telephone conversations transmitted by microwave.
> We have this from Arkady Shevchenko, formerly Under Secretary General of the United Nations and the most senior Soviet representative to that organization. Last spring on Canadian television (as reported by the A.P.) he stated: "All the top floors of the (Glen Cove) building are full of sophisticated equipment . . . to intercept all conversations of anything which is going on. . . . At least 15 or 17 technicians were working . . . to do this job."

It is not secret that other Soviet diplomatic facilities in New York as well as Washington, DC and San Francisco engage in similar electronic surveillance.

The actions our Government has taken to date have been essentially defensive in nature, expensive and slow to take effect. The Carter administration decided to bury the Federal Government's telephone lines and those of some of its defense contractors; unhappily, this left the rest of us still relatively defenseless. In an interview with David Burnham, reported in the October 7, 1984 New York Times, the head of communications security at the National Security Agency, Walter Deeley, reminded us that U.S. telephone calls remain vulnerable to Soviet electronic surveillance. In Mr. Deeley's words, "They are having us for breakfast. We're hemorrhaging."

More recently, President Reagan issued a national security decision directive which calls for substantial improvements in communications security. While this is a welcome and long overdue development, the measures called for in the directive are quite costly. According to Time magazine ("Is It Safe to Use the Phone?", October 29, 1984), implementation will cost $6 to $8 billion over the next 10 years. Moreover, the actions proposed are, like those of the Carter administration, essentially defensive.

Mr. President, it seems to me that much more is required of our Government. Our Constitution obliges the Government of the United States to ensure that the rights it guarantees—not least the right of privacy—are not violated. It is not for nothing that officials of our Nation are enjoined to protect the Constitution against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

While the Soviet Union may choose to abuse its diplomatic immunity from prosecution under our criminal laws, there is no privilege which entitles its personnel to remain in the United States. This legislation would require the President, upon learning of illegal electronic surveillance by a foreign mission, to demand that it be discontinued and, failing that, declare the diplomats involved persona non grata and expel them.

I do not suggest that such action would be appropriate in every case. Rather, the bill would allow the President to forbear from taking such action if he determined that to do so would seriously compromise intelligence sources and methods.

Nor do I suggest that this bill would obviate all defensive measures. As the Time article points out, the Soviets have listening posts in Cuba which can intercept American communications.

What this legislation would do is reaffirm in a singularly American way that the United States will not tolerate gross invasions of the privacy of its citizens by a totalitarian power which denies even the most elementary privacy rights to its own citizens. I believe this is a principle that all Members of this body can support without qualification.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, my statement on this legislation of November 18, 1981 and the news articles and letter to which I referred in my remarks be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 12

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. That this Act may be cited as the "Foreign Surveillance Prevention Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the widespread use of electronic surveillance and the interception of telecommunications by foreign governments pose a serious threat both to the national security of the United States and to the rights of privacy and association guaranteed to Americans by the Constitution;

(2) that such electronic intelligence activities by foreign governments have been, and are being, carried on under the guise of normal diplomatic relations with the United States; and

(3) that the President of the United States, constitutionally charged with the conduct of the Nation's foreign relations and with the protection of the Constitution of the United States, has the primary responsibility to protect the rights and interests of American citizens as they may be jeopardized by the electronic intelligence activities of foreign powers.

SEC. 3. Whenever the President of the United States has reason, based upon information in his possession, to believe that in any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or any territory or possession of the United States, any individual on whom diplomatic immunity has been conferred by the United States, is willfully engaging in electronic surveillance on behalf of a foreign power, the President shall—

(a) so inform the chairman and ranking minority member, or, in his discretion, the members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, the Select Committee on Intelligence of the Senate, and the Select Committee on Intelligence of the House of Representatives;

(b) so inform those persons, if any, reasonably believed to be particular targets of such surveillance in order that they may take such precautions as they consider advisable, unless he shall determine that to do so would seriously compromise sources or methods of intelligence gathering by the United States;

(c) so inform the Ambassador or Chargé d'Affaires or other representative of such foreign power, and shall demand that such foreign power immediately cease such surveillance, unless he shall determine that to do so would seriously compromise sources or methods of intelligence gathering by the United States; and

(d) thirty days after such demand is made, if the electronic surveillance has not ceased, declare such individual to be persona non grata in the United States, and shall demand that he leave the United States immediately, unless the President shall determine that to do so would cause serious damage to the national security of the United States.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.—As used in this Act—

(a) "electronic surveillance" means the interception of wire or radio communications through the use of any electronic, mechanical, or other device;

(b) "wire or radio communication" means any communication made in whole or in part through the use of facilities for the transmission of communications by the aid of wire, radio, cable, or other like connection between the point of origin and the point of reception furnished or operated by any person engaged as a common carrier in providing or operating such facilities for the transmission of interstate or foreign communications;

(c) "person" means any individual, partnership, association, joint stock company, trust, or corporation;

(d) "electronic, mechanical, or other device" means any device or apparatus which can be used to intercept a wire or radio communication other than any telephone or telegraph instrument, equipment or facility, or any component thereof, furnished to the subscriber or user by a communications common carrier in the ordinary course of its business and being used by the subscriber or user in the ordinary course of its business;

(e) "foreign power" means—

(i) a foreign government or any component thereof, whether or not recognized by the United States;

(ii) a faction of a foreign nation or nations, not substantially composed of United States persons;

(iii) an entity, which is openly acknowledged by a foreign government or governments to be directed and controlled by such foreign government or governments;

(iv) a foreign-based political organization, not substantially composed of United States persons; or

(v) an entity which is directed and controlled by a foreign government or governments; and

(f) "common carrier" shall have the same meaning which is given the term by section 153(h) of title 47 of the United States Code.

S. 1860. A bill to protect communications among Americans from interception by foreign governments, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

FOREIGN SURVEILLANCE PREVENTION ACT OF 1981

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in July 1977, I introduced the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act which addressed what must properly be regarded as the gravest threat to Americans' right to privacy which has yet arisen. I refer to the well-known Soviet practice of making use of its diplomatic establishments in this country to monitor the telephone conversations of Americans on a truly enormous scale.

Through the use of sophisticated electronic technology, the Soviets have been able to eavesdrop on the private telephone conversations of thousands upon thousands of Americans. Whatever the intelligence value of such activity—and perforce it must be substantial—there would exist here a profound problem even if the Soviets had never been able to make use of the information gained in this ongoing effort. For the Constitution of the United States obligates the Government of the United States to insure that the guarantees of the Constitution are not violated. It is not for nothing that we are enjoined to protect the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

I return to this subject today, for the failure of the disclosures of this Soviet activity to stir a proper response in this country is more striking than it has ever been. Let us remember that the information regarding Soviet eavesdropping has been in the public domain since 1975. Indeed, the first reports of it were neither obscure, nor unofficial. The report of the Commission of CIA Activities within the United States, chaired by the late Nelson Rockefeller, said the following on June 6, 1975:

"While making large-scale use of human intelligence sources, the communist countries also appear to have developed electronic collection of intelligence to an extraordinary degree of technology and sophistication for use in the United States and elsewhere throughout the world, and we believe that these countries can monitor and record thousands of private telephone conversations. Americans have a right to be uneasy if not seriously disturbed at the real possibility that their personal and business activities which they discuss freely over the telephone lines be recorded and analyzed by agents of foreign powers."

The bill I introduced on July 21, 1977, called on the President to take forceful action, including the expulsion of foreign diplomatic personnel, to put a stop to widespread electronic eavesdropping being perpetrated by the Soviet Union against the citizens of the United States. At that time, I said:

"The violation of privacy by electronic means, the use of sophisticated electronics equipment to intercept telephone calls, data transmissions, and the like has become a major enterprise of the principal totalitarian government in the world, that of the Soviet Union. Through the use of machinery installed at its diplomatic missions around the United States—in New York, in Washington, D.C. in San Francisco—Soviet espionage services have eavesdropped on "hundreds of thousands, even millions" of Americans (so the Chicago Tribune reported in June of 1975) and have presumably used the information gained thereby to advance the national interests of the Soviet Union. Private communications of all sorts have been violated—and on a scale that dwarfs any previous surveillance effort by friend or foe alike.

"Yet a curious—even eerie—unwillingness exists to confront not merely the dimensions of the problem, but also to imagine that we in the United States can do anything about this! I have stated that I regard it as the responsibility of the government of the United States to protect the right of privacy of all citizens, regardless of whether the threat comes from our own government or foreign governments. I believe that the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution, which protects the right to privacy, is under assault by foreign powers, and that it is time for the U.S. Government to do something about it.

"I cannot stress too strongly that modern technology has given to foreign espionage a new dimension which needs to be understood in this country. The targets of Soviet interception of telephone communications now include our businesses, our banks, our brokerage houses, as frequently as our government agencies. Soviet espionage seeks to penetrate into other aspects of American life—commercial, intellectual, political—as much as it seeks illegal entry into the councils of governments. This is precisely why the problem is now one of interest to all Americans in their daily lives—not an abstract problem for intelligence operatives in trench coats.

"The principle here is simple: so far as electronic surveillance is concerned our law defines what Americans cannot do to each other; it is time for a law which says what foreign governments cannot do to us."

Since then the administration has taken some actions in this area. On November 20, 1977, the New York Times reported that:

"President Carter has approved a broad Government program to make it more difficult for the Soviet Union, other nations or businesses to eavesdrop on telephone communications in the United States.

"Under the program, Federal research on how to improve telephone security will be increased. Nearly all Government telephone messages in Washington, New York and San Francisco are in the process of being routed through underground cables, rather than over the more frequently used but less secure microwave radio towers, and private industry is being actively encouraged to develop and use more secure telephone equipment.

"The officials also said that the United States had made a direct diplomatic approach to the Soviet Union about its eavesdropping here, in connection with the discussions of the high levels of microwave radiation discovered in the vicinity of the American Embassy in Moscow."

More recently, the New York Times revealed some detail about a special unit set up as a result of the 1977 decision to combat such eavesdropping. In a March 26, 1979 article David Burnham reported that:

"The Special Project Office was created to encourage businesses and Federal agencies to protect 'sensitive information' that, experts in the National Security Council say, could be useful to a potential enemy even though it cannot be classified or otherwise controlled by the Government.

"The office is the result of several years of secret debate among the top security advisers of President Carter and former President Gerald R. Ford about ways to secure public and private telephone messages, transmitted throughout the United States by microwave towers or satellites, against interception efforts by the Soviet Union and perhaps other countries.

"Charles K. Wilk, a staff member of the Special Project Office, told a group of communication officials at a convention in Dallas recently that there was no question that 'some sensitive Government information is vulnerable to interception and exploitation and should be better protected.'

"In discussing the vulnerability of some private companies, Mr. Wilk said that 'the Federal Government plans to raise awareness and encourage the use of improved protections.'

"Both Mr. Bortz and Mr. Wilk cautioned against overreaction by the public. 'The Federal Government is not suggesting that everyone's telephone calls are being monitored,' Mr. Wilk said.

"Creation of an agency to curb Soviet surveillance activities in the United States began with a special study conducted by the National Security Council under President Ford.

"During the study, such far-reaching remedies as the abandonment of the widespread use of microwave telecommunication towers and the encouragement of the use of underground cables were considered. But the Council decided at the end of the Ford Administration that the decision should be left to the incoming President.

"Shortly after Mr. Carter took office, the Council resumed its consideration of methods to stop Soviet eavesdropping, and decided about a year ago to adopt a far more modest approach than had been considered by the previous Administration."

And, Mr. President, last Saturday, November 14, 1981, the Times again reported on Soviet espionage activity in New York City where, according to FBI officials, the Bureau's own phones are stamped "not secure" because of Soviet eavesdropping. I ask that it be reprinted in the Record.

The actions which our Government has taken to date have been essentially defensive in nature and have been slow to take effect. At best, they can solve only part of the problem and only until such time as the Soviets develop new methods of counteracting our efforts to block their eavesdropping.

For these reasons, I am obliged to reintroduce my legislation today to stiffen our Nation's opposition to these electronic assaults on the privacy of our people. A democratic society has much of which it can be proud and among these things are openness and respect for the rights of individuals. These characteristics, which we cherish, should not become the playthings of the intelligence apparatus of a totalitarian state.

By reintroducing this legislation, I do more than call attention to our inadequate response to date. I also suggest that the pattern of avoidance which so far has characterized our response can and must be broken. For it is a matter of self-defense, plain and simple, and yet our passivity suggests that we are losing that basic instinct. It is more than time for this subject to be removed from the realm of technological exotica and placed squarely in its proper place—that is, an urgent subject for both our foreign and domestic policies.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"NEW YORK TERMED 'HUB' OF FOREIGN SPIES IN U.S.

"(By Leslie Maitland)

"From the Soviet residence in the Riverdale section of the Bronx, where rooftop equipment permits surveillance of telephones throughout the Northeast, to Russian emigre communities in Brooklyn, where the Federal Bureau of Investigation fears that 'sleeper' Soviet agents live in disguise, American and Russian agents are fighting each other for information.

"Largely because New York City is the home of the United Nations and its many delegates, but also because of its pre-eminence as a business capital in an age when manufacturing advance represent the secrets many foreign governments are most eager to share in, the city is the focus of international espionage efforts.

"According to the FBI, for example, even its own telephones are subject to eavesdropping by Soviet agents. Its own intelligence activities have made the bureau aware of that danger. Every telephone in the bureau's foreign-counterintelligence section is therefore marked with a sticker warning that it is 'not secure.' And for sensitive communication, agents use a sparate, special scrambler phone that requires a different code each day from the National Security Agency in Maryland.

"Understandably, perhaps, espionage is a subject that bureau officials have not discussed often in public. In addition to security reasons for keeping silent, they are subject to criticism both for laxity and for overzealousness. But in a recent series of interviews, the F.B.I.'s foreign counterintelligence experts in New York described some of their methods of operation, their efforts to stymie espionage by other countries and the importance of New York City as a spying center.

"While F.B.I. accounts of intelligence activities cannot be substantiated in most respects because of their secret nature, the agency's descriptions offer a revealing look at what it says are its activities in intelligence gathering.

"According to Donald J. McGorty, the special agent in charge of the bureau's Sino-Satellite foreign counterintelligence section—which focuses on every country but the Soviet Union—New York is actually 'the largest base for foreign intelligence-gathering.'

" 'New York is the hub' he said. 'There are many more diplomats here than anywhere else—even Washington. Even countries with whom we do not have diplomatic relations and who have no embassies have missions at the United Nations. And anyplace these people have establishments, there's an opportunity for espionage.'

"Not all the spying in the city, however, is actually directed at the United States, Mr. McGorty said. Some of it constitutes 'third-country recruitment'—the development of a Libyan spy, for example, by Soviet agents here. The United Nations makes the city a prime location for such enlistment.

"TARGETS OF U.S. AGENTS

"Agents in the Sino-Satellite section devote most of their attention to representatives of 20 so-called 'criteria countries,' designated as top priorities. Under guidelines from the Attorney General, Mr. McGorty said, the bureau needs no specific information or suspicious move to touch off an investigation of a criteria country's actions, but it must be able to present 'specific and articulable facts' to support arguments for inquiries into noncriteria countries.

"He declined to name all of the target countries, but said they included Libya, Communist-bloc countries and the Palestine Liberation Organization. He added that more than 2,000 officials of criteria countries either worked or lived in New York City.

"R. Jean Gray, the special agent in charge of Soviet counterintelligence, said that among more than 600 people the Russians have working in New York, 110 have diplomatic immunity, which extends to their spouses.

" 'About 35 percent of the people with immunity are suspected to be officers of Soviet intelligence services,' Mr. Gray said. 'Experience has indicated that among the remainder, a significant percentage are also members of Soviet intelligence services or are coopted to carry out tasks for those services from time to time.'

"F.B.I. HAS 300 ON THE CASE

"By contrast, the bureau has more than 300 agents assigned to foreign counterintelligence in New York, many less than it had at the height of the Cold War. With détente, the ranks were reduced, but in the past five or six years, chilling trends led to the adding of personnel.

"Mr. McGorty and Mr. Gray say the bureau's espionage mandate is not primarily to gather information, but to detect and prevent spying by foreign agents. This obviously requires identifying spies in the city's foreign population, which calls for delicate judgments as to whether someone is acting outside the scope of his stated diplomatic functions.

"We have to find out who the players are before they play ball," Mr. McGorty said. The easiest way to accomplish that, he added, is to "get one of them to work for us so we'll know what they're up to." The prime recruits are intelligence agents from target countries, but the job of enlisting them is not easy.

"An initial approach, Mr. McGorty said, is generally disguised as simple friendliness. Bureau agents (who are not allowed to operate outside the United States and cannot enter the gates of the United Nations) pose as lawyers or accountants while hobnobbing in the bars and restaurants frequented by representatives of other countries. Overtures are gradual, while agents work at cultivating confidence.

"SHOPPING IN SUPERMARKETS

"In some cases, he said, female F.B.I. agents are dispatched to supermarkets or beauty parlors used by a target's wife to enlist the woman's help in influencing her husband to shift his sympathies.

"Making contact with Soviet targets has become particularly difficult since the opening of their residential complex in the Riverdale section of the Bronx, Mr. Gray said.

"They travel in by special bus from Riverdale together every morning and go back there together every night," he said. "At lunch, they eat in the cafeteria at the Soviet Mission. They don't have a lot of pocket money. You don't find them carousing around town."

"Besides having to evaluate whether Soviet employees are really serving a legal function in New York, the bureau has also faced a problem in discerning whether spies are being slipped in among the 400 Soviet emigres who arrive in the country each month.

"MAY BECOME TAXI DRIVERS

"'It used to be they would take a name from a tombstone in Michigan or someplace of someone who died at the age of 2 and write for a birth certificate and spend years creating a false identity.' Mr. Gray said. 'Now all they have to do is send him in as a Soviet emigre. An illegal may come in and spend five years driving a taxi, but then be called into action.'

"'By then,' the agent continued, 'he may even be a citizen, and he's learned the language. Maybe then he seeks a job with Grumman Aerospace, saying that in Russia he was an engineer.' At that point he grains access to potentially important information.

"The bureau has been attempting to develop a profile of the sort of person who may be only masquerading as a refugee. When suspicion arises, Mr. Gray said, 'we try to interview them, or we try to neutralize their activities by interviewing everyone they're talking to—or else we notify the Immigration Service that the person should be returned."

"In some cases, he said, the spy may not be posing as a refugee, but actually be an emigre unwillingly pressed into service as a Soviet agent—threatened, for example, with reprisals against family members still in the Soviet Union.

"CONCERN ABOUT TECHNOLOGY

"Ideally, bureau officials said, reluctant Soviet spies can be utilized as double agents to funnel misinformation. But this can be tricky, for the bureau may be deceived into believing it has a double agent working for the United States, when the spy is really a triple agent—a Soviet agent really working for the Soviets while pretending to the F.B.I. to have switched his loyalty.

"'You can be reeled in for a year before you realize you've been hooked,' Mr. Gray said.

"'The transfer of American technology to criteria countries—of growing concern, not just Customs Service and the Commerce Department—is regarded as a major focus of current spying efforts.

"'Our only salvation is that they can't possibly assimilate all they're getting,' Mr. McGorty said. He added that his agents regularly instructed companies with top-secret government contracts about how to guarantee security."

MOSCOW'S BIG EARS IN GLEN COVE

To the EDITOR:

Karen Polk's reminiscences of childhood fantasies of espionage going on behind the walls of the Soviet estate in Glen Cove ["What Lurked Behind the Glen Cove Fence," Op-Ed Aug. 7] ends with some adult questions about what is going on there.

Unless I am hugely mistaken, spying is going on. More precisely, eavesdropping through the interception of telephone conversations transmitted by microwave.

We have this from Arkady Schevchenko, formerly Under Secretary General of the United Nations and the most senior Soviet representative to that organization. Last spring on Canadian television (as reported by the A.P.) he stated: "All the top floors of the [Glen Cove] building are full of sophisticated equipment . . . to intercept all conversations of anything which is going on. . . . At least 15 or 17 technicians were working . . . to do this job."

In 1977, I raised this general subject—Soviet eavesdropping—within the councils of the Carter Administration. The response ought to be better known. Convinced there was a threat, the Federal Government decided to bury its own telephone lines and those of its defense contractors, leaving the rest of us relatively defenseless.

I therefore introduced legislation requiring the President, upon learning of such illegal activity by a foreign mission, to demand that it be discontinued and, failing that, declare the diplomats involved persona non grata and expel them.

The Times, on July 25, 1977, supported the principles reflected in the bill, stating: "If a member of the Soviet Embassy were caught stealing and shipping economic data back home, our authorities would, we hope, see to it that he was shipped back home. The blunt fact is that a foreign government on American shores is spying on American citizens. And notwithstanding the niceties of diplomatic immunity and extraterritoriality and rigamarole, the response should be equally blunt."

Still there was no response from the executive branch. At a hearing on April 21, 1977, by the Senate's Select Committee on Intelligence, I asked the then general counsel to the Central Intelligence Agency whether he did not consider the Soviet intrusion into our telephone system a violation of citizens' Fourth Amendment rights. The counsel replied that the Fourth Amendment only protects citizens against violations of rights by their own government!

I have reintroduced the bill (now S. 1860). If the current Administration would but nod, it would pass. In the meantime, it might let off lecturing the people of Glen Cove about their duties to respect the civil rights of Soviet diplomats.

WHAT LURKED BEHIND THE GLEN COVE FENCE

(By Karen Polk)

GLEN COVE, N.Y.—I grew up in a house a stone's throw from a nondescript fence that marked the back end of the Killenworth estate here. The fence surrounds the 37 acres and mansion used by the Soviet Union's delegation to the United Nations for its summer residence.

As children, my friends and I fantasized that the place was a hotbed of Soviet espionage, occupied by men wearing black coats, and all of them resembling Aleksei N. Kosygin. There was no doubt in our minds that the fence at the end of the block (most likely electrified) marked the outer reaches of Siberia beyond which no one ventured. The bold explorer who did make it over to the other side for a peek was the object of admiration and fear: He had made it there and back.

Our fantasies were products of a kind of cold war perspective that pitted us against them, G.I. Joe against the Reds. We spent endless hours plotting our righteous assault with 007 spy rifles on the army that surely hid behind the mansion walls.

The disclosure in May that the estate was the home of sophisticated espionage equipment used to spy on important industries on Long Island came as no big surprise to me, now an adult. I knew all along that there was a real reason why no one but the delivery boy from the local market was allowed within the estate complex. And I knew that those were real F.B.I. men perched on top of the nearby Y.M.C.A. building with binoculars. All this only served to reinforce everything my friends and I had imagined to be true as children.

By contrast, Glen Cove officials acted surprised. The Federal Government was mute. The F.B.I. would neither confirm nor deny the reports that were originally carried on Canadian television and described the intelligence equipment at the estate.

Mayor Alan M. Parente and the City Council voted to revoke the recreational passes that had been given to residents of the estate. They reasoned that since Killenworth was a diplomatic residence that paid no taxes to the city and that was engaged in spying, of all things, against the better interests of our nation, Glen Cove would protest in the only manner in its power: It would keep the Russians off the beaches, tennis courts and golf course.

At that time, the Council's action seemed oddly appropriate. In the fantasy world in which we still regarded the Russian presence here, the Mayor was the bold explorer who stood up to the Reds. For a while there was little reaction. The Federal Government was indifferent. The Mayor had made it there and back.

The other day, the State Department finally reacted by requesting that the City Council reinstate the recreational privileges. The wording of the letter was strong and stated that Glen Cove was interfering in the proper conduct of international affairs. Washington was seriously concerned that the Soviet diplomats be given the proper privileges.

The affair assumed storybook proportions, and the news media have evoked a comparison with "The Mouse That Roared." It was Glen Cove against the Reds—and now the Feds as well. The whole thing seemed a little silly—Us against Them; our raised tennis rackets and golf clubs faced off against nuclear warheads.

There is more to this story though. A few months ago, someone took pot shots with a rifle at windows on the estate. They used real bullets. In years past, demonstrations outside the gates, which open on to a well-traveled road leading to the local high school, were accompanied by bomb threats and the discovery of mysterious packages at the entrance. The whole thing isn't really so silly after all.

The city has taken action and the Government has referred the issue to the Justice Department. And now the Soviet regime has retaliated by barring our diplomats in Moscow from using a beach on the Moskva River.

Why didn't the State Department ever inform any Glen Cove administration about the seriousness or the extent of the Soviet operations going on within its boundaries? And why is the city then left with none other than the ridiculous policy of revoking tennis passes to protest a spying operation that seems to operate with impunity?

All recent attempts by Glen Cove to learn anything about the operation have been met by statements from the F.B.I. that the information is classified. There is probably spying going on, the Bureau says, but its lips are sealed about details.

Intelligence operations have always thrived under a veil of secrecy. Equally, fantasies and misconceptions and delusions and even silliness thrive on the mystery of intelligence operations. Maybe our childhood imaginings were not farfetched, and then again maybe they were. We don't really know for sure. But at least now we know a little bit better who is responsible for perpetuating them.

500,000 MORE SPY-PROOF PHONES PROPOSED BY TOP SECURITY AGENCY

(By David Burnham)

Washington, Oct. 6—The National Security Agency is proposing that the Government and industry be equipped with as many as 500,000 telephones that can be secured against interception

The Agency is convinced that the Soviet Union and the other nations are obtaining important intelligence from United States telephone.

Although cloaked in secrecy, a program like the one the agency proposes could cost hundreds of millions of dollars. The project could also lead to a new role for the intelligence agency in private industry. Under the proposal, production of the secure phones would begin in two years.

REAL SECURITY THREAT IS SEEN

The decision by the largest and most secretive American intelligence organization to propose a major effort to combat telephone eavesdropping was disclosed by Walter G. Deeley, the senior official in charge of protecting government communications.

He said in an interview that electronic eavesdropping by the Soviet Union, other countries he did not name and corporations posed a genuine threat to the security of the United States.

"I want the country to be aware that if we don't protect our communications, it can do a great deal of damage to us," Mr. Deeley said. "this is a problem that goes to the very fabric of our society. It is not just a worry of the national security agencies."

MOVE BY CARTER ADMINISTRATION

He said he believed the United States was in "deep trouble," adding: "They are having us for breakfast. We're hemorrhaging. Your progeny may not enjoy the rights we do today if we don't do something."

A Reagan Administration official familiar with intelligence matters agreed there was a surveillance problem, but he also said no final decision had been made to go beyond research or to request money to produce the phones.

In August, the National Security Agency sent a letter to more than 2,000 major corporations saying, "The U.S. has initiated an effort to develop lowcost, user-friendly secure telephone instruments."

The number of secure telephones currently used by Government agencies is classified information. But the Carter Administration said there were 100 such phones in the Government, and it planned to buy 150 more. The cost of each phone then was $35,000. The Reagan Administration has bought an unknown number of additional secure phones.

The phones proposed by the National Security Agency would be used by the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense and State departments, military contractors and other private corporations such as banks that handle information of possible use to a foreign power.

BACKING COMPUTER RESEARCH

The National Security Agency was set up by President Truman in a secret executive order in 1952 to conduct electronic intelligence all over the world and protect the sensitive messages of the United States.

It has used its secret budget, now estimated at $4 billion a year, to make itself a major sponsor of advanced computer research, and it has played an important covert role in shaping national communication policy. Its top officials almost never grant on-the-record interviews.

"Anyone making a phone call to the West Coast or Boston from the Washington area has no idea how the conversation will be transmitted," Mr. Deeley said. "It might go via fiber optics, conventional cable, microwave towers or one of the 19 domestic satellites. If it is going via satellite you can presume the other guy is listening to it."

SECURING COMPUTER DATA

Asked for specific examples of electronic espionage, he said he could not disclose them because they were classified. Citing individual cases, he said, would give the Russians important clues about the ability of the United States to detect their efforts.

Mr. Deeley said his agency was developing a similar program to improve the security of computerized data. "This area has blown up extraordinarily fast," he said. "In many ways computerized data is more harmful than telephones because it's all record information.

"The financial institutions have become aware of this problem. The insurance companies are becoming aware. The rest of the private sector companies are just now beginning to see that if they are going to survive, they have to protect their communications."

He said increasing American use of communication satellites and microwave transmission towers made it economically possible for almost any nation and many large corporations to intercept messages, then use high-speed computers to sort them out.

CONGRESSMAN OPPOSES MOVE

A spokesman for the American Telephone and Telegraph Company said he could not estimate the amount of telephone traffic that was subject to relatively easy interception because it was transmitted by microwave towers or satellites. But he added that one rough indicator was that 70 percent of A.T.&T.'s domestic equipment and 60 percent of its overseas equipment transmitted telephone messages through the atmosphere rather than by cable, which is harder to intercept.

Few members of Congress other than members of the Senate and House Intelligence Committees are aware of the National Security Agency's plan. One exception is Representative Glenn English, Democrat of Oklahoma and chairman of the House Government Operations Subcommittee on Information. In a letter Sept. 24 to the General Accounting Office, a Congressional investigative arm, he said, "There can, of course, be no objection to maintaining adequate security for classified information."

He said, however, that he knew "from past experience that the national security bureaucracy has a tendency to require a degree of protection for classified information that may be excessive." He added, "Technological security measures are very expensive, and my concern is that the unnecessary use of these measures is a waste of scarce Federal funds."

UNCLASSIFIED STUDY IS ASKED

Mr. English asked the G.A.O. to prepare an unclassified report on whether the proposed protective measures were necessary and worth the cost.

Henry Geller, director of the National Telecommunications and Information Administration in the Carter Administration and now the head of the Washington Center for Public Policy Research of Duke University, raised questions about the project.

He said that when the Carter Administration studied Soviet eavesdropping, it decided that its biggest security agency should be responsible for assuring the communications security of the American military and American intelligence services but that the Commerce Department should be responsible for working with private companies.

"There was a strong belief in the Carter Administration that the United States has a long and important tradition that the telephone systems and broadcasting groups are independent, privately owned entities," he said. "Adopting a plan that gives the N.S.A., a branch of the Pentagon, an important role in the communication network of private corporations and civilian agencies of government is a significant policy change that should be carefully examined by Congress before it is adopted."

FIVE CONTRACTS AWARDED

Mr. Deeley said his agency's concern prompted it earlier this year to award five of the major American communication companies small contracts to conduct individual studies; the object would be to determine whether they could mass-produce a low-cost, easy-to-use telephone that would be difficult to intercept. The companies are A.T. & T, the GTE Corporation, the ITT Corporation, the Motorola Corporation and the RCA Corporation.

Mr. Deeley did not describe the telephones, but experts in the field said each would presumably have a small computer that would transform the voice signals into a stream of coded digits. They said this would require time and expensive equipment for an outsider to decode the message.

However, after the coded message was transmitted by conventional means to another special telephone, the receiving unit's computer could quickly turn the digits back into an understandable voice.

As a result of the preliminary studies supported by his agency, Mr. Deeley said that he hoped to get bids on the project in November and sign an agreement with two of the five companies before the end of this year, and that production of the devices could begin before the end of 1986. "We're talking about a half a million phones," Mr. Deeley said.

While the Carter Administration paid $35,000 for each such phone, Mr. Deeley said the N.S.A. hoped that mass production could cut the cost.

"Communications security is like insurance," he said. "It has no intrinsic value until it is needed. Some people buy insurance, some don't. If you are a responsible person with a family, you take out a little term insurance. If you aren't, you buy a case of beer."

Mr. Deeley said a major investment in secure telephones by the private sector would result in a substantial reduction of the cost of such equipment for the Federal Government.

"If Exxon or Hanover Trust want to protect themselves," he said, "they ought to be able to get the right equipment to achieve that goal. If they don't care about other people reading their mail, that's their business."

IS IT SAFE TO USE THE PHONE?

The tapping of telephone conversations has long been recognized as a security threat, and the rise in microwave and satellite transmission of conversations has made electronic eavesdropping easier than ever. Yet even though all Presidents since Franklin Roosevelt have conducted much of their business over secure, or scrambled, phone lines, the U.S. has been bewilderingly slow in dealing with another potentially enourmous security problem: most Government and business officials daily discuss sensitive matters over ordinary, unsecured equipment.

As new technology has increasingly enabled global adversaries to sort through vast amounts of airborne telebabble in search of key words and phrases, ordinary telecommunications have become a priceless source of intelligence for the Soviet Union and, possibly, other nations. Says New York Democrat Daniel Patrick Moynihan, Vice Chairman of the Senate's Select Committee on Intelligence: "The targets of Soviet interception of telephone communications now include our businesses, our banks, our brokerage houses, as frequently as our Government agencies . . . Private communications of all sorts have been violated, and on a scale that dwarfs any previous surveillance effort by friend or foe."

Now the Reagan Administration is belatedly moving to stanch this immense intelligence drain. The President has quietly signed a document known as National Security Decision Directive No. 145. It gives overall responsibility for ensuring the security of communications in the Government and the defense industry to the National Security Agency (NSA), the secrecy-shrouded behemoth whose primary function since its founding in 1952 has been the collection and analysis of other nations' communication traffic. Under Reagan's directive, the NSA will search for ways of protecting the integrity of sensitive telecommunications and federal computer information, which increasingly are two interrelated parts of a common technology. Estimated cost over the next ten years: $6 billion to $8 billion.

The most visible part of the stepped-up security will be a massive increase in the use of secure telephones, which have so far been parceled out to federal officials with unusual frugality. Less than four years ago, intelligence sources say, the combined networks of secure telephones operated by the Federal Government probably numbered just upwards of 1,000 units. That total has risen steadily under the Reagan Administration; the exact number is secret, but unofficial estimates put the new total at between 2,000 and 3,000 units. One reason the Government has been slow to install scrambled lines has been the cost: each secure unit runs about $31,000. Another has been complaints from users that voice quality is poor. Even so, concedes Walter Deeley, the NSA's deputy director for communications security, a study he conducted last year on communications security showed telephones to be the biggest leakage problem.

Working with five of the nation's largest manufacturers of telephone equipment, (AT&T, ITT, Motorola, RCA and GTE), NSA officials believe technology has been developed that will lead to what Deeley, in computer jargon calls "a user-friendly secure phone" at a cost of less than $2,000 a unit. Scrambling units in current use weigh about 70 lbs. and take up the space of two filing-cabinet drawers. Electronics experts expect the new units to employ small, inexpensive microcircuits built directly into the telephone receiver. The scrambler converts signals produced by conversation into electronic "white noise" that is meaningless until disencrypted, or unscrambled, on the other end of the line.

Deeley predicts that production of the new generation of secure phones will begin within two years. By the end of the decade, NSA officials plan to install half a million of them: 200,000 in Government offices and an additional 300,000 in private companies that have access to classified or sensitive Government information. Within ten years they expect the total number of secure telephones in the U.S. to reach 2 million, or about one out of every 120 of the nation's horns. "Communication security is not like guns, ships or bullets," says Deeley. "It's sort of like insurance; it has no intrinsic value at a particular moment. But we must become serious about it."

Many experts are also concerned that there is leakage of valuable technical information through foreign eavesdropping on the telecommunications of private firms. The Commerce Department had considered a program to encourage private businesses to take more security measures, but the Government now tends to rely on competitive pressures to force companies to guard their secrets.

The U.S. began losing physical control of its telecommunications in the 1960s, when more and more began to be transmitted through the air waves rather than through cables. AT&T currently estimates that it uses satellites or microwave towers for 70% of its domestic traffic and 60% of its traffic abroad. Both forms of atmospheric transmission are easily interceptible on Soviet listening equipment that is doubtless installed in the U.S.S.R.'s diplomatic properties in the U.S. and elsewhere. The Kremlin's listening post in Cuba, for example, can pick up virtually all traffic from U.S. domestic communication satellites. Says an NSA official: "They just sit down there with their huge vacuum cleaner and suck everything up." In recent years the Soviets have developed computers that can cull such intelligence with much more sophistication than earlier models, and not just in search of defense secrets. "A computer can put together those bits and pieces," says an NSA official. "And even if the vast majority of what was said is unclassified, the other side can put it together and save billions in research." Indeed, U.S. officials are convinced that the Soviets are targeting telecommunications involving U.S. space shuttle personnel in an effort to do just that.

Though cutting back on the Soviet Union's ability to eavesdrop is the primary purpose of the new telesecurity program, U.S. officials point out that it could also foil surveillance attempts by other rivals, including unscrupulous economic competitors. Moreover, as Reagan has pointed out, the same technology used in foreign intelligence operations is increasingly available to "terrorist groups and criminal elements."

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 13. A bill for the relief of Rockland County, NY; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RELIEF OF ROCKLAND COUNTY, NY

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce legislation that would authorize Federal financial assistance to the government of Rockland County, NY, to help defray the county's expenses in connection with the so-called Brinks robbery-murder trial. This bill is identical to the legislation introduced in the House by my distinguished colleague from New York, Congressman GILMAN.

It is unusual legislation for a unique case—one with prohibitive costs for a small county and a compelling Federal interest in prosecuting the defendants, warranting special consideration for the costs of the trial.

The crime is well known: The glare of national publicity that surrounded the crime significantly complicated the county's job of prosecuting the suspects, lasting some 32 months. The five defendants—two wanted by the FBI for crimes committed with underground terrorist groups—were held in the county's custody for 9 months, under heavy guard. The county also had to provide electronic screening devices, closed-circuit television cameras, weapons, and other items for the trial, at its own expense. In all, Rockland County had to hire 88 additional guards for the trial, at a cost of more than $5 million.

A grant of $500,000 from the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration block grant funds in 1982 was a welcome first step, but clearly not enough to defray the trial's substantial cost. Rockland County, with a population of just over 250,000, surely should not be expected to bear the financial burden of this extraordinary case without further assistance from the Federal Government.

The Federal interest in this case is readily apparent and the Federal Government's recognition of the need to provide financial assistance already has been demonstrated. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to give this legislation serious consideration, and provide the taxpayers of Rockland County the relief which they deserve.

S. 13

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Attorney General of the United States (hereinafter referred to as the "Attorney General") shall reimburse the government of Rockland County, New York, for all reasonable expenses incurred in connection with the transfer and trial of the criminal actions entitled "People of the State of New York v. Katherine Boudin, David Gilbert, Judith Clark, Samuel Brown, and Donald Weems" (Rockland County indictments numbered 81-285; 82-6; transferred to Orange County) and "People of the State of New York v. Katherine Boudin and Samuel Brown" (Rockland County indictments numbered 81-285; 82-6; transferred to Westchester County). Reimbursement under this Act shall be made to Rockland County for all reasonable expenses directly incurred as a result of these criminal actions, as well as for those reasonable expenses indirectly incurred as a result of the changes of venue in these actions to other locations within New York State. Reimbursable items include, but are not limited to—

(1) the cost of prosecuting the defendants;

(2) the cost of providing and maintaining court room security in these criminal actions; and

(3) the cost of ensuring and maintaining the safety and security of the defendants and the residents of the State of New York in connection with these criminal actions.

SEC. 2. The government of Rockland County shall keep accurate and detailed records pertaining to all reasonable expenses incurred in connection with these trials. Such records shall remain subject to audit and reexamination by the Attorney General and Comptroller General of the United States for three years after the date of enactment of this Act. Following the completion of each criminal action described in section 1, the government of Rockland County shall submit to the Attorney General a final and detailed report disclosing all reasonable expenses incurred in connection with these criminal actions. The Attorney General shall examine each report and determine the amount of reimbursement for which Rockland County is eligible under this Act.

SEC. 3. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for any fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1985 such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I again am cosponsoring legislation to relieve Rockland County, NY, of part of the truly extraordinary burdens it has had to bear as a result of the notorious Brink's murder and robbery case.

On October 21, 1981, a gang of terrorists held up a Brink's armored truck at the Nanuet Shopping Mall in Rockland County. They murdered a security guard and two local policemen. Two criminal cases resulting from these crimes have been tried in New York State courts. Rockland County, as the place of original venue, has had to bear the full brunt of the costs of these trials, which now exceed $5 million.

During the 98th Congress, on September 19, 1984, I testified before the House Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Administrative Law and Governmental Relations in support of the forerunner of this bill, H.R. 5763, introduced by Congressman Gilman. I applaud the Congressman and Senator Moynihan for introducing this legislation in the 99th Congress.

The cases for which we seek reimbursement are no ordinary local matters. These cases have received national publicity as the "trials of the century." Defendants in both cases are identified with a number of radical and revolutionary groups, including the Weather Underground and the Black Liberation Army. They have declared their ultimate purpose to be the creation of a separate nation out of five Southern States. Most of the costs of the Brink's trials are directly attributable to the round-the-clock courthouse and jailhouse security precautions the notoriety of the defendants has made necessary.

The bill I cosponsor today has been modified from the ones I have previously supported to reflect the suggestions offered by the Congressmen present at last September's hearing. It provides for very careful and detailed recordkeeping and reporting by Rockland County and auditing by the Justice Department.

I urge my colleagues to give this carefully crafted legislation their full support.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. BENTSEN):

S. 14. A bill to amend the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980; to the Committee on Finance.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCE RESPONSE ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, along with my distinguished colleague Senator BENTSEN, legislation to amend the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA) to establish a new tax on the disposal and long-term storage of hazardous waste. This tax would serve two purposes. It would provide an additional source of revenue to finance an expanded Superfund, and it would provide a new incentive for better hazardous waste management practices.

The Superfund program was created in 1980—by the CERCA law—to fund the cleanup of the Nation's abandoned hazardous waste dump sites. CERCLA establishes a tax on 42 chemical feedstocks, crude oil, and imported petroleum products to finance the $1.6 billion Superfund. The tax was designed to collect 86 percent of the $1.6 billion trust fund, with the remaining 14 percent coming from general revenues. The current Superfund tax expires on September 30, 1985.

The bill I am introducing today would establish a so-called waste-end tax—that is, a tax on the disposal and long-term storage of hazardous waste—to take effect on January 1, 1986. The tax rates in the bill are designed to raise $1.5 billion over 5 years, or about $300 million per year.

Mr. President, as we once again address the issue of how best to finance the Superfund program—and we look to new revenue sources—I believe it most reasonable and wise to consider a tax on the disposal and long-term storage of hazardous waste. I hope my colleagues will agree and I urge them to join in support of such a tax.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill and a summary be printed in the RECORD in full.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 14

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 101. Short Title, This Act may be cited as the "Hazardous Substance Response Act of 1985"

SEC. 102. Title II of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended adding a new subtitle as follows:

"Subtitle D—Imposition of Tax on Disposal or Long-Term Storage of Hazardous Waste

"SEC. 241. Chapter 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding the following new subchapter:

"Subchapter D—Tax on Disposal or Long-Term Shortage of Hazardous Waste

"Section 4691. Imposition of Tax
"Section 4692. Definitions
"Section 4693. Records, Statements and Returns

"SECTION 4691. IMPOSITION OF TAX

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There is hereby imposed a tax on (1) the receipt of a hazardous waste for disposal at a qualified hazardous waste disposal facility or (2) long-term storage of a hazardous waste in a qualified hazardous waste storage facility.

"(b) AMOUNT OF TAX.—The amount of the tax imposed by subsection (a) shall be:

(1) $45 for each ton of hazardous waste which is disposed of by landfill, in waste piles, or by surface impoundment;

(2) $25 for each ton of hazardous waste which is disposed of by ocean dumping or land treatment;

(3) $5 for each ton of hazardous waste which is disposed of by underground injection;

(4) $45 for each ton of hazardous waste which is placed in long-term storage.

"(c) ALTERNATIVE COMPUTATION OF TAX.—Under regulations provided by the Secretary, if the owner or operator of a qualified hazardous waste disposal or qualified hazardous waste long-term storage facility can establish the amount of water of the hazardous waste deposited for disposal or for long-term storage, then such owner or operator may elect to pay a tax of $50 per ton on the amount of waste deposited for disposal or storage, reduced by the weight of water, in lieu of the taxes that would otherwise be paid under this section.

"(d) EXCLUSION FOR CERTAIN WASTES.—The tax imposed by subsection (a) shall not apply to the following:

"(1) The disposal or long-term storage of wastes which are, as of the date of enactment of this Act, exempt from regulation as a hazardous waste under Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended. In the event that any such waste is determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, following studies as required under Section 8002 of such Act, to pose a potential danger to human health and environment, and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency promulgates regulations for the disposal of such waste, then the Administrator shall transmit to both Houses of Congress, along with such regulations, his recommendation for imposing a tax, if any, on the disposal or long-term storage of such waste. A tax shall be imposed under subsection (a) on such waste only when authorized by Act of Congress.

"(2) The disposal or long-term storage of wastes which are not, as of the date of enactment of this Act, identified or listed under Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. A tax shall be imposed under subsection (a) on such waste only when authorized by Act of Congress.

"(3) The disposal or long-term storage of wastes in a surface impoundment which (a) contains treated waste water during the secondary or tertiary phase of a biological treatment facility subject to a permit issued under section 402 of the Clean Water Act (or which holds such treated waste water after treatment and prior to discharge), and (b) is in compliance with generally applicable ground water monitoring requirements for facilities with permits under section 3005(c) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(4) The disposal or long-term storage of (a) any waste by any person in the course of carrying out any removal or remedial action under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 if such disposal is carried out in accordance with a plan approved by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency or the State, (b) any waste removed from any facility listed on the National Priorities List (NPL), or (c) any waste removed from a facility for which notification has been provided to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency pursuant to the provisions of Section 105 or 103(c) respectively, Title I, of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980.

"(e) LIABILITY FOR THE TAX.—The tax imposed by this section shall be imposed on the following:

"(1) The owner or operator of the qualified hazardous waster disposal facility or qualified hazardous waste storage facility at which the hazardous waste is disposed of or stored.

"(2) In the case of hazardous waste that is required by regulation to be disposed of or stored at a qualified hazardous waste disposal facility or a qualified hazardous waste storage facility but is disposed of or stored for a long term at other than a qualified hazardous waste disposal facility or a qualified hazardous waste storage facility, the person disposing of the hazardous waste.

(f) CREDIT FOR PRIOR TAX.—(1) A credit shall be allowed in the computation of any tax due under this section on the disposal of a hazardous waste for any tax previously paid under this section by the disposer on the long-term storage of such hazardous waste.

"(2) In the event that a person who has paid a tax under this section on the long-term storage of a hazardous waste causes such hazardous waste to be delivered to and received by another person who is the owner or operator of a qualified hazardous waste disposal facility, then such person who paid the tax on the long-term storage shall be allowed a credit for such tax in the computation of any tax subsequently due on the long-term storage or disposal of a hazardous waste.

"(3) For purposes of determining any credit allowances for fungible waste under the provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2), it shall be presumed that the last of such waste placed in a qualified hazardous waste storage facility shall be the first to be removed from such facility.

"(g) FRACTIONAL PART OF TON.—In the case of a fraction of a ton, the tax imposed by this section shall be the same fraction of the amount of such tax imposed on a whole ton.

"(h) PROSPECTIVE APPLICATION OF TAX.—The taxes imposed in this section shall not apply to the hazardous waste which is received for disposal or placed into long-term storage prior to the effective date of this Act.

"(i) TERMINATION.—The taxes imposed in this section shall not apply after September 30, 1990.

"SECTION 4692. DEFINITIONS

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subchapter:

"(1) DISPOSAL.—The term 'disposal' means the discharge, deposit, injection, dumping or placing of any hazardous waste into or on any land or water so that such hazardous waste may enter the environment. 'Disposal' shall not include the treatment or reclamation of hazardous waste or the storage of hazardous waste in a facility described in the definition of 'Qualified Hazardous Waste Storage Facility' below.

"(2) LONG-TERM STORAGE.—The term 'long-term storage' means remaining within the confines of a qualified hazardous waste storage facility for one year or more. For the purpose of determining the length of time in storage, it shall be presumed in the case of fungible waste that the last waste placed in a qualified hazardous waste stroage facility shall be the first to be removed from such facility.

"(3) QUALIFIED HAZARDOUS WASTE STORAGE FACILITY.—The term 'qualified hazardous waste storage facility' means any storage facility, waste pile or surface impoundment, permitting of accorded interim status under Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. 'Qualified hazardous waste storage facilities' shall not include any hazardous waste treatment facilities.

"(4) WASTE PILE.—The term 'waste pile' is a quantity of hazardous waste heaped together as a means of storage as defined under regulations promulgated by the Administrator or the Environmental Protection Agency pursuant to Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(5) SURFACE IMPOUNDMENT.—The term 'surface impoundment' is an impoundment in which quantities of hazardous wastes are collected as a means of storage as defined under regulations promulgated by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency pursuant to Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(6) QUALIFIED HAZARDOUS WASTE DISPOSAL FACILITY.—The term 'qualified hazardous waste disposal facility' means any disposal facility permitted or accorded interim status under Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act or under Section 102 of the Marine Protection, Research and Sanctuaries Act, or Part C of the Safe Drinking Water Act. 'Qualified hazardous waste disposal facility' shall not include any hazardous waste treatment facilities.

"(7) HAZARDOUS WASTE TREATMENT FACILITIES.—The term 'hazardous waste treatment facilities' means any facility employing any method, technique, or process designed to change the physical, chemical, or biological character or composition of any hazardous waste so as to convert such waste to a non-hazardous waste.

"(8) TREATMENT.—The term 'treatment', when used in connection with hazardous waste, means a method, technique or process designed to change the physical, chemical or biological character or composition of any hazardous waste so as to convert such a waste to a non-hazardous waste; except that there may be a byproduct or residue from such method, technique or process that would be considered a hazardous waste under Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

"(9) HAZARDOUS WASTE.—The term 'hazardous waste' means any waste:

"(A) identified or listed under Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, other than waste the regulation of which has been suspended by Act of Congress, and

"(B) subject to the recording or record-keeping requirements of Section 3002 and 3004 of such Act.

"(10) TON.—The term 'ton' means 2000 pounds.

"(11) RECEIPT.—The term 'receipt' means the act of the owner or operator of a qualified hazardous waste disposal facility by which such owner or operator, at an off-site facility, signs, or is required by regulation to sign, the manifest or shipping pages accompanying the hazardous waste, or at an on-site facility, enters, or is required to do so by regulation, the description and quantity of the hazardous waste in the qualified hazardous waste disposal facility operating record.

"(12) NON-HAZARDOUS WASTE.—The term "non-hazardous waste" means any waste that is not identified or listed as hazardous waste and Section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Non-hazardous waste shall include the air and water effluents permitted by the federal government or by delegated state agencies under the Clean Air Act or Clean Water Act.

"(13) RECLAMATION OF HAZARDOUS WASTES.—The term 'reclamation of hazardous waste' means any hazardous waste that is processed to recover a usable product or any such waste that is regenerated. The term also includes hazardous wastes that are employed as an ingredient (including use as an intermediate) in an industrial process to make a product. The term also includes hazardous wastes that are employed in a particular function or application as an effective substitute for a commercial product. The term does not include hazardous wastes that are reused in a manner analogous to land disposal or incineration, including but not limited to, hazardous wastes that are used to produce products that are applied to land or hazardous wastes burned for energy recovery used to produce a fuel or contained in fuels.

"Every person who disposes of, or stores hazardous wastes for one year or more subject to taxation under this subchapter shall keep records, render such statements, make such returns, and comply with rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe to ensure proper assessment, payment, and collection of the taxes imposed by Section 4691. The Secretary shall consult with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to ensure that records, statements, and returns required to be kept, rendered, and made under this section shall be consistent, to the extend possible, with the reports required to be submitted to the Administrator under the Solid Waste Disposal Act. The Secretary may require any person who generates, transports, disposes of, or stores hazardous wastes for one year or more and who is required to maintain records under the Solid Waste Disposal Act, the Marine Protection, Research and Sanctuaries Act or the Safe Drinking Water Act, to submit copies of such reports or make such reports available to the Secretary as required."

"SEC. 242. The Table of Subchapters for Chapter 38 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"Subchapter D—Tax on Disposal or Long-Term Storage of Hazardous Waste."

"SEC. 243(a). EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this Act, unless otherwise provided, shall take effect January 1, 1986.

(b) STUDY.—Not later than January 1, 1987, and annually thereafter, through 1989, the Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, shall submit to Congress a report on the amount of revenues being collected in accordance with this subchapter and his recommendations, if any, for changes in the tax imposed under this subchapter in order to—

(1) raise an amount of revenue equivalent to the anticipated amount of revenue from the tax originally imposed under this subchapter,

(2) ensure that the tax is discouraging the disposal of waste in an environmentally unsound manner, and

(3) ensure that the tax is being collected with maximum administrative feasibility.

SEC. 103. Section 221(b)(1) of the Comprehensive, Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding a new sub-paragraph as follows:

"(F) the amounts received in the Treasury under section 4691 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES RESPONSE ACT OF 1985—SUMMARY

OBJECTIVES

1. To provide an additional source of revenue to supplement the feedstock tax in financing an expanded Superfund.

2. To provide an incentive for better hazardous waste management practices.

TAXABLE EVENT

Receipt of hazardous waste for disposal or long-term storage (one year or more) at a qualified hazardous waste disposal or storage facility regulated under the Resources Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA).

Disposal includes use of landfills, ocean dumping, deep well injection, land treatment, and surface impoundments. Each of these events involves the placement of hazardous waste in or on the land or water.

Long-term storage of hazardous waste for one year or more would also be taxed. This provision is included to close a potential tax loophole—that is, to discourage the placement of hazardous waste in storage as a way of avoiding the tax on disposal.

Treatment that renders hazardous waste non-hazardous and recycling waste are not taxable events.

TAXPAYER

The owner or operator of the RCRA regulated disposal or storage facility. It is the owner or operator of the facility who performs the taxable event and is currently obligated under RCRA to maintain disposal and storage records.

In the case of hazardous waste not disposed of or stored in a RCRA regulated facility, the person who disposes of the waste is required to pay the tax. This provision is included to discourage "midnight" or illegal dumping of hazardous waste—that is even a midnight dumper would be liable to pay the tax, or suffer the penalties that the IRS would impose for non-payment.

TAXABLE MATERIAL

Hazardous waste which is, at the time of enactment of this amendment, listed or defined as hazardous under the provisions of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

Any wastes removed from the RCRA list will no longer be subject to the tax.

Any wastes added to the RCRA list after the date of enactment of this amendment will not be subject to the tax unless there is an Act of Congress specifying their taxation.

TAX IMPOSITION

The tax rates shall be as follows:

$45 per ton for disposal by landfill, waste pile or surface impoundment.

$25 per ton for disposal by ocean dumping or land treatment.

$5 per ton for disposal by underground injection.

$45 per ton for long-term storage.

NOTE: These rates differ by method of disposal in order to take into consideration, to some extent, the water content generally found in wastes disposed of by such methods. The amendment also includes an alternative tax computation method whereby the taxpayer would also be allowed the option of calculating a dry weight tax (at $50 per ton of dry weight) with submission of proof of water content.

REVENUE

The tax is structured to raised just over $300 million annually, or about $1.5 billion over five years.

EFFECTIVE DATE AND TERMINATION

The tax would take effect on January 1, 1986 and end on September 30, 1990.

REPORTS AND RECORDS

The amendment provides for the use, to the maximum extent possible, of existing records and reporting requirements. The RCRA requirements, ocean dumping and Underground Injection Control (UIC) regulations together provide for recordkeeping which, either as it currently exists or with slight modification, provide the necessary data and records for assessing the tax.

TAX EXCLUSIONS

High Volume, Low Toxic Wastes. Wastes currently exempted from regulation under section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act e.g. fly ash, mine tailings, drilling fluids, etc., are not subject to the tax under this amendment. Such wastes could only be taxed by a future Act of Congress.

Superfund Sites. Wastes removed from Superfund sites are not subject to the tax under this amendment.

Waste Water Treatment. Waste disposal of or stored in surface impoundments that are part of certain waste water treatment facilities permitted under section 402 of the Clean Water Act are not subject to tax under this amendment.

TAX CREDIT PROVISIONS

A person who has paid a tax on the long-term storage of a hazardous waste, which is subsequently disposed of and subject to the disposal tax, would be entitled to a credit for the tax paid on the storage of such waste.

By MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 15. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the ability of States to provide drug abuse prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation, and for other purposes, to authorize the Attorney General to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the level of State and local enforcement of State laws relating to production, illegal possession, and transfer of controlled substances; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

STATE AND LOCAL NARCOTICS CONTROL ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I rise today, this first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1985. I am pleased to be joined by Senator HAWKINS, Senator PRYOR, and Senator D'AMATO in introducing the legislation.

This bill is based on legislation I introduced in the 98th Congress to address the scourge of drug abuse in this country—since that time the problem has worsened and, unless Congress acts, will be worse still by this time next year. At stake is not only the incidence of crime, overdose deaths, and property loss associated with drug abuse, but the loss of a measurable portion of our young people, consumed by the unstaunched tide of illegal drugs into this country.

The problem is getting worse. Heroin use increased 4 percent in 1983; marijuana use, 5 percent; cocaine use, today's lethal new "drug of choice," fully 12 percent. Cocaine-related emergency room cases in New York City hospitals reached a 3-year high in 1984, and deaths from use of PCP, known on the the street as "Angel Dust" and perhaps the most toxic narcotic of all, rose 50 percent in 1983.

In my home State of New York, Julio Martinez, director of the New York State Division of Substance Abuse Services, estimates that fully 22 percent of our State's population—3.2 million people—have recently abused marijuana, cocaine, heroin, PCP, pills, and other drugs. Half could be described as regular abusers of both narcotic and nonnarcotic drugs. If we fail to take strong action, the numbers of nonnarcotic abusers are expected to increase 20 percent in the next 3 years, and the numbers of narcotic abusers by 10 percent.

Perhaps the most tragic are the statistics, recently released by the Division of Substance Abuse Services, on drug use among secondary school students in New York. Fully 60 percent of our secondary school children—more than 900,000 students—reported having tried illegal drugs. Incredibly, 31 percent of all seventh grade students said they had tried illegal drugs while in elementary school. Drug abuse by students so young, children by any definition, cannot be explained simply as youthful curiosity. Children use drugs because they are made available to them, by pushers.

Many of these children will continue and intensify their drug use, condemning themselves to lackluster academic performance, disciplinary problems in school and at home, and eventually, failure in the job market and increased prospects of committing serious crimes.

The connection to crime is not a casual one. The typical heroin addict, it is estimated, commits 209 crimes each year, costing more than $55,000, to support his or her drug habit. The national cost reaches hundreds of millions of dollars. Sixty percent of New York State prisoners have histories of drug abuse. Roughly one-quarter of all murders committed in New York City and Miami, FL, are drug related.

Experience has taught us to be wary of simple solutions. I first became involved in this terrible problem in 1969, when as special adviser for urban affairs to President Nixon, I tried to close the so-called French Connection, then the main artery of illegal drug flow into this country. The French Connection was easily traceable—poppies harvested in Pakistan and Turkey were sent to Marsailles for processing, thence to our country for sale as heroin. At President Nixon's request, I traveled to Istanbul and Paris, where I tried to persuade government officials that our problem was their problem, too—or would be, unless action was taken. Our efforts were successful, and we persuaded those governments to help us break the French Connection.

The victory, predictably, was temporary. Drug supplies dropped, prices rose, and casual users were forced out of the market, so to speak. But the international drug network, like a Hydra, grows two new heads for every one severed. The French Connection was supplanted by the new Southeast Asian Connection, the new Middle Eastern Connection, the new Mexican Connection, and the new South American Connection.

We cannot abandon our efforts, but we must proceed with realistic and practical responses. This bill would provide $125 million in grants, administered through the Department of Justice, to assist State and local efforts to catch, prosecute, and incarcerate those who violate drug laws, and to destroy illegal drug supplies. The legislation also would provide $125 million in grants, administered through the Department of Health and Human Services, for programs to treat and rehabilitate victims of drug abuse, and to educate the public, especially school children, of the dangers of drug abuse, to prevent those problems from arising. Specifically, $1 million has been set aside for the distribution of public service announcements, in cooperation with private businesses, warning against drug use.

This bill will not solve the Nation's drug problem. It would, however, support a more comprehensive response, on both the State and local levels. Too often we overlook these aspects of the drug abuse crisis—the administration of justice once pushers are caught, the eradication of drug supplies, and the rehabilitation of drug abusers. We must fight a battle on two fronts, to cut supply and demand. Until that connection is made, we will continue to be plagued with connections from abroad.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 15

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1985".

AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS

SEC. 2. (a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services may make grants to States for planning, establishing, maintaining, coordinating, and evaluating projects for the development of more effective prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation programs and activities to deal with the abuse of controlled substances.

(b) For purposes of making grants under subsection (a), the Secretary shall take into consideration—

(1) the nature and extent, throughout the State involved or in any part of such State, of the need for more effective prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation programs and activities to deal with the abuse of controlled substances,

(2) the availability of State and local resources to satisfy such need, and

(3) the recommendations of the Attorney General of the United States regarding those populations, areas, and localities in a State which have or are likely to have, an exceptional need for such programs and activities.

(c) To request a grant under subsection (a), the chief executive officer of a State shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time and in such form as the Secretary may require by rule. Such application shall include a description of—

(1) the level of current State and local expenditures for prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation programs and activities relating to the abuse of controlled substances,

(2) the kinds and extent of the need for such programs and activities, and

(3) the manner in which a grant received under subsection (a) would be expended to satisfy such need.

(d) As a condition of receiving a grant under subsection (a), the chief executive officer of the State involved shall agree on behalf of such State—

(1) to designate a single State agency which will distribute such grant to appropriate State and local government entities, local educational agencies, and private nonprofit entities to carry out the purposes specified in such subsection,

(2) to be accountable for the expenditure of such grant, and

(3) with respect to such grant, to prepare and submit reports and audits in a manner consistent with the requirements of subsection (a) and subsection (b) (1)-(4) of section 1916 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-5).

(e) (1) No part of a grant made under this section may be used to supplant State or local funds that would be available to such State or unit of local government in the absence of such grant.

(2) Not more than 5 percent of a grant made under this section may be used for costs incurred to administer such grant.

(3) Not less than 20 percent of the grants made under this section shall be made to private, nonprofit entities.

(f) The Secretary is authorized to spend not more than $1,000,000 of the amount appropriated under section 9 (b) for any fiscal year for the dissemination of public service announcements in the media to educate the public concerning the dangers of abusing controlled substances, using appropriate private organizations and business concerns in the preparation of such announcements to the extent feasible.

LAW ENFORCEMENT GRANTS

SEC. 3. (a) The Attorney General of the United States may make grants to States which apply under section 4, for the purpose of assisting States and units of local government—

(1) to provide additional personnel, equipment, facilities, personnel training, and supplies for more widespread apprehension of persons who violate State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances and to pay operating expenses (including the purchase of evidence and information) incurred as a result of apprehending such persons,

(2) to provide additional personnel, equipment, facilities, personnel training, and supplies for more widespread prosecution of persons accused of violating such State laws and to pay operating expenses in connection with such prosecution,

(3) to provide additional personnel (including judges), equipment, personnel training, and supplies for more widespread adjudication of cases involving persons accused of violating such State laws, to pay operating expenses in connection with such adjudication, and to provide quickly temporary facilities in which to conduct adjudications of such cases.

(4) to provide additional correctional facilities (including the expansion of existing prisons) for the detention of persons convicted of violating State laws relating to the production, possession, or transfer of controlled substances, and to establish and improve treatment and rehabilitative counseling provided to drug dependent persons convicted of violating State laws, and

(5) to conduct programs of eradication aimed at destroying wild or illicit growth of plant species from which controlled substances may be extracted.

(b) The Attorney General shall make grants under subsection (a) based on the relative needs of the States, taking into consideration—

(1) the nature and extent, throughout the State involved or in any part of such State, of problems arising in the enforcement of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances, and

(2) the availability of State and local resources to resolve such problems.

APPLICATIONS TO RECEIVE GRANTS

SEC. 4. To request a grant under section 3, the chief executive officer of a State shall submit to the Attorney General an application at such time and in such form as the Attorney General may require by rule.

(1) Such application shall include a statewide strategy for the enforcement of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances. Such strategy shall be prepared after consultation with State and local officials whose duty it is to enforce such laws. Such strategy shall include a description of—

(A) the level of current State and local expenditures directly attributable to the enforcement of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances,

(B) the kinds and extent of problems arising in the enforcement of such State laws, and

(C) the manner in which a grant received under section 3 will be expended to alleviate such problems.

(2) The chief executive officer of such State shall designate and identify in such application a single State agency which will distribute to appropriate State and local government entities, as determined by such State, any grant received under section 3.

(3) Such application shall identify each of the 5 general purposes specified in section 3(a) for which such grant is requested and, with respect to each such purpose, the amount of funds requested for such purpose and the specific uses for which a grant received for such purpose will be expended.

(4) The chief executive officer of such State shall agree, in such application and on behalf of such State, to comply with the requirements of sections 5, 6, and 7 as a condition of receiving a grant under section 3.

STATE AND LOCAL PARTICIPATION

SEC. 5. (a) No part of a grant made under section 3 may be used to supplant State or local funds that would be available to such State or unit of local government in the absence of such grant.

(b) A grant made under section 3 may not be expended for more than 90 percent of the cost of the identified uses, in the aggregate, for which such grant is received to carry out any one of the 5 general purposes specified in section 3(a). The non-Federal portion of the expenditures for such uses shall be paid in cash.

(c) Not more than 5 percent of a grant made under section 3 may be used for costs incurred to administer such grant.

REPORTS

SEC. 6. (a) Each State which receives a grant under section 3 shall submit to the Attorney General, for each year in which any part of such grant is expended by a State or local government entity, a report which contains—

(1) infromation specifying—

(A) the number of arrests made for violations of State law relating to the production, possession, and transfer of controlled substances,

(B) the number of convictions resulting from such arrests,

(C) the quantity and kinds of controlled substances seized in connection with such arrests, and

(D) the value of property forfeited to the State in connection with the enforcement of such laws,

(2) a summary of the activities carried out with such grant and an assessment of the impact of such activities on meeting the needs identified in the State strategy submitted under section 4(1), and

(3) such other information as the Attorney General may require by rule.

Such report shall be submitted in such form and by such time as the Attorney General may require by rule.

() Not later than 90 days after the end of each fiscal year for which grants are made under section 3 (a), the Attorney General shall submit to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President pro tempore of the Senate a report that includes with respect to each State—

(1) the aggregate amount of such grants made to such State for such fiscal year.

(2) the amount of such grants expended for each of the 5 general purposes specified in section 3 (a), and

(3) a summary of the information provided in compliance with subsection (a) (2).

EXPENDITURE OF GRANTS; RECORDS

SEC. 7. (a) The aggregate amount of a grant shall be obligated not later than 2 years after such grant is received by a State. Any part of such grant which is not so obligated shall be repaid by such State to the Attorney General upon the expiration of such 2-year period.

(b) If any part of a grant make under section 3 is used for any purpose for which such part is received by a State, or by a State or local government entity, then the State which received such grant shall promptly repay to the Attorney General an amount equal to such part.

(c)(1) Each State which receives a grant under section 3 shall keep, and shall require units of local government which receive any part of such grant to keep, such records as the Attorney General may require by rule to facilitate an effective audit.

(2) The Attorney General and the Comptroller General of the United States shall have access, for the purpose of audit and examination, to any books, documents, and records of States which receive grants, and of State and local government entities which receive any part of a grant, made under section 3 if, in the opinion of the Attorney General or the Comptroller General, such books, documents, and records are related to the receipt or use of any such grant.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 8. For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Attorney General" means the Attorney General of the United States,

(2) the term "controlled substance" has the meaning given such term in section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)),

(3) the term "correctional facility" means any place for the confinement of persons convicted of violating State law,

(4) the term "drug dependent person" has the meaning given such term in section 2(q) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201(q)),

(5) the term "local educational agency" means

(A) any local educational agency as defined in section 198(a)(10) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1065; and

(B) the governing authority of any nonprofit elementary or secondary school;

(6) the term "nonprofit elementary or secondary school" means

(A) any elementary or secondary school as defined in section 198(a)(7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 owned and operated by one or more nonprofit corporations or associations no part of the net earnings of which inures, or may lawfully inure, to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and

(B) any school of any agency of the United States;

(7) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services;

(8) the term "State" means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

(9) the term "State law" means a State law the violation of which is punishable by a term of imprisonment exceeding one year or by death, and

(10) the term "unit of local government" means any city, county, township, town, borough, parish, village, or other general purpose political subdivision of a State, any agency of the District of Columbia government or the United States Government performing functions in and for the District of Columbia, or an Indian tribe.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 9. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated $125,000,000 for fiscal year 1986, and such sums as are necessary for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out section 2.

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $125,000,000 for fiscal year 1986 and such sums as are necessary for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out section 3(a).

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be joining Senator MOYNIHAN today in the introduction of the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act of 1985.

This legislation is designed to provide needed support for States and localities in dealing with the drug abuse problem. This support would be in form of Federal grants in fiscal year 1986 to help State and local governments catch, prosecute, and incarcerate drug offenders, treat and rehabilitate drug abusers, and educate the public about the dangers of drug use.

It was just last year, Mr. President, that for the first time in the history of polls in America, the issue of drug-related crime was judged to be of the greatest concern to the American people. The problems caused by the use of illicit narcotics are having such an impact in our society right now that we must expend every possible effort to find solutions. Drugs are victimizing our children, and threatening our national security and safety. This vicious destroyer of young lives attacks on every social, civic, and economic level, and we must address the needs of individual communities in dealing with the problems created by drug abuse.

It is for this reason that I have joined Senator MOYNIHAN, representing with great distinction the State of New York which along with my State of Florida is most affected by the scourge of drug abuse, in introducing this proposal. This bill would: First, authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the ability of the States to provide drug abuse prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation; and second, authorize the Attorney General to make grants to States for the purpose of increasing the level of State and local enforcement of State laws relating to production, illegal possession, and transfer of controlled substances. Together, Senator MOYNIHAN and I want to "put some teeth" in the power of State and local governments to deal with this escalating problem. For the necessary counteroffensive to drug abuse to be effective, it must be fought, and therefore funded, simultaneously on two fronts.

I am especially pleased at the inclusion of two particular sections in this bill, Mr. President. We are all aware of the influence the visual media has on young minds, of the need to create a positive kind of peer pressure to help kill the demand for illicit drugs. For this reason, I have requested funding for public service announcements to educate the public to the dangers of using drugs. Appropriate private organizations and business concerns would be used in the preparation of such announcements through Federal funds authorized to the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

Also, to direct needed assistance to a previously unaddressed area, I have requested that Federal funds be authorized to support private, nonprofit groups working to achieve the eradication of drug abuse. Groups like the National Federation of Parents for a Drug-Free Youth, and Project SMART, for example, have long received the praise they deserve, and now I want to see them get the Federal assistance they deserve, as well.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, and the Senate Drug Enforcement Caucus, I will work for the passage of each and every provision of this legislation aimed at addressing the savage threat of drug abuse. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important initiative.

I wish to take this opportunity to applaud the efforts of Senator MOYNIHAN in the introduction of this proposal, and offer him my most stringent efforts in acheiving the enactment of the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I am cosponsoring a revised version of the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act. I commend the original sponsors of this bill, Senator MOYNIHAN and Congressman RANGEL; and I commend Senator HAWKINS for her efforts to refine this legislation. The need for a massive commitment of Federal resources to help State and local governments and private agencies cope with the drug abuse epidemic continues. I look forward to early hearings on this important bill.

This legislation authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make grants to States and private agencies to enable them to provide more drug abuse prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation services. It also authorizes the Attorney General to make grants to States to increase and improve enforcement of State and local antidrug laws.

An explosion in the availability and use of drugs has been followed by intolerable increases in drug-related crime. Local law enforcement, education, and social service agencies have been overwhelmed by the volume. They need our help and commitment. And they need it now.

Operation Pressure Point, a major drug crackdown on the Lower East Side of New York City, has shown that a massive commitment of Federal, State, and local resources to drug law enforcement can succeed. In the early months of Operation Pressure Point, robberies in the targeted area were reduced by 50 percent and burglaries were reduced by 35 percent. Also as a result of this crackdown, the number of persons seeking treatment and rehabilitation swelled dramatically

This bill seeks to apply the lessons of Operation Pressure Point on a national scale. This bill authorizes $125 million in fiscal year 1986, and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years 1987 through 1990, to assist prevention, education, treatment, and rehabilitation programs. Twenty percent of such grants must be made to private, nonprofit agencies. Up to $1 million is authorized for any fiscal year for the dissemination of public service announcements to educate the public concerning the dangers of drug abuse. It also authorizes $125 million for fiscal year 1986 to increase State and local drug law enforcement and such sums as may be necessary for that purpose in fiscal years 1987 through 1990.

This money will be dedicated to strengthening the following areas of the criminal justice system:

First, apprehension of violators of State laws relating to the production, possession, and transfer of drugs;

Second, prosecution of such violators;

Third, adjudication of narcotics cases;

Fourth, expansion and construction of correctional facilities for incarceration and treatment of drug dependent criminals; and Fifth, eradication of wild or illegally grown drug crops.

The approach represented by this legislation must become part of a coordinated and comprehensive war on drugs at the Federal, State, and local levels. We need to educate our children much more effectively about the dangers of drug abuse. This effort must begin at the earliest grade levels. We must demand international cooperation, not only to eradicate drugs at their source, but also to interrupt international trafficking in them and to apprehend drug law fugitives.

We need an interdiction effort that deters drug traffickers and disrupts the smuggling networks. We must seize the profits and proceeds of the illicit drug industry and effectively combat money laundering. The revolving door criminal justice system must be overhauled. Today's system favors the criminal. In New York City, 20,000 persons had more than 7 felony arrests in the last decade without a single conviction; 473,849 persons had one felony arrest in that same period. At the Federal level, there are more drug law fugitives than there are DEA agents. According to the Justice Department, only 55 percent of all drug law defendants are ever incarcerated for their crimes, and their actual time served averages only about 3 years.

The enactment of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act last year was a major step forward in our war on drugs. I urge my colleagues to give the State and Local Narcotics Control Assistance Act the same measure of support that they gave to that groundbreaking legislation.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 16. A bill entitled the "National Nuclear Power Plant Personnel Training Act of 1985"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

NATIONAL NUCLEAR POWER PLANT PERSONNEL TRAINING ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce legislation to establish the National Academy for Nuclear Power Safety, to provide comprehensive and standard training for the civilian men and women who operate the Nation's civilian nuclear powerplants.

We are in the age of commercial nuclear power—79 plants are operating today, providing 13 percent of the Nation's electricity—but we have paid too little attention to what is known as the sociology of the workplace. We have simply taken the old standards and practices developed for coal fired powerplants, and applied them to the workplace for nuclear reactors. When someone makes a mistake at the controls of an oil or coal fired plant, damage can and does occur. Lights go out; a bearing, a belt or some larger mechanical part can be destroyed. It is a wholly different matter with nuclear plants, as we learned at Three Mile Island. You can put a whole city or a whole State at risk.

We must find a way to ensure that everyone involved in the operation of nuclear reactors has the skills to do so. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission [NRC] reports that human error is involved in 38 percent of all events at nuclear powerplants that could lead to significant accidents. These errors are made by licensed and nonlicensed operators, instrument technicians, mechanical and electrical maintenance personnel, and engineering plant/test personnel. There are some 56,000 people employed in nuclear-related jobs at powerplants in this country. About 5,000 of these—operators and senior operators—are tested and licensed by the NRC. A high school education is all that is required for the entry level operator position. The utilities run their own training programs, which are reviewed but not formally accredited by the NRC. As such there is a general lack of uniformity among existing training programs.

After studying these programs, the staff of the NRC concluded:

. . ., there is currently a general lack of a demonstrated relationship between the requirements of each nuclear powerp lant job and qualifications and training programs provided for individuals performing the job.

Consequently, existing training and qualifications programs are widely divergent in terms of accepted practice in the professional training community.

This must change.

Since the Three Mile Island incident, more attention has been paid to the training and qualification requirements of nuclear powerplant personnel. The NRC has established a Human Factors Division—with a very modest budget—to examine these issues. There has been some improvement, but as the NRC staff concluded, much is left to be done.

In the summer of 1979, the utility industry formed a voluntary nonprofit membership organization, the Institute of Nuclear Power Operations [INPO], to advise companies on a variety of technical matters related to nuclear powerplant safety. One of INPO's four major activities is the development of industry-wide standards for personnel training programs and accreditation for the individual training programs of utilities that meet these standards. INPO, however, does not provide any training or instruction, but only reviews the training procedures of its member utilities. This is a worthy undertaking, but it is not enough.

In 1980, Congress passed legislation—section 307 of Public Law 96-295—directing the NRC to study the feasibility of requiring mandatory standard training programs. Two years later, Congress directed the NRC to promulgate regulations or other appropriate guidance concerning the qualifications and training of civilian nuclear powerplant operators, supervisors, technicians, and other appropriate operating personnel. Unhappily, little has come of these directives. On November 27, 1984, the NRC announced its intention to amend the licensing regulations for reactor operators. The Commission recommended limited changes in examination requirements for operators, but no mandatory training programs were proposed. The training and qualification requirements for other plant personnel—technicians, engineers, supervisors, and so forth—were not addressed at all.

It is time to consider a new approach, and I propose today a National Academy for Nuclear Power Safety to train nuclear powerplant personnel. There are ample precedents; we have Federal academies training nongovernment personnel in fire protection and mine safety. The Academy would provide training for a fee based on its actual costs. The Academy would offer to a variety of plant personnel a basic course of instruction in nuclear power operations, as well as onsite instruction at nuclear plants to deal with the unique aspects of operating individual reactors.

Mr. President, we should approach commercial nuclear reactor training in much the same way as Adm. Hyman Rickover did when he designed the Navy's nuclear training program. I believe that this Academy would allow us to do just that. There is much at stake here. Let us give it careful consideration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill and a summary be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 16

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND DEFINITIONS

SEC. 101. The Congress finds that—

(1) There are some 56,000 people working in nuclear-related jobs at civilian nuclear power plants throughout the United States and it is estimated that an additional 30,000 will have to be hired by 1991; and

(2) The operation of civilian nuclear power plants in a manner that is productive of human health and safety requires that plant personnel be adequately trained;

(3) Approximately 38 percent of all events that could lead to potentially significant accidents at civilian nuclear power plants involve human errors;

(4) Existing programs for training nuclear power plant personnel lack uniformity and often are not consistent with accepted professional training practices;

(5) Industry group efforts to accredit the training programs of individual utilities are valuable and worthwhile but alone are not adequate;

(6) There is a need to improve and standardize professional training for nuclear power plant personnel.

SEC. 102. The purposes of this Act are—

(1) To ensure the availability of qualified and adequately trained personnel to operate civilian nuclear power plants in a manner that is protective of human health and safety; and

(2) To ensure that civilian nuclear power plant personnel are trained consistent with the rules and regulatory guidance issued by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

SEC. 103. Definitions as used in this Act—

(1) "Academy" means the National Academy for Nuclear Power Safety;

(2) "Civilian nuclear power plant" means any production or utilization facility licensed under Section 103 of the Atomic Energy Act;

(3) "Commission" means the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

TITLE II—NATIONAL ACADEMY FOR NUCLEAR POWER SAFETY

SEC. 201. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission shall establish, at the earliest practicable date, a National Academy for Nuclear Power Safety.

(b) PURPOSE. The purpose of the Academy shall be to provide training to civilian nuclear power plant operators, senior operators, supervisors, technicians, engineers and other appropriate personnel in nuclear-related positions.

SEC. 202.—(a) SUPERINTENDENT.—The Academy shall be headed by a Superintendent, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In exercising the powers and duties under this Act, the Superintendent shall report to and be responsible to the Commission.

(b) TERM OF OFFICE.—The Superintendent shall serve for a term of four years and may be reappointed.

(c) DUTIES OF THE SUPERINTENDENT.—The Superintendent shall—

(1) develop and revise curricula for training programs and courses of instruction, in consultation with the Academic Advisory Board;

(2) establish standards for admission to the Academy, in consultation with the Academic Advisory Board;

(3) develop criteria for awarding certificates of training, in consultation with the Academic Advisory Board;

(4) appoint such teaching staff or other personnel as may be necessary and appropriate;

(5) establish fees and other charges for attendance at the Academy or for instruction provided by Academy personnel;

(6) enter into such contracts and take such actions as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the Academy.

SEC. 203. (a) TRAINING.—The Superintendent shall, in consultation with the Academic Advisory Board and subject to the approval of the Commission, establish one or more training programs or courses of instruction for civilian nuclear power plant personnel. Such programs or courses may be conducted for the purpose of qualification or re-qualification of nuclear power plant personnel, or for the purpose of providing continuing education, on-the-job training or instruction in special safety guidance.

(b) TYPES.—There shall be, at a minimum, a training program or course of instruction for each position for which the Commission requires a license pursuant to Section 107 of the Atomic Energy Act.

(c) CONTENT.—Each training program or course shall, at a minimum, include instruction in subject areas that the Commission has identified, either by rule or regulatory guidance, as being necessary and appropriate for the safe operation of civilian nuclear power plants.

SEC. 204. (a) ADMISSIONS.—The Superintendent is authorized to admit to the programs or courses given by the Academy individuals who meet the standards for admissions established by the Superintendent, in consultation with the Academic Advisory Board and subject to the approval of the Commission. Admission standards may vary by program or course of instruction. Admission standards shall be consistent with Commission rules or regulatory guidance as they relate to qualification, education and experience requirements for each category of civilian nuclear power plant personnel.

SEC. 205. (a) INSTRUCTION FEE.— Each individual participating in a training program or course of instruction provided by the Academy shall be required to pay a fee for such a program or course. Such fee shall be set at an amount equal to the cost to the Academy of providing such training.

SEC. 206. (a) ACADEMIC ADVISORY BOARD.— There shall be established an Academic Advisory Board for the Academy. Such Board shall consist of seven (7) members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The President shall designate one (1) member as Chairman.

(b) TERMS.—Each member shall serve for a term of four (4) years. The terms of the members first taking office shall expire as follows: one (as designated by the President) at the end of one year, two (as designated by the President) at the end of two years, two (as designated by the President) at the end of three years, and two (as designated by the President) at the end of four years.

(c) COMPOSITION.—In nominating persons for the Academic Advisory Board, the President shall ensure that the membership of the Board be balanced, with broad representation from various interests, backgrounds, occupations and experience appropriate to the responsibilities of the Board.

(d) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Academic Advisory Board shall advise the Superintendent on the Academy's curricula and admissions standards, and on any other matters related to the Academy's training programs and courses as determined appropriate by the Superintendent, subject to the approval of the Commission.

(e) COMPENSATION.—Each member of the Academic Advisory Board shall be reimbursed for any expenses actually incurred by him in the performance of his duties as a member of such Board.

SEC. 207. (a) BOARD OF VISITORS.—There shall be established for the Academy a Board of Visitors composed of the following—

(1) the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, or his designee;

(2) three other members of the Senate designated by the President pro tempore of the Senate;

(3) the Chairman of the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs or his designee;

(4) the Chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, or his designee;

(5) three other members of the House designated by the Speaker; and

(6) six persons designated by the President.

(b) TERMS.—The persons designated by the President shall serve for three years.

(c) DUTIES.—The function of the Board of Visitors shall be to review annually the program of the Academy and to make comments and recomendations to the Superintendent, Commission, and Congress regarding the operation of the Academy and any improvements therein that the Board of Visitors deems appropriate.

(d) COMPENSATION.—Each member of the Board of Visitors shall be reimbursed for any expenses actually incurred by him in the performance of his duties as a member of such Board.

SEC. 208. PERSONNEL APPOINTMENTS.—Appointments of a teaching staff may be made, subject to the approval of the Commission, without regard to the provisions of Title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in competitive service, and, with respect to temporary and intermittent services, to the same extent as is authorized by Section 3109 of Title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 209. PHYSICAL FACILITIES.—The Academy shall be located on such site as the Commission selects.

SEC. 210. COORDINATION.—In establishing and conducting training programs or courses under this Title, the Superintendent and the Commission shall take full advantage of applicable resources and information available from other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, business and industry groups or associations, and public interest groups.

SEC. 211. (a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this Title such sums as may be necessary.

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—Of the sums authorized to be appropriated under subsection (a), such sums as may be necessary shall be available for the construction of facilities of the Academy on the site selected under Section 209.

(c) EQUIPMENT.—Of the sums authorized to be appropriated under subsection (a), such sums as may be necessary shall be available for the purchase or leasing of equipment to be used in the training programs or courses of instruction offered by the Academy.

TITLE III—DUTIES OF THE NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION

SEC. 301. OPERATORS' LICENSE REQUIREMENTS.—As a condition of a license issued under Section 107 of the Atomic Energy Act, the Commission shall, as appropriate, require certification of successful completion of the applicable training programs or courses of instruction offered by the Academy.

SEC. 302. COMMERCIAL LICENSE REQUIREMENTS.—As a condition of a license issued under Section 103 of the Atomic Energy Act, the Commission shall, as appropriate, require a licensee to employ personnel that have successfully completed the applicable training programs or courses of instruction offered by the Academy.

NATIONAL NUCLEAR POWERPLANT PERSONNEL TRAINING ACT OF 1985—SUMMARY

TITLE I

Sec. 101: Findings.

Sec. 102: Purposes.

To ensure the availability of qualified and adequately trained personnel to operate civilian nuclear power plants; and

To ensure that civilian nuclear power plant personnel are trained consistent with the rules and regulatory guidance issued by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC).

Sec. 103: Definitions.

TITLE II

Sec. 201: Establishment.

Directors the NRC to establish, as soon as practicable a National Academy for Nuclear Power Safety to provide training to civilian nuclear power plant operators and related personnel.

Sec. 202. The Academy shall be headed by a presidentially appointed Superintendent, who shall report to the NRC, and serve a four-year term (the Superintendent may be reappointed).

The Superintendent shall (in consultation with the Academic Advisory Board):

Develop and revise curricula for training programs and courses of instruction;

Establish standard for admission to the Academy;

Develop criteria for awarding certifications of training;

Appoint teaching staff and other personnel;

Establish fees and other charges for attendence and instruction; and

Enter into contracts and take other actions as necessary to carry out the purposes of the Academy.

Sec. 203: Training.

The Superintendent is directed to establish one or more training programs for civilian nuclear power plant personnel.

There shall be, at a minimum, a training program or course of instruction for each position licensed pursuant to sec. 107 of the Atomic Energy Act.

Each training program or course of instruction shall include, at a minimum, instruction in subject areas that the NRC has identified, either by rule or regulatory guidance, as being necessary and appropriate for the safe operation of civilian nuclear power plants.

Sec. 204: Admissions.

Directs the Superintendent to establish admissions standards.

Admission standards shall be consistent with the rules or regulatory guidance of the NRC as they relate to qualifications, education and experience requirements for each category of civilian nuclear power plant personnel.

Sec. 205: Fees.

Directs the Superintendent to establish fees for instruction equal to the cost to the Academy of providing the training.

Sec. 206: Academic Advisory Board.

Authorizes the establishment of a seven-member Academic Advisory Board to advise and assist the Superintendent on the Academy's training and admissions programs.

Sec. 207: Board of Visitors.

Authorizes the establishment of a fifteen-member Board of Visitors to review the Academy's programs, and to report its findings and recommendations annually to the NRC and to Congress.

Sec. 208: Personnel appointments.

Authorizes the appointment of a teaching staff.

Sec. 209: Physical facilities.

Authorizes the NRC to locate the Academy at its discretion.

Sec. 210: Coordination.

The Superintendent and the Commission shall take full advantage of applicable resources and information available from other departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and business and industry groups or associations, and public interest groups.

Sec. 211: Appropriations.

Authorizes the appropriation of such sums as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of the Act.

TITLE III

Sec. 301: Operators' License Requirement.

Requires certification of successful completion of the training program as a condition licensing an operator.

Sec. 302: Commercial License Requirement.

Requires commercial licensees to employ personnel who have successfully completed applicable training programs or courses of instruction offered by the Academy.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 17. A bill to establish an independent agency, governed by a bipartisan board, to administer the Old-Age, Survivors, and disability insurance program under title II of the Social Security Act, the Supplemental Security Income Program under title XVI of such act, and the Medicare Program under title XVIII of such act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATIVE REORGANIZATION ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress to introduce legislation to reorganize the Social Security Administration as an independent agency, governed by a 5-member bipartisan board. I am pleased that the distinguised senior Senator from Michigan, Senator RIEGLE, is joining me in introducing this legislation.

This legislation would establish the independent agency to administer the Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance Programs, the Hospital and Supplementary Medical Insurance Programs, and the Supplemental Security Income Program—the network of vital programs created since 1935 to provide insurance for virtually all Americans in the event of old age, death, disability, or sickness.

The reason is simple: the operations of the Social Security Administration would be improved, and public confidence in the system strengthened, by establishing Social Security as an independent agency.

This is not a new idea—just one lately forgotten. The original Social Security Act of 1935 established an independent Social Security Board to administer the programs; and in 1939, Social Security Programs were made a part of the independent Federal Security Agency, where they remained until 1953. Only at that time, nearly 20 years after passage of the Social Security Act, was the Social Security Administration made part of the newly-formed Department of Health, Education and Welfare. There, it has remained.

Almost 30 years later in 1981, the National Commission on Social Security urged the President and Congress to create an independent agency to administer the Old-Age, Survivors, Disability, Medicare, SSI and Medicaid Programs. In 1983, the President's Commission on Social Security Reform, on which I proudly served, stated its support for the concept of Social Security as an independent agency. The time has come to act on these recommendations.

The size of these programs, and their importance to nearly every American, recommend the establishment of SSA as an independent agency. Simply put, the Social Security Administration has outgrown the Department of Health and Human Services. The benefits paid through the Social Security, Medicare, and SSI Programs comprise more than 85 percent of the Department's entire budget. In 1953, 6 million Americans received monthly Social Security checks; 31 years later, that number had increased sixfold. Thirty-six million Americans receive monthly Social Security checks today, and 29 million aged and disabled citizens receive Federal insurance for the costs of hospitalization and medical treatment. Four million more of our most needy blind, aged, and disabled citizens receive SSI assistance.

The independent agency established under this legislation would be governed by a bipartisan, five member Board of Directors, appointed by the President for staggered 15-year terms. The appointment of the Directors would be subject to the advice and consent of the Senate. This Board would be responsible for Agency policy, including annual budget and legislative recommendations, and would provide the President and Congress with research, policy and actuarial analysis. The Commissioner also would devise and administer plans to improve the effectiveness of the Agency's programs, and advise the Board and Congress on the impact of legislative changes.

Our social insurance programs have long enjoyed near universal support, and earned this support by assuring tens of millions of Americans a dependable retirement income, basic health insurance coverage during old age, and protection in the event of disability. The system has also earned a well-deserved reputation for administrative efficiency, fairness and public responsiveness, but recently this reputation has been tarnished. Difficulties have arisen in the SSI Program, hundreds of thousands of disability beneficiaries have been wrongfully terminated, and the system's computer system has deteriorated.

By establishing the Social Security Administration as an independent agency governed by a bipartisan board, we can help restore the high levels of efficiency and fairness for which SSA was long famous, and insulate its vital programs from more partisan politics.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INDEPENDENT SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY; SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

SEC. 2. (a) Section 701 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY; SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

"SEC. 701. (a) There is hereby established, as an independent agency of the executive branch of the Government, a Social Security Agency (hereafter in this title referred to as the 'Agency').

"(b)(1) The Agency shall be headed by a Social Security Board (hereafter in this title referred to as the 'Board').

"(2) (A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Board shall be composed of five members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(B) For the period ending January 31, 1982, the Board shall be composed of three members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(C) The members shall be chosen, on the basis of integrity, impartiality, and good judgment, from among individuals who, by reason of education, experience, and attainment, are exceptionally qualified to serve on the Board.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), members shall be appointed for terms of fifteen years. A member of the Board may be removed only pursuant to a finding by the President of neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. The President shall transmit any such finding to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Majority Leader of the Senate not later than five days after the date on which such finding is made.

"(B) Of the members first appointed—

"(7) A member of the Board shall be designated from time to time by the President to serve as Chairperson of the Board.

"(8) The Board shall meet at the call of the Chairperson or a majority of its members.

"(c) The Board shall—

"(1) govern by regulation the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II, the supplemental security income program under title XVI, and the medicare program under title XVIII,

"(2) appoint a Commissioner of Social Security, as described in section 702, to act for the Board as the chief operating officer of the Agency responsible for administering such programs,

"(3) make annual budgetary recommendations relating to the Agency and defend such recommendations before the appropriate committees of each House of the Congress,

"(4) make recommendations to the Congress and the President as to the most effective methods of providing economic security through social insurance, and, in consultation with the Commissioner of Social Security, as to legislation and matters of administrative policy concerning such programs,

"(5) provide the Congress and the President with the ongoing actuarial and other analysis undertaken by the Agency with respect to such programs and any other information relating to such programs, and

"(6) conduct policy analysis and research relating to such programs.

"(d)(1) The Office of the Board shall include an Office of the Actuary, to be headed by a Chief Actuary appointed by the Board. To the extent provided by the Board, the Office of the Actuary shall assist the Board in carrying out its actuarial functions.

"(2) The Office of the Board shall include an Office of Policy and Legislation, to be headed by a Director of Policy and Legislation appointed by the Board. To the extent provided by the Board, the Office of Policy and Legislation shall assist the Board in carrying out its functions relating to policy analysis, research, and legislation.

"(3) The Office of the Board shall include an Office of General Counsel, to be headed by a General Counsel appointed by the Board. The General Counsel shall serve as the principal legal counsel in the Agency and shall provide necessary legal advice and services to the Board and the Commissioner.

"(4) The Office of the Board shall include an Ombudsman, to be appointed by the Board. The Ombudsman shall represent the concerns of the public, including beneficiaries, with respect to the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II, the supplemental security income program under title XVI, and the medicare program under title XVIII, to the Board and the Commissioner.

"(5)(A) The Board shall appoint such additional attorneys, actuaries, and other employees as it considers necessary to carry out its functions.

"(B) The Board may appoint, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such technical or professional employees as the Board considers appropriate, and such employees may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

"(C) The Board may procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(D) Notwithstanding section 3133 of title 5, United States Code, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall authorize for the Agency a total number of Senior Executive Service positions equal to 150 percent of the number of such positions existing in the Social Security Administration of the Department of Health and Human Services on the day before the date of the enactment of the Social Security Administrative Reorganization Act, and the total number of such positions authorized for the Agency pursuant to such section 3133 shall not at any subsequent time be less than such number.

"(E) In addition to the positions of the Agency in the Executive Schedule specified in subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, the Board may establish additional positions at levels IV and V of the Executive Schedule.

"(d)(1) The Board may establish, alter, consolidate, or discontinue such organizational units or components within the Agency as the Board considers necessary or appropriate to carry out its functions, except that this paragraph shall not apply with respect to any unit or component established by this Act.

"(2) The Board may assign duties, and delegate, or authorize successive redelegations of, authority to act and to render decisions, with respect to the functions of the Board under this section. Within the limitations of such delegations, redelegations, or assignments to officers or employees of the Agency, all official acts and decisions of such officers and employees shall have the same force and effect as though performed or rendered by the Board.

"(e) There shall be in the Agency an Office of the Inspector General, to be headed by an Inspector General appointed in accordance with the Inspector General Act of 1978.

"(f)(1) The Board, the Secretary, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall consult with each other and shall develop rules, regulations, practices, and forms which, to the extent appropriate for the efficient administration of titles II, XVI, and XVIII and the other provisions of this Act and the applicable provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, are designed to reduce duplication of effort, duplication of reporting, conflicting or overlapping requirements, and the burden on beneficiaries and other persons of compliance with the provisions of this Act.

"(2) In order to avoid unnecessary expense and duplication of functions, the Board, the Secretary, and the Secretary of the Treasury may make such arrangements or agreements for cooperation or mutual assistance in the performance of their functions under titles II, XVI, and XVIII and the other provisions of this Act and the applicable provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as they find to be practicable and consistent with law.".

"COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY

"SEC. 702. (a) There shall be in the Agency an Office of the Commissioner, to be headed by a Commissioner of Social Security (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Commissioner') appointed by the Board. The Commissioner shall be chosen from among individuals who are, by reason of experience and attainment, especially qualified to manage a large-scale organization of the Government.

"(b)(1) The Commissioner shall be appointed for a term of five years, except that—

"(A) an individual appointed Commissioner for a term after the commencement of such term shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term,

"(B) an individual may, with the approval of the Chairperson of the Board, serve as Commissioner after the expiration of his or her term for not more than one year until his or her successor has taken office, and

"(C) the individual first appointed to the Office of Commissioner shall serve for a term ending January 31, 1989.

An individual may be appointed as Commissioner for successive terms, and

"(2) An individual may be removed from the office of Commissioner before completion of his or her term only upon the vote of a majority of the full membership of the Board, pursuant to a finding by the Board of neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. The Board shall transmit any such finding to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Majority Leader of the Senate not later than five days after the date on which such finding is made.

51-059 O-86-3 (Pt. 1)

"(3) Except as provided in paragraph (6) of subsection (c), an individual serving as Commissioner may not, during his or her term as Commissioner, otherwise serve as an officer or employee of any government. If an individual serving as Commissioner becomes an employee of any government, he or she may continue to serve as Commissioner not more than 30 days after the date on which he or she becomes an officer or employee of such government.

"(c) The Commissioner shall—

"(1) constitute the chief operating officer of the Agency, responsible for administering, in accordance with applicable statutes and regulations, the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II, the supplement security income program under title XVI, and the medicare program under title XVIII,

"(2) establish and maintain an efficient and effective operational structure for the Agency,

"(3) devise and implement long-term plans to promote and maintain the effective implementation of such programs,

"(4) make annual budgetary recommendations of the Agency for the ongoing administrative costs of the Agency and defend such recommendations before the Board and before the appropriate Committees of each House of the Congress,

"(5) advise the Board and the Congress of the effect on the administration of such programs of proposed legislative changes in such programs,

"(6) serve as Secretary of the Board of Trustees of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, and

"(7) report in December of each year to the Board and the Congress concerning the administrative endeavors and accomplishments of the Agency.

"(d)(1) The Commissioner may establish, alter, consolidate, or discontinue such organizational units or components within the Office of the Commissioner as the Commissioner considers necessary or appropriate to carry out his or her functions.

"(2) The Commissioner may assign duties, and delegate, or authorize successive redelegations of, authority to act and to render decisions, with respect to the administration of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II, the supplemental security income program under title XVI, and the medicare program under title XVIII to such officers and employees as the Commissioner may find necessary. Within the limitations of such delegations, redelegations, or assignments, all officials acts and decisions of such officers and employees shall have the same force and effect as though performed or rendered by the Commissioner.

"(3)(A) The Commissioner shall appoint such additional employees as he or she considers necessary to carry out his or her functions.

"(B) The Commissioner may appoint, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such technical or professional employees as the Commissioner considers appropriate, and such employees may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

"(C) The Commissioner may procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(D) The Commissioner may delegate such powers of appointment and procurement to any of the employees in the Office of the Commissioner as he or she determines appropriate.

"(4) To the extent requested by the Commissioner, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall delegate to the Commissioner, pursuant to section 1104 of title 5, United States Code, and subject to applicable limitations under such title relating to delegations under such section, functions relating to—

"(A) recruitment and examination programs for entry level employees, and

"(B) classification and standards development systems and pay ranges for those job categories identified by the Commissioner in assuming such delegation.

The Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall provide any assistance requested by the Commissioner in assuming any such delegation.".

(b)(1) Section 5313 of title 5, United States Code (relating to level II of the Executive Schedule) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Commissioner of Social Security, Social Security Agency.".

(2) Section 5315 of such title is amended by striking out the following item:

"Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health and Human Services.".

TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS

SEC. 4. (a) There are transferred to the Social Security Agency all functions carried out by the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to the programs and activities the administration of which is vested in the Social Security Agency by reason of this Act and the amendments made thereby. The Social Security Board shall prescribe such regulations as are necessary to allocate such functions in accordance with sections 701 and 702 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act).

(b)(1) There are transferred from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Social Security Board, for appropriate allocation by the Board by regulation in the Social Security Agency—

(A) the personnel employed in connection with the functions transferred by this Act and the amendments made thereby, and

(B) the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, or used in connection with such functions, arising from such functions, or available, or to be made available, in connection with such functions.

(2) Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this subsection shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

(c) The position of Commissioner of Social Security in the Department of Health and Human Services is abolished.

TRANSITIONAL RULES

SEC. 5. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, certificates, licenses, and privileges—

(1) which have been issued, made, promulgated, granted, or allowed to become effective, in the exercise of functions (A) which were exercised by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (or his delegate), and (B) which relate to functions which, by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder, are vested in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security (as the case may be), and shall (to the extent that they relate to functions described in paragraph (1)(B)) continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, suspended, set aside, or repealed by such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be).

(b) The provisions of this Act (including the amendments made thereby) shall not affect any proceeding pending at the time this Act takes effect before the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to functions vested (by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder) in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security, except that such proceedings, to the extent that they relate to such functions, shall continue before such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be). Orders shall be issued under any such proceeding, appeals taken therefrom, and payments shall be made pursuant to such orders, in like manner as if this Act had not been enacted, and orders issued in any such proceeding shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, suspended, or repealed by such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be), by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(c) Except as provided in this subsection—

(1) the provisions of this Act shall not affect suits commenced prior to the date this Act takes effect; and

(2) in all such suits proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered, in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

No cause of action, and no suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against any officer in his official capacity as an officer of the Department of Health and Human Services, shall abate by reason of the enactment of this Act. Causes of action, suits, actions, or other proceedings may be asserted by or against the United States and the Social Security Agency, or such official of such Agency as may be appropriate, and, in any litigation pending when this section takes effect, the court may at any time, on its own motion or that of a party, enter an order which will give effect to the provisions of this subsection (including, where appropriate, an order for substitution of parties).

(d) This Act shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any criminal prosecution, penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred as a result of any function which (by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder) is vested in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security.

(e) Orders and actions of the Social Security Board and the Commissioner of Social Security in the exercise of functions vested in such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be) under this Act (and the amendments made thereby) shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders and actions had been taken by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in the exercise of such functions immediately preceding the effective date of this Act. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, action upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any function so vested in such Board or Commissioner shall continue to apply to the exercise of such function by such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be).

(f) In the exercise of the functions vested in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security under this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder, such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be) shall have the same authority as that vested in the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to the exercise of such functions immediately preceding the vesting of the same in such Board or Commissioner, and actions of such Board or Commissioner shall have the same force and effect as when exercised by such Secretary.

BUDGETARY AND FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY

SEC. 6. Section 703 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"BUDGETARY AND FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY

"SEC. 703. (a) Appropriations requests of the Social Security Agency for staffing and personnel shall be based upon comprehensive workforce plans. The entire amount of appropriations provided for the administrative costs of the Social Security Agency shall be apportioned in the time period provided in title 31, United States Code, for apportionment and shall be apportioned for the entire period of availability without restriction or deduction by the apportioning officer or employee of the Office of Management and Budget or any other entity within the executive branch of the Federal Government, except as otherwise provided in this section.

"(b)(1) Authority of the Social Security Agency for automated data processing procurement and facilities construction shall be provided in the form of contract authority covering the total costs of such acquisitions, to be available until expended.

"(2) Amounts necessary for the liquidation of contract authority provided pursuant to this section are hereby made available from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund to the extent that the Social Security Board, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, determines that any of such amounts to be provided from such Trust Fund are not necessary to meet the current obligations for benefit payments from such Trust Fund.

"(3) Funds appropriated for the Social Security Agency to be available on a contingency basis shall be apportioned only upon the occurrence of the stipulated contingency, as determined by the Social Security Board and reported to each House of the Congress.

"(c)(1) To the extent requested by the Commissioner, the Commissioner shall have—

"(A) all authorities permitted to be delegated under the provisions of Federal law codified under title 40 of the United States Code, that the Commissioner considers are necessary for the acquiring, operating, and maintaining of the facilities needed for the administration of programs for which the Commissioner is given responsibility under this Act,

"(B) all authorities permitted to be delegated under section 111 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 759), relating to the lease, purchase, or maintenance of automated data processing equipment, and

"(C) the authority to contract for any automated data processing equipment or services which the Commissioner considers necessary for the efficient and effective operation of such programs.

"(2) The Administrator of the General Services Administration shall provide any assistance requested by the Commissioner in assuming the delegations required under paragraph (1).".

REPORTS ASSESSING ORGANIZATIONAL CHANGES

SEC. 8. (a) Five years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Social Security Board, the Comptroller General of the United States, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall each submit to each House of the Congress a report setting forth in detail an assessment of the organizational changes made by this Act and the amendments made by this Act.

(b) Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Social Security Board, the Comptroller General of the United States, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to each House of the Congress their recommendations for further technical and conforming amendments necessary to effectively and efficiently carry out the purposes of this Act.

EFFECTIVE DATE AND INTERIM RULES

SEC. 9. (a)(1) Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, and 7 of this Act shall take effect October 1, 1986.

(2) Notwithstanding the effective date set forth in paragraph (1), effective on the date of the enactment of this Act—

(A) the initial members of the Social Security Board may be appointed before such effective date, after the date of the enactment of this Act, and the Commissioner of Social Security, the Inspector General, the Chief Actuary, the Director of Policy Analysis and Legislation, and the General Counsel of the Social Security Agency may be appointed by such Board at any time after such initial members of the Social Security Board have been appointed,

(B) the persons appointed under subparagraph (A) shall be compensated from the date they first take office, at the rates provided for in the amendments to title 5, United States Code, made by sections 2(b) and 3(b) of this Act,

(C) such compensation and related expenses of such persons shall be paid from funds available in the Department of Health and Human Services for the functions vested in the Social Security Agency by this Act and the amendments made thereby, and

(D) the Social Security Board and the Commissioner of Social Security may each utilize, as appropriate, the services of such officers, employees, and other personnel of the Department of Health and Human Services, and funds appropriated to the functions of such Department to be transferred by this Act and the amendments made thereby, for such period of time as may reasonably be needed to facilitate the orderly implementation of this Act.

(b) The amendment made by section 6 of this Act shall apply with respect to fiscal years beginning on or after October 1, 1986.

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. MATSUNAGA, Mr. DODD, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. SARBANES):

S. 18. A bill to extend for 1 year the conditional ceiling on Federal matching for foster care and the temporary provision authorizing the Federal matching for foster care maintenance payments for certain children voluntarily placed in foster care; to the Committee on Finance.

FOSTER CARE CEILING EXTENSION

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce legislation that would extend for 1 year two provisions of the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act.

I am pleased to be joined by my distinguished friends and colleagues, Senators BRADLEY, LEVIN, CRANSTON, MATSUNAGA, KENNEDY, DODD, RIEGLE, METZENBAUM, and SARBANES.

This legislation would enable the States for one more year, to claim Federal matching funds for the costs of children placed in foster care under voluntary placement agreements between the agency and the children's parents. This legislation also would maintain Federal assistance for children, often handicapped or emotionally disturbed, whose parents place them in foster care so the child can receive treatment services. Under this provision, the States also could continue to transfer funds allocated to them for foster care under title IV-E to title IV-B child welfare services. In this way, States can reduce the use of foster care as a means of protecting children, instead providing preventive and reunification services supported by Child Welfare Services funds. In the last fiscal year 1984, the States transferred an estimated $42 million from their foster care allocations to use for child welfare services.

This has been a fine and successful program, one deserving reauthorization. On July 17, 1980, President Jimmy Carter signed the Adoption Assistance and Child Welfare Act, after nearly 3 years of congressional consideration. This act represented a basic reform of the country's child welfare system, providing the States with fiscal incentives to redirect their child welfare services from institutional care to services designed to help families stay together or to reunify families already separated. In this effort, the act mandated procedural reforms as well, including development of case plans, case reviews with a dispositional hearing after 18 months of child care, and inventories of children in foster care. Finally, the act established a subsidized adoption program for children with special needs—mentally, physically, or emotionally handicapped children.

This law restructured an important part of national social policy, by providing States incentives to move away from a system built around foster care—expensive both financially and emotionally—to a system encouraging adoption, and the stability it can provide children.

The program has worked. The Department of Health and Human Services reports that Federal adoption subsidies for the States, through title IV-E Adoption Assistance, have risen sharply—from an average of 289 children per month in just 3 States in 1981, to an estimated 8,000 children in 45 States in the last fiscal year. Eight of nine States surveyed in a recent HHS Study reported significant fiscal savings for subsidized adoptions, instead of foster care, with the average annual savings at $886 per child. In her annual report to Congress concerning this act, Secretary Margaret M. Heckler reported:

The number of children in foster care declined from more than 500,000 in 1977 to 243,000 in 1982;

The duration of placement of children in foster care dropped from an average of 47 months in 1977 to an average of 35 months in December 1982;

The number of foster care children available for adoption declined from 102,000 in 1977 to 50,000 in 1982.

In 1980, when we enacted this law, we authorized two provisions for 4 years—Federal funding for children voluntarily placed in foster care, and the States, authority to transfer funds allocated for foster care under title IV-E to child welfare services under title IV-B of the Social Security Act. Four years would be sufficient time to study the operations and effectiveness of these two approaches, to collect sufficient data to analyze these two provisions of Public Law 96-272. How effective would they be in encouraging the States to make permanent provisions for children in foster care, either returning them to their natural parents or by finding them adoptive homes?

President Carter signed the legislation into law on June 17, 1980, but the Department of Health and Human Services did not issue the necessary regulations for more than 2 years, not until 1982. Under these conditions, only 20 States submitted claims for Federal matching funds for adoption assistance in 1982. While the number of States submitting claims for adoption assistance grew to 40 in 1984, we still have little data on the characteristics of the children whose parents voluntarily place them in foster care, and insufficient information about the preventive and reunification services provided by the States. The most recent evidence available from the Department of Health and Human Services, Secretary Heckler's July 1984 report to Congress, documents the number of federally assisted adoptions, by State, only through 1982.

In 1982, 21 States chose to transfer foster care funds, some $20 million, to child welfare services. By 1984, some 40 States used this option, transferring $42 million, but we have no data yet on how the States are making use of this financing mechanism.

The commitment to this program is building steadily. One year after the legislation was enacted, the administration proposed to fold the program, along with several others, into the social services block grant, and cut funds for this block grant by 25 percent. Congress rejected this proposal. The next year, the administration proposed once again to consolidate these child welfare programs, reduce their total funding by 18 percent, and distribute these funds to the States in a child welfare block grant. And again, the Congress rejected this proposal.

I commend Secretary Heckler for her pledge, in her July 1984 report to Congress, that her Department will "build upon rather than change the basic structures implemented by Public Law 96-272." To do so, I would ask the Department to collect the necessary data, as mandated by Congress in the original legislation, so we may evaluate all aspects of this important program.

For our part, let us go on record in support of the structure and intent of Public Law 96-272, and work to preserve legislation which encourages the States to make permanent provisions for children now in foster care.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the legislation appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 19. A bill to amend part A of title IV of the Social Security Act to provide for grants to States for programs to assist pregnant teenagers and teenage mothers who might otherwise become long-term recipients of Aid to Families With Dependent Children; to the Committee on Finance.

PREGNANT TEENAGERS ASSISTANCE

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce legislation on a matter of grave concern to us all, long-term welfare dependency among families headed by teenage mothers.

The problems of teenage pregnancy have reached truly shocking proportions. In 1981, nearly half of all births to women under 20 were out-of-wedlock—a 58-percent increase over 1970, when 31.5 percent of all births to teenagers were out-of-wedlock. In two decades, the number of out-of-wedlock births to teenage mothers increased 2.5 times—from less than 100,000 births in 1960 to more than 250,000 in 1979.

There are serious consequences, indeed, associated with early childbearing. Most teen mothers fail to finish high school and consequently face bleak job prospects, increasing their prospects of finding themselves on welfare. In a 1981 New York City survey, fully 90 percent of all young mothers aged 15 to 17 were unemployed 9 months after delivering their first child. Without jobs, 66 percent found themselves on public assistance. Although 5 of 6 teenager mothers surveyed said they wanted to return to school or get a job, nearly half could not do so because child care services were not available. The income for those teen mothers who did find jobs was but half what women who gave birth in their twenties and after earn. And consider this: The proportion of teen mothers on public assistance in this survey—66 percent—is fully twice the level of all new mothers.

New York City is not alone. Dr. Wendy Baldwin, Chief of Demographic and Behavioral Sciences at the National Institute for Child Health and Human Development, in testimony before the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, on July 20, 1983, reports that nationally:

> Women who become mothers while adolescents exhibit reduced educational and occupational attainment, lower income, and increased welfare dependency relative to their peers.

Dr. Baldwin made special mention of the lasting effects of early childbearing, stating:

> The effect of adolescent childbearing on education is especially important since it affects occupation and earnings. A decade after high school women who became mothers early were more likely to be working than their classmates but in jobs of lower pay and prestige and with less job satisfaction. Several studies have shown that the effect of an early age first birth on occupational attainment is a function of reduced education, and, to a lesser extent, of increased family size.

Dr. Baldwin makes another point worthy of our notice today. Women who begin bearing children as teenagers are more likely to find themselves dependent on welfare for a protracted period of time. Teen parents often are prevented from achieving their educational and career goals and, as a consequence, are more reliant on public assistance. Today, more than 60 percent of all women on AFDC were teenagers when they had their first child. In 1975, $8.55 billion in Federal spending for AFDC, Medicaid, food stamps, and foster care went to teenage mothers and their children. This is an enormous sum, indeed.

It is quite clear that adolescent parents are not only more likely to require welfare, but also are more likely to be dependent on welfare for a long term, than are more mature parents. This is a recent finding by Mary Jo Bane and David Ellwood, of Harvard University. In The Dynamics of Welfare Dependency: The Routes to Self-Sufficiency, Bane and Ellwood examines the characteristics of those on welfare for long periods of time. They found:

> There are dramatic differences in the length of AFDC spells among different groups of recipients. Women who become a female head by having a child, nonwhites, high school dropouts, mothers with many children, and those without previous earnings all have longer spells of AFDC.

They also found that three-fourths of all spells on AFDC began when a woman became the head of the family, while only 12 percent began when a woman with children lost her job.

Obviously we must continue to provide forms of public assistance—AFDC, Medicaid, food stamps, and foster care services—to poor adolescent mothers and their children. But the pervasive and long-term character of the consequences of early childbirth is deeply disturbing. Long-term welfare dependency among adolescent mothers is dimming the future of thousands of young Americans.

The legislation I am introducing today, Mr. President, would address this situation directly, in a deliberate effort to reduce the long-term welfare dependency of so many families headed by teenage mothers. This legislation is designed to provide assistance and services to help these young mothers remain in school or find employment. The bill would support a package of particular services—child care, employment training, job placement, and academic and vocational education—that are the essential components of any effort to avert long-term welfare dependency in teenage parents. This measure, I would note, is similar to legislation I introduced in October 1984, S. 3084. It is my belief, my hope, that the services supported by this measure could enable thousands of adolescent parents to achieve real self-sufficiency.

This legislation would provide Federal grants to support States efforts to provide the services poor young mothers need to complete their educations and prepare themselves for employment. States applying for these funds would identify areas with a high incidence of teenage pregnancy, and funds would be targeted to low-income areas. States also would be directed to better coordinate the administration of Federal funds currently directed to teenage mothers—funds from Social Services Block Grant, the Job Training and Partnership Act, the Work Incentive Program, and the Maternal and Child Care Block Grant. In its applications for these funds, a State would produce a plan to target a specified core of services to teen mothers, to help them achieve greater self-sufficiency—day care services, so teen mothers can attend school or work; and employment training and job placement services, so teen mothers can gain the skills to support their children.

This measure is not intended to replace existing Federal initiatives, but to complement them. Existing programs—such as the Adolescent and Family Life Demonstration Project and title X of the Public Health Service Act—are important in efforts to discourage teenage sexual activity and provide family planning services. Indeed, in areas where the proportions of young people enrolled in family planning clinics have risen, adolescent birth rates correspondingly have fallen.

As we begin this Congress, I do invite my colleagues to join in the effort to find the best way to stem the alarming trend of long-term welfare dependency among these teenage parents. As a first step, I urge my colleague to join me in supporting this legislation. Any success, I would add, will provide dual benefits: Increased self-reliance for the teenage parent, and decreased costs for public assistance programs.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the legislation appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 19

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) part A of title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"GRANTS FOR SERVICE PROGRAMS FOR PREGNANT TEENAGERS AND TEENAGE MOTHERS

"SEC. 416. (a) In addition to amounts payable to States under section 403, the Secretary shall make grants to States in accordance with this section, subject to the amounts appropriated pursuant to subsection (d). The purpose of such grants shall be to assist States in carrying out programs which—

"(1) prevent long-term dependency upon aid to families with dependent children;

"(2) permit pregnant teenagers and teenage mothers to remain in school;

"(3) provide job counseling, employment readiness, job placement, and academic and vocational education services to pregnant teenagers and teenage mothers; and

"(4) integrate and coordinate services otherwise available to pregnant teenagers and teenage mothers.

"(b)(1) In order to receive a grant under this section a State must provide assurances to the Secretary that such grant shall be used to carry out a program which—

"(A) provides child day care, job training, job placement, and academic and vocational education services for pregnant teenagers and teenage mothers, and requires that each pregnant teenager or mother participate in a program leading to a high school diploma (or the equivlent) or in a job training program;

"(B) establishes a coordinated service network consisting of the services described in subparagraph (A) and other services available for pregnant teenagers and teenage mothers under title XX, part B of this title, the State program under title V, and the Job Training Partnership Act;

"(C) provides such services in an area or areas within the State which have a large number of low-income teenage mothers;

"(D) provides for maximum utilization of existing services, including those offered by private, nonprofit service providers;

"(E)(i) provides without charge any child day care services and transportation which may be necessary to allow the pregnant teenager or teenage mother to participate in the program, and

"(ii) provides child day care services, at a charge which is related to income, for a period of six months after completion of the high school diploma (or equivalent) or job training program, as may be necessary to allow the pregnant teenager or teenage mother to be employed; and

"(F) is administered by the same agency which administers the State plan under section 402, the same agency which administers the State plan approved under part B of this title, or the same agency which administers the block grant under title XX.

"(2) for purposes of this section, 'pregnant teenagers' and 'teenage mothers' means only pregnant women or mothers who are age 18 or under, or who are secondary school students.

"(c)(1) Any State receiving a grant under this section for a fiscal year shall provide a report to the Secretary at the close of such fiscal year which shall include the number and characteristics of individuals served by the State program, the services provided, and the results achieved. Such report shall also include data on the number of cases and the amounts of the aid to families with dependent children provided under this part for the fiscal year, broken down by the age of the parent or caretaker relative receiving such aid, by race, and by location within the State. The State shall also require each entity providing services under the State program to report to the State with respect to the number and characteristics of the individuals served by such entity, the services provided, and the results achieved.

"(2) The Secretary shall establish a systematic reporting system capable of yielding comprehensive data on which service figures and program evaluations shall be based. On or before each January 1 the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report describing the activities supported under this section during the fiscal year ending on the preceding September 30, including, at a minimum, the number and characteristics of persons served, the services provided, the results achieved, and the Secretary's plans and recommendations for the future.

"(d) For purposes of making grants to States under this section there are authorized to be appropriated $75,000,000 for fiscal year 1986 and for each fiscal year thereafter.".

By Mr. ROTH (for himself and Mr. EVANS):

S. 20. A bill to provide for a 2-year budget process, and for other purposes; jointly, pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs, with instructions that if one committee reports, the other committee has 30 days of continuous session to report or be discharged.

FEDERAL BUDGET REFORM ACT

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, today I rise to reintroduce S. 20, the Federal Budget Reform Act. Senator EVANS joins me in sponsoring S. 20.

It is clear that there is growing momentum for a 2-year budget process. Senator DOMENICI has agreed that the Budget Committee and the Governmental Affairs Committee will hold joint hearings on this legislation. The Governmental Affairs Committee, which shares jurisdiction on the budget process, has already held hearings on this issue during the past two Congresses. Alice Rivlin, former Director of the Congressional Budget Office, Charles Bowsher, Comptroller General, and Governor John Sununu, representing the National Governors Association, have all testified favorably on the legislation. Several other groups have expressed interest in a 2-year budget process, including the Grace Commission and the National Association of Public Administration.

Briefly, S. 20, would establish a 2-year budget cycle. The first session of each Congress would be devoted to budget and appropriations. Early in the year, the Congress would agree to a single binding budget resolution, which would prescribe spending and revenue limits for the 2-year period beginning in the next January. Within the framework of the budget resolution, the Congress would then approve an omnibus appropriation bill, which would combine the 13 annual appropriation bills into 1 2-year bill. The second session of each Congress would be devoted to considering authorizations and to oversight activities.

S. 20 would allow each new President and Congress to put their policies into place in the first year of their respective terms. Under S. 20, budget policy would go into effect in the second session of each term, as it now does under normal circumstances. I believe this approach to a biennial timetable would promote accountability to the public for budget decisions. Under alternative timetables, budget decisions would not actually go into effect until the election of the next Congress.

In conclusion, my legislation would streamline the cumbersome aspects of the current process while strengthening the overall control of the Congress over the Federal budget. S. 20 would provide us with more time for oversight and for careful review of authorizations. Recipients of Federal funds would have a clearer basis for planning. Stability and coherence would be promoted in the broad framework of our fiscal policy decisions.

Mr. President, I hope that Members who despair of the budget process will examine this legislation. I believe they will find a comprehensive and realistic alternative to our annual problems with the budget process.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 20

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Budget Reform Act".

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. It is the purpose of this Act—

(1) to establish a process through which the Federal budget will be adopted for a two-year period;

(2) to improve congressional control over the Federal budget process;

(3) to streamline the requirements of the budget process in order to promote better accountability to the public;

(4) to improve the legislative and budgetary processes by providing additional time for congressional oversight and other vital legislative activities;

(5) to provide stability and coherence for recipients of Federal funds; and

(6) to implement other improvements in the Federal budget process.

TWO-YEAR CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET PROCESS

(3) Section 3 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 622) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) The term 'two-year fiscal period' means the period of two years beginning on January 1 of each even-numbered year.

"(7) The term 'omnibus appropriation bill' means the bill providing new budget authority for a two-year fiscal period for all departments, agencies, and authorities of the Government.

"(8) The term 'supplemental appropriation bill' means a bill providing new budget authority for a two-year fiscal period for one or more departments, agencies, or authorities of the Government, which is considered in accordance with section 307(c).".

(c)(1) Section 202(a)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 602(a)(1)) is amended—

(A) by inserting "omnibus" before "appropriation bills";

(B) by striking out "and other" and inserting in lieu thereof "supplemental appropriation bills,"; and

(C) by striking out "or providing budget authority or" and inserting in lieu thereof "budget authority, and bills authorizing or providing".

(2) Section 202(f) of such Act (2 U.S.C. 602(f)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "April 1 of each year" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "April 15 and July 15 of each odd-numbered year";

(B) by striking out "fiscal year commencing on October 1 of that year" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "two-year fiscal period beginning on January 1 of the succeeding year";

(C) by striking out "such fiscal year" each place it appears in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "such two-year fiscal period";

(D) by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3), and (in such paragraph) by striking out "paragraph (1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) and (2)"; and

(E) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) On January 15 and July 15 of each even-numbered year, the Director shall submit to the Committees on the Budget of the House of Representatives and the Senate such revisions of the report required by paragraph (1) as may be necessary with respect to the two-year fiscal period in progress.".

(d) Section 300 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 631) is amended to read as follows:

"TIMETABLE

"SEC. 300. The timetable with respect to the congressional budget process for any Congress (beginning with the One-hundredth Congress) is as follows:

(2) the provisions of the Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (as such provisions were in effect on the day before the effective date of this Act) shall apply to the rescission and deferral of budget authority for the period beginning on October 1, 1987, and ending on December 31, 1987.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 21. A bill to redesignate the Department of Commerce as the Department of Trade and Commerce to consolidate all functions relating to international trade in the Department of Trade and Commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE ACT OF 1985

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, on this first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce S. 21, legislation to transform the current Department of Commerce into a new Department of Trade and Commerce.

Our Nation's difficulties with foreign trade are well known. Our trade deficit has reached truly shocking levels: based on the most recent Department of Commerce data, the 1984 merchandise trade deficit will be about $130 billion, and even our current account deficit will be in the range of $100 billion. This is more than twice the record trade deficit of a year earlier; more than four times the trade deficit in 1981. These unprecendented trade deficits are depressing our economy, despite equally unprecedented budget deficits: While domestic demand was growing at a healthy 5.7 percent during the third quarter of 1984, gross national product grew by only 1.9 percent—because much of that demand was fulfilled by foreign-produced goods.

Things were not always this bad. For 25 consecutive years following World War II, from 1946 to 1970, the United States always ran trade surpluses on its merchandise account. Times, then, have changed. As old markets contract, competition for them intensifies. Some of our trading partners subsidize their exports, and generously, but that is not the whole story. Put simply, quite apart from any subsidies they may receive from their own governments, for several years foreign industries have been receiving a huge subsidy from our own Government, as a result of the overvalued dollar.

Over the past 4 years, the dollar has appreciated about 60 percent against an average of other major currencies. The overvalued dollar makes American made goods more expensive in foreign markets, while foreign-produced goods become much cheaper in the American market. We have, in short, priced ourselves out of many world markets.

There is yet another reason for our deteriorating trade balance. Alone among the major nations of the world, we do not have one central place in our Government to coordinate information, policies, and assistance to promote our exports. Alone among the major nations of the world, we do not have one central place to which business and local governments can turn for help in promoting exports.

It is time to recognize that the world economy has changed, and to organize ourselves to make the most of the present-day realities. Crucial to this is the recognition that our Government must play a greater role in trade. We may accept this only reluctantly, insisting it is not so. But accept it we must, because it is so.

In its early years, the Department of Commerce was enormously useful, helping to create a truly national economy within the United States out of the regional economies that grew up in the first half of the 19th century. That work is done. Now, the Department should turn to the challenge of our own time—defining the role our national economy can play in a newly competitive world.

The Department can begin to do so, if we consolidate all the various trade-related responsibilities, currently strewn across the Government among seven cabinet departments and more than a half-dozen agencies and offices. There would be in one place the trade-related responsibilities currently carried out by the Departments of State, Treasury, Energy, Labor, Defense, Agriculture, and Commerce, as well as the Office of the Special Trade Representative in the Executive Office of the President, the Export-Import Bank, the International Trade Commission, the International Development Corporation Agency, the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, and the Small Business Administration. Under this legislation, the functions of the present Commerce Department would be organized in a new subdepartment devoted to domestic commerce, directed by an undersecretary.

The United States has long resisted state direction or planning of matters concerning international trade. We persist in speaking as we have for a half-century. We conjure up images of a world in free trade, failing to notice that the kind of economies assumed for such trade have, for the most part, passed from the world scene.

What is to be done? One course would have us continue to slide toward protectionism, sideways as it were, moving from one industry to another. Responding to some bit of damage after the fact with policies that ultimately bring more damage. There is an alternative: A coherent trade policy based on trade reorganization.

Mr. President, this is not a proposal to reshuffle a few offices within the Government, append a new name, and erect a new building. This is a thoughtful response to the disturbing patterns of current world trade. Alone among the major nations of the world, the United States lacks a cabinet position, one of full prestige and authority devoted to the Nation's role in the world economy. It is little wonder that America has yet to develop a coherent policy to address our trade problem. We do little or nothing, waiting for an invisible hand to sweep away the trade deficit. We have waited long enough; the problem will not simply correct itself. We need to organize, to collect all the trade-related functions of government in a single department responsible for making and coordinating trade policy. And we ought to do so soon. Delay condemns our trade policy to inaction, indecision, and inertia.

The bill I introduce today is the same one I introduced 2 years ago, on the first day of the 98th Congress. It is the broadest proposal on the table. I am not necessarily committed to including every function or office. But I am extremely serious when I say that the debate over trade reorganization must not be merely a diversion from our trade problems. It must be the means for taking effective action to address our trade problems.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort, and I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 21

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Department of Trade and Commerce Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the responsibility for developing and implementing the trade policy of the United States is divided among the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Defense, Energy, Labor, State, Transportation, and the Treasury, the United States Trade Representative, the International Development Corporation Agency, the International Trade Commission, the Small Business Administration and various other agencies;

(2) this division of trade responsibilities is cumbersome and has hindered efforts to expand international trade and to enforce the trade agreements of the United States, based upon the principles agreed to under the auspices of the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade;

(3) it is in the national interest to promote the export of American goods and services, aid local and state governments in their efforts to increase local export activities, and to encourage overseas investment and foreign investment in the United States, thereby creating domestic employment opportunities;

(4) international trade has become an increasingly important component of the national income of the United States with exports presently accounting for over 10 per centum of the gross national product;

(5) free international trade will more efficiently allocate the world's resources, increasing output and raising living standards for all trading nations;

(6) free trade between nations breaks down social and cultural barriers and leads to greater understanding and cooperation among the peoples of the world; and

(7) the creation of a Cabinet-level Department of Trade and Commerce will promote these objectives and help facilitate the development and implementation of a coordinated and coherent international economic policy for the United States.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act, unless othewise provided or indicated by the context—

(1) the term "Department" means the Department of Trade and Commerce or any component thereof;

(2) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Trade and Commerce;

(3) the term "department" means an executive department under section 101 of title 5, United States Code;

(1) strategic trade;

(2) financing and credit for international trade;

(3) the collection and analysis of information concerning the distribution of economic resources throughout the domestic economy; and

(4) such other offices as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(e) The Secretary shall prescribe the order by which the officers of the Department shall act for, and exercise the powers of, the Secretary during the absence or disability of the Secretary or in the event of a vacancy in the office of the Secretary.

FUNCTIONS

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary shall—

(1) exercise leadership, under the direction of the President, in international trade and domestic commerce matters;

(2) develop and coordinate the policies of the United States for the promotion of beneficial international trade relationships with respect to industrial and agricultural products, services, raw materials, and investment;

(3) negotiate agreements relating to the international trade of the United States and assert and protect the rights of the United States under such agreements;

(4) protect American industry, agriculture, and labor from unfair and injurious foreign trade practices;

(5) seek and promote new trade and commercial opportunities in foreign countries for American goods, services, and investment;

(6) assist in financing international trade between the United States and foreign countries;

(7) administer and enforce customs and related laws;

(8) promote and undertake the development, collection, analysis, and dissemination of technical statistical, economic, and other information relating to domestic and international trade and investment including analysis of the distribution of the supplies and flows of capital, labor, and other resources among the sectors of the national economy and the long-term implication of such distribution; and

(9) assist State and local government efforts to increase exports.

(b) In carrying out his functions, the Secretary shall consult, exchange information, and carry on joint planning, research, and other activities with the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Energy, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the heads of such other departments and agencies as the Secretary considers appropriate.

(c) The Secretary shall jointly study, with the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the heads of such other departments or agencies as the Secretary considers appropriate, how Federal policies and programs can ensure that international trade and commerce systems most effectively serve both national and international economic needs. The Secretary shall include in the annual report required by section 8 of this Act an account of the studies and activities conducted under this subsection, including any legislative recommendations which the Secretary determines desirable.

(d) The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Defense in carrying out the functions transferred by section 6(f).

(e) The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture in carrying out the functions transferred by section 6(l).

(n) There are transferred to the Secretary all functions of the Small Business Administration with respect to extensions of credit and revolving lines of credit to enable small business concerns to engage in export and import business.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 7. (a) In addition to the authority contained in any other Act authorizing functions transferred to the Secretary by this Act, the Secretary is authorized, subject to the civil service and classification provisions of title 5, United States Code, to select, appoint, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, including investigators, attorneys, and hearing examiners, as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, and to prescribe the authority and duties of such officers and employees.

(b) The Secretary may obtain services as authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, at rates not to exceed $100 per day for individuals unless otherwise specified in an appropriation Act.

(c) In addition to the authority to delegate and redelegate functions contained in any other Act authorizing functions transferred to the Secretary by this Act, the Secretary may delegate his functions to such officers and employees of the Department as he may designate, and may authorize such successive redelegations of such functions as he may find appropriate.

(d) The Secretary may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to administer and manage the functions of the Secretary or the Department.

(e)(1) The Secretary is authorized to establish a working capital fund, to be available without fiscal year limitation, for expenses necessary for the maintenance and operation of such common administrative services as the Secretary shall find to be desirable in the interest of economy and efficiency in the Department, including such services as—

(A) a central supply service for stationery and other supplies and equipment for which adequate stocks may be maintained to meet in whole or in part the requirements of the Department and its components;

(B) central messenger, mail, telephone, and other communications services;

(C) office space, central services for document reproduction, and for graphics and visual aids; and

(D) a central library service.

(2) The capital of the fund shall consist of any appropriations made for the purpose of providing working capital and the fair and reasonable value of such stocks of supplies, equipment, and other assets and inventories on order as the Secretary may transfer to the fund, less the related liabilities and unpaid obligations. Such funds shall be reimbursed in advance from available funds of agencies and offices in the Department, or from other sources, for supplies and services at rates which will approximate the expense of operation, including the accrual of annual leave and the depreciation of equipment. The fund shall also be credited with receipts from sale or exchange of property and receipts in payment for loss or damage to property owned by the fund. There shall be covered into the United States Treasury as miscellaneous receipts any surplus of the fund (all assets, liabilities, and prior losses considered) above the amounts transferred or appropriated to establish and maintain such fund. There shall be transferred to the fund the stocks of supplies, equipment, other assets, liabilities, and unpaid obligations relating to the services which the Secretary determines, with the approval of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, will be performed.

(f) The Secretary shall cause a seal of office to be made for the Department of such design as he shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken of such seal.

(g)(1) The Secretary is authorized to accept, hold, administer, and utilize gifts and bequests of property, both real and personal, for the purpose of aiding or facilitating the work of the Department. Gifts and bequests of money and the proceeds from sales of other property received as gifts or bequests shall be deposited in the Treasury in a separate fund and shall be disbursed upon order of the Secretary. Property accepted pursuant to this paragraph, and the proceeds thereof, shall be used as nearly as possible in accordance with the terms of the gift or bequest.

(2) For the purpose of Federal income, estate, and gift taxes, property accepted under paragraph (1) shall be considered as a gift or bequest to or for use of the United States.

(3) Upon the request of the Secretary, the Secretary of the Treasury may invest and reinvest in securities of the United States or in securities guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States any moneys contained in the fund provided for in paragraph (1). Income accruing from such securities, and from any other property held by the Secretary pursuant to paragraph (1), shall be deposited to the credit of the fund, and shall be disbursed upon order of the Secretary.

(h) The Secretary is authorized to appoint, without regard to the classification and civil service provisions of title 5, United States Code, such advisory committees as may be appropriate to assist the Department in the performance of its functions.

(i)(1) Subject to the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, the Secretary is authorized to make, enter into, and perform such contracts, grants, leases, cooperative agreements, or other similar transactions with Federal or other public agencies (including State and local governments) and private organizations and persons, and to make such payments, by way of advance or reimbursement, as the Secretary may determine necessary or appropriate to carry out functions of the Secretary or the Department.

(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no authority to enter into contracts or to make payments under this Act shall be effective except to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance under appropriation Acts. This subsection shall not apply with respect to the authority granted under subsection (g) of this section.

(j)(1) The Secretary is authorized, upon the written request of any person, or any State, territory, possession, or political subdivision thereof, to (A) make special statistical studies relating to international trade and domestic commerce, (B) prepare from the records of the Department special statistical compilations, and (C) furnish transcripts of such studies and compilations of the Department upon the payment of the actual cost of such study or compilation by the person or body requesting such work.

(2) All moneys received by the Department in payment for any study or compilation prepared under paragraph (1) shall be deposited in a separate account to be administered under the direction of the Secretary. Such moneys may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary, for the ordinary expenses incidental to the preparation of any such study or compilation or to secure in connection therewith the services of persons who are not officers or employees of the United States, to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

(k)(1) The Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts, to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, with educational institutions, public or private agencies or organizations, or persons for the conduct of research into any aspect of the problems related to the programs of the Department which are authorized by statute.

(2) The Secretary shall require a showing that any institution, agency, organization, or person with which the Secretary expects to enter into any contract pursuant to this subsection have the capability of doing effective work. The Secretary shall furnish such advice and assistance to any such institution, agency, organization, or person as the Secretary determines will best carry out the functions of the Department, participate in coordinating all research initiated under this subsection, and indicate the lines of inquiry which the Secretary considers most important. The Secretary shall encourage, and assist in the establishment and maintenance of, cooperation by and between all institutions, agencies, organizations, or persons with which the Secretary enters into contracts under this subsection, and between such institutions, agencies, organizations, and persons and other research organizations, the Department, and other Federal departments and agencies.

(3) The Secretary may disseminate in the form of reports or publications to public or private agencies or organizations, or individuals such information as the Secretary finds pertinent on the research carried out pursuant to this section.

(4) This subsection does not modify or repeal any provision of law administered by the Department which authorizes contracts for research.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 8. The Secretary shall, as soon as practicable after the end of each fiscal year, prepare and transmit a written report to the President on the activities of the Department during such fiscal year, including activities under section 5(c) of this Act. The President shall submit such report to the Congress.

TRANSFER MATTERS

SEC. 9. (a) The personnel, assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available or to be made available, in connection with the functions, offices, and agencies transferred by this Act, are, subject to section 1531 of title 31, United States Code, transferred to the Department for appropriate allocation.

(b) The transfer of personnel pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall be without reduction in classification or compensation for one year after such transfer.

(c) Any person who, on the day preceding the effective date of this Act, held a position compensated in accordance with the Executive Schedule, and who, without a break in service, is appointed in the Department to a position having duties comparable to those performed immediately preceding his appointment shall continue to be compensated in his new position at not less than the rate provided for his previous position, for the duration of his service in his new position.

(d) In the exercise of the functions transferred under this Act, the Secretary shall have the same authority as was exercised by the head of the department or agency exercising such functions immediately preceding their transfer, and the actions of the Secretary in exercising such functions shall have the same force and effect as when exercised by the head of the department or agency from whom such functions are transferred.

(e)(1) The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, at such time as the Director provides, may make such determinations as may be necessary with regard to the functions, offices, agencies, or portions thereof, transferred by this Act, and to make such additional incidental dispositions of personnel, assets, liabilities, grants, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available in connection with such functions, offices, agencies, or portions thereof, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. The Director shall provide for such further measures and dispositions as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this Act, and for the termination of the Office of United States Trade Representative.

(2) After consultation with the Director of the Office of Personnel Management, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget is authorized, at such time as the Director of the Office of Management and Budget provides, to make such determinations as may be necessary with regard to the transfer of positions within the Senior Executive Service in connection with functions, offices, and agencies transferred by this Act.

SAVINGS PROVISIONS

SEC. 10. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, certificates, licenses, and privileges—

(1) which have been issued, made, granted, or allowed to become effective in the exercise of functions which are transferred under this Act by (A) any department or agency, any functions of which are transferred by this Act, or (B) any court of competent jurisdiction; and shall continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, superseded, set aside, or repealed by the President, the Secretary, by any court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(b) The provisions of this Act shall not affect any proceedings pending at the time this Act takes effect before any department or agency or any component thereof, the functions of which are transferred by this Act; but such proceedings, to the extent that they relate to functions so transferred, shall be continued before the Department. Orders shall be issued in such proceedings, appeals shall be taken therefrom, and payments shall be made pursuant to such orders, as if this Act had not been enacted; and orders issued in any such proceedings shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or repealed by the Secretary, by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (e)—

(1) the provisions of this Act shall not affect actions commenced prior to the date this Act takes effect, and

(2) in all such actions proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered, in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

(d) No action or other proceeding commenced by or against any officer in his official capacity as an officer for any department or agency from whom functions are transferred by this Act shall abate by reason of the enactment of this Act. No cause of action by or against any department or agency from which functions are transferred by this Act, or by or against any officer thereof in his official capacity shall abate by reason of the enactment of this Act. Causes of action and actions with respect to a function, offfice, or agency transferred by this Act, or other proceedings may be asserted by or against the United States or an official of the Department as may be appropriate and, in an action pending when this Act takes effect, the court may at any time, on its own motion or that of any party, enter an order which will give effect to the provisions of this subsection.

(e) If before the date on which this Act takes effect, any department, office, or agency, or any officer thereof in his official capacity, is a party to an action, and under this Act—

(1) such office or agency is transferred to the Department, or agency; or

(2) any function of such department, office, agency, or officer is transferred to the Secretary, such action shall be continued with the Secretary or other appropriate official of the Department substituted or added as a party.

(f) Orders and actions of the Secretary in the exercise of the functions transferred under this Act shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders and actions had been by the head of the department, office, or agency in exercising such functions immediately preceding their transfer. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, actions upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any functions transferred by this Act shall apply to the exercise of such functions by the Secretary.

(g)(1) Reference in any other Federal law to the Department of Commerce (or any office or agency thereof) or to the Secretary of Commerce shall be deemed to mean the Department or the Secretary, respectively.

(2) With respect to any function transferred by this Act and exercised after the effective date of this Act, reference in any other Federal law to any department, office, or agency, or any officer thereof, the functions of which are so transferred, shall be deemed to mean the Secretary or the Department.

TERMINATION

SEC. 11. The Office of the United States Trade Representative is terminated.

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 12. (a) Section 19(d)(1) of title 3, United States Code, is amended by striking out "Secretary of Commerce" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Trade and Commerce".

(b) Section 101 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "The Department of Commerce." and inserting in lieu thereof "The Department of Trade and Commerce.".

(c)(1) Section 5312 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out the item relating to the Secretary of Commerce and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Secretary of Trade and Commerce"; and

(B) by striking out the item relating to the Special Representative for Trade Negotiations.

(2) Section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out the items relating to the Under Secretary of Commerce and the Deputy Special Representatives for Trade Negotiations and by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Under Secretary of International Trade of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

"Under Secretary of Domestic Commerce of the Department of Trade and Commerce.".

(3) Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out the item relating to the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The Assistant Secretaries of Trade and Commerce (8).''; and

(B) by striking out the item relating to the General Counsel of the Department of Commerce and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The General Counsel of the Department of Trade and Commerce.".

(4) Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking out the item relating to the Commissioner of Customs, Department of the Treasury and by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Commissioner of Customs, Department of Trade and Commerce."; and

(B) by striking out "Department of Commerce" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof in each such place "Department of Trade and Commerce."

(d) Section 242(a) of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 (19 U.S.C. 1872(a)) is amended by striking out "United States Trade Representative" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Trade and Commerce who shall be Chairman".

(e)(1) The first sentence of section 231 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2191) is amended by striking out "Secretary of State" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary of Department of Trade and Commerce".

(2) The first paragraph of section 233(b) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 2193(b)) is amended by striking out the third sentence thereof, and by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of Trade and Commerce shall be a permanent voting member of the Board, ex officio.".

(3) Section 233(c) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 2193(c)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The President of the Corporation shall report to the Secretary of Trade and Commerce.".

(f)(1) Section 3(a) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635a(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Export-Import Bank of the United States is established as an independent agency within the Department of Trade and Commerce.".

(2) Section 3(b) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 635a(b)) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The President of the Bank shall report to the Secretary of Trade and Commerce.".

(3) The first sentence of section 3(c) of such Act (12 U.S.C. 635a(c)) is amended to read as follows: "There shall be a Board of Directors of the Bank consisting of the President of the Export-Import Bank of the United States, who shall serve as Chairman, the First Vice President of the Bank who shall serve as Vice Chairman, the Secretary of Trade and Commerce, and two additional persons appointed by the President of the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(g) The first section and section 2 of the Act of March 3, 1927 (44 Stat. 1381, chapter 348; 19 U.S.C. 2071 and 2072) and section 301 of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075) are amended by striking out "the Treasury" each time it appears and by inserting in lieu thereof "International Trade and Commerce".

(h) The first sentence of section 330(a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1330(a)) is amended to read as follows: "The United States International Trade Commission (referred to in this title as the 'commission') is an independent agency within the Department of Trade and Commerce and shall be composed of six commissioners who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 13. If any provision of this Act and the amendments made by this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE; INITIAL APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS

SEC. 14. (a) This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect ninety days after the date on which the Secretary first takes office, or on such prior date after enactment of this Act as the President shall prescribe and publish in the Federal Register.

(b) Notwithstanding subsection (a), any of the officers provided for in this Act may be appointed in the manner provided for in this Act at any time after the date of enactment of this Act. Any such officer shall be compensated from the date he first takes office at the rates provided for in this Act. Such compensation and related expenses of any such officer shall be paid from funds available for the functions to be transferred to the Department pursuant to this Act.

INTERIM APPOINTMENTS

SEC. 15. (a) If one or more officers required by this Act to be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate has entered upon office on the effective date of this Act and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the President may designate an officer in the executive branch to act in such office for one hundred and twenty days or until the office is filled as provided in this Act, whichever occurs first.

(b) Any officer acting in an office due to a designation by the President under subsection (a) shall receive compensation at the rate prescribed for such office.

By Mr. PROXMIRE:

S. 22. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934, in order to recognize, strengthen, and further the objectives of the first amendment in relationship to radio and television broadcasting stations; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

FIRST AMENDMENT CLARIFICATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, today I am introducing the First Amendment Clarification Act of 1985.

This bill is similar to a measure I first introduced in 1975 and then again in 1977, 1979, 1981, and 1983.

The major goal of this legislation is to give fuller meaning to our first amendment's guarantee of freedom of the press by abolishing the so-called fairness doctrine and the equal time rule.

FREE PRESS RIGHTS

The first amendment forbids the Congress from passing any law that might diminish our right to have a free press.

But, unfortunately, Congress has enacted a law which does just that. I refer, of course, to the Communications Act, which has abridged the rights of a part of the free press.

Other means of mass communication—newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, books, and motion pictures—have kept their free press rights. But not broadcasting.

In the most recent Roper poll released by the television information office, 65 percent of the respondents said that they got their news information from television while 18 percent cited radio. Clearly, television and radio are the dominant source of news for the American people. Yet, because of governmental controls like the fairness doctrine and the equal time rule, broadcasters are second-class citizens when it comes to first amendment rights.

Freedom of the press is for the benefit of all Americans. If television and radio, the most popular disseminators of news and opinion, continue to be tied down by stifling Government regulation, the people of this Nation will continue to be the losers.

Mr. President, my bill aims to change this situation by giving broadcasters more of the first amendment freedom they deserve.

PURPOSE DEFINED

The first section of my bill defines its purpose: To recognize and confirm the applicability of the first amendment to broadcasting and to strengthen and further the objectives of the first amendment.

This purpose is to be accomplished by removing certain statutory regulatory restrictions placed on broadcasters operating under the Communications Act of 1934.

Section 2 of my bill deals with the definition of "public interest, convenience, and necessity" under which broadcasters operate.

That phrase in the Communications Act is currently used to make broadcasters accountable to the Federal Communications Commission, after the fact, for everything they put on the air.

My proposal makes it clear that the term "public interest, convenience, and necessity" cannot be construed to give the FCC jurisdiction to require that any person be provided broadcast time, or to require that any viewpoint be given broadcast time.

Section 3 of my bill repeals that part of the Communications Act which permits the FCC to revoke the license of any station that willfully refuses or fails to allow a candidate for Federal office to buy reasonable amounts of broadcast time.

SECTION 315 REPEALED

Section 4 repeals section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934. Section 315 contains both the equal time rule and the basis for the FCC's Fairness Doctrine.

The equal time rule requires that when a candidate for public office is given or sold time, any other candidate for that same office must be given an equal opportunity.

That sounds great. But the equal time rule is an abridgment of the first amendment. It is governmental control over a part of the free press.

The Fairness Doctrine of the FCC requires that broadcasters afford reasonable opportunities for the presentation of contrasting viewpoints on controversial issues of public importance.

Unlike the equal time requirement, the Fairness Doctrine does not call for each viewpoint to receive the same amount of air time. Nor does it require that the other viewpoint be given in the same program.

Again, that sounds fine. But the Fairness Doctrine, like the equal time rule, violates the first amendment. Once more, a segment of the free press is being regulated by the Government.

PUBLIC BROADCASTING

Section 5 deals with a first amendment problem contained in section 396(g)(1)(A) of the Communications Act of 1934, which authorizes the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to facilitate the full development of educational broadcasting in which programs of high quality, obtained from diverse sources, are to be made available to noncommercial educational television or radio stations. But this must be done with strict adherence to objectivity and balance in all programs or series of programs of a controversial nature.

Such a Government-imposed standard is inappropriate and undesirable. Trying to enforce it can result in a chilling effect on the free play of ideas which public broadcasting should help promote.

By simply deleting this standard, section 5 of my bill is designed to solve the first amendment problem it poses.

Finally, section 6 of my bill repeals the prohibition on political editorializing by noncommercial educational broadcasting stations. This section of the current law, aimed at licensees, seems clearly unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 22

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE AND STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the "First Amendment Clarification Act of 1985".

(b) It is the purpose of this Act to recognize and confirm the applicability of and to strengthen and further the objectives of the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States by removing statutory and regulatory restrictions on broadcasters operating under the Communications Act of 1934.

DEFINITION OF PUBLIC INTEREST, CONVENIENCE, AND NECESSITY

SEC. 2. Section 309 of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(j) Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, effective on and after the date of the enactment of this subsection for the purposes of this part, the term 'public interest, convenience, and necessity' may not be construed to give the Commission jurisdiction to require the provision of broadcast time to any person or for the expression of any viewpoint.".

REPEAL OF LICENSE OR CONSTRUCTION PERMIT REVOCATION POWER RELATING TO FACILITIES FOR CANDIDATES FOR FEDERAL PUBLIC OFFICE

SEC. 3. Section 312(a) of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by inserting "or" at the end of clause (5), striking out the semicolon and "or" at the end of clause (6) and inserting in lieu thereof a period, and striking out clause (7).

REPEAL OF SECTION 315 RELATING TO FACILITIES AND CANDIDATES FOR PUBLIC OFFICE

SEC. 4. Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 is repealed.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN LIMITATIONS ON CORPORATION FOR PUBLIC BROADCASTING

SEC. 5. Section 396(g)(1)(A) of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by striking out all beginning with the comma following "telecommunications entities" to the semicolon at the end thereof.

REPEAL OF PROHIBITION OF POLITICAL EDITORIALS

SEC. 6. Section 399 of the Communications Act of 1934 is repealed.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself and Mr. HEINZ):

S. 23. A bill to reauthorize trade adjustment assistance for workers and firms; to the Committee on Finance.

TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce legislation to reauthorize the trade adjustment assistance [TAA] program. I am pleased to be joined by my distinguished friend and colleague, Senator HEINZ. Our bill would extend the TAA program—which will expire on September 30 of this year—for another 6 years.

My colleagues know of our concern with certain aspects of the program, and of our continuing interest and desire to reform TAA. In the coming months I will introduce additional legislation to reform the program in various ways. Appropriate eligibility criteria, sources of secure and adequate funding, ways to enhance the effectiveness of worker retraining, and firm and industry assistance, are all areas of great interest.

We are introducing this simple reauthorization bill today to facilitate prompt congressional consideration, and because we believe that the program must be maintained.

Trade adjustment assistance represents a commitment made to the American worker two decades ago, at the time of the Kennedy round of multilateral trade negotiations. We recognized then that while open trade is essential to a healthy domestic economy, important segments of our work force are adversely affected by import competition. Trade adjustment assistance addresses the needs of affected workers, helping them while they are unemployed and enabling them to receive training for new jobs in different sectors of the economy.

Indeed, the success of the Tokyo round of the multilateral trade negotiations—the last great achievement of GATT—resulted in part because the American labor movement supported the further lowering of tariffs. The labor movement's support was maintained in the knowledge that the TAA program would protect American workers from the adverse consequences of some of these governmental trade decisions.

The benefits of tariff reduction and trade liberalization have been appreciable, and widespread; the costs in terms of worker displacement have been much more focused. It is for workers in the effected industries, and the individual companies, that the TAA program exists.

The need persists. The most recent figures by the Department of Commerce show that our trade deficit in 1984 reached the truly unprecedented level of $126 billion. In 1 year. That is more than twice the record deficit of only 1 year ago; and more than four times as large as our trade deficit in 1981.

That deficit translates directly into lost job opportunities. Alfred Eckes, of the International Trade Commission, has estimated that for every billion-dollar increase in the trade deficit, 25,000 new job opportunities are lost. That means in the last 4 years, our trade deficit has cost American workers 2½ million job opportunities—with more than 50 percent of that in the last year alone.

We might listen more carefully to the Ruth Dunham's of our land. For 28 years, Ruth Dunham has been a lathe and saw operator in a clothespin plant in West Paris, ME, a town that has seen imports close down its shoe and textile concerns. Last April, she told a reporter for the Wall Street Journal that "you'd think the Government would look out for people in this country." She was expressing a simple but fundamental desire: she wants to continue working.

Can we not listen to the Ruth Dunhams? We can start by insisting on enforcement of the existing remedies against unfair trade practices, remedies provided for in the GATT agreements. But that will not be enough. There will continue to be American workers displaced as a result of tough—yet fair—international competition. Our task must be to facilitate, to the extent possible, the movement of American workers into jobs in industries with a future. Which is to say, jobs that are internationally competitive.

That is what TAA is all about. TAA has flaws; the program could use some improvement. But the basic idea is sound. The TAA program, even as is, should be extended.

I urge my colleagues to join me, and I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 23

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) Section 245 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2317 is amended by striking out "each of the fiscal years 1982 through 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years 1982 through 1991".

(b) Section 285 of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1991".

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. DECONCINI, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 24. A bill to amend the Safe Drinking Water Act to provide for the protection of certain recharge areas overlying sole source underground water supplies; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SOLE SOURCE AQUIFER PROTECTION ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce the Sole Source Aquifer Protection Act of 1985, to protect our Nation's valuable ground water resources. I have done so before, on February 23, 1982 and again on April 18, 1983, and the need today is no less great.

The legislation is designed to protect critical underground water supplies that provide a region's sole source of drinking water.

Section 1424e of the Safe Drinking Water Act, the Members of this body will recall, established a procedure to formally designate sole source aquifers. Thus far, 17 aquifers have been designated. This legislation would enable the Environmental Protection Agency to assist State and local governments in their efforts to protect these underground water supplies, by offering matching grants for planning and implementation, as well as technical guidance.

Over the last two decades, our Nation has repeatedly recognized the need to protect surface water. The Clean Water Act of 1972 set in place a massive national effort to monitor and control the discharge of dangerous pollutants into surface waters. Since then, the Federal Government has spent nearly $30 billion to construct municipal wastewater treatment plants. In addition, Congress enacted the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act and the Superfund to prevent future Love Canals and respond to land-based hazardous waste sites with which we still must live.

At the same time, we have neglected to protect our Nation's undergound supplies with similar efforts. Historically, the safety of ground water supplies has been the responsibility of our State and local governments. A variety of Federal statutes do provide some protection from particular sources of ground water pollution. Yet, according to a recent study by the Office of Technology Assessment, the focus of Federal programs has been too narrow. Environmental controls have been established only for the most obvious sources, and Federal drinking water standards have been developed for only a few substances. Equally important, some of the most effective preventive strategies to maintain good ground water quality have rarely been applied.

We now realize how seriously the activities on the land above an aquifer can and do affect the quality of the ground water below and its viability as a water supply for future generations. As precipitation diffuses through the land surface and recharges the ground water, it carries with it substances that have leaked into the soil or been placed on the land. In many cases, water passing through a relatively small, well defined land area can recharge a large ground water reservoir. Careful protection of these recharge zones is one of the cheapest and most effective means of maintaining good ground water quality. Comprehensive ground water protection, then, involves much more than proper landfill design and other technological controls. It involves as well careful planning of the location, design, and intensity of human activities in ground water recharge zones.

Long Island, in my home State of New York, is an excellent case in point. In the mid-1970's, in the words of the Suffolk County, Long Island Health Commissioner Dr. David Harris, we came to "the shocking discovery that our Long Island ground water was contaminated with chemicals." Improved testing techniques produced this discovery, and after extensive testing, it became apparent that the ground water was vulnerable to almost all soluble organic compounds. According to Dr. John Dowling, Nassau County Health Commissioner, over the last 30 years, 54 public supply wells have been abandoned or deepened because of ground water contamination.

On Long Island, the prime recharge zone in an area known as the Central Suffolk Pine Barrens, tract of approximately 110,000 acres. The early settlers of Long Island, saw the Pine Barrens as an area useless for farming or grazing. As a result, it has arrived as the largest undeveloped tract of land on Long Island. Far from barren, the Pine Barrens is rich in one very special resource—ground water.

Three million people on Long Island depend today on the aquifer as their sole source of drinking water, while the island's porous soil makes these aquifers especially vulnerable to contamination. Today, the deep waters that supply so many of Long Island's residents are still relatively clean. Water drawn from Long Island's Magothy Aquifer fell as rain decades ago, and much of this water passed through the soils of the Pine Barrens, and thereby ensure the purity of the water supply for decades to come.

This legislation would provide a framework for Federal-State cooperation to help protect critical recharge areas such as the Pine Barrens. Any region in the Nation designated by the EPA as a sole source aquifer could qualify for support to protect critical recharge zones. With this Federal assistance, State and local governments could undertake a broad range of measures, to ensure that their community development proceeds in a manner compatible with water quality.

Participation in the special protection area program would be entirely optional. This legislation, I would note, will not involve the Federal Government in local land use decisions. Nor would it establish a new regulatory structure, or call for new regulations.

The sole source aquifer designation, provided under the Safe Drinking Water Act of 1974, was intended to control Federal development activities in regions entirely dependent on ground water for drinking supplies. Experience has shown that without broader planning and management, this designation cannot control many activities which adversely affect the quality of ground water. This legislation would help do so.

I urge my colleagues to join me, and I ask unanimous consent that the text and a summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 24

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Sole Source Aquifer Protection Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Part C if title XIV of the public Health Service Act (the "Safe Drinking Water Act") is amended by inserting the following new section at the end thereof:

"PROTECTION OF CRITICAL GROUND WATER RECHARGE AREAS

"SEC. 1426. (a) Recognizing the dependence of the Nation on its groundwater resources, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the Federal Government shall cooperate with States and municipalities in the preparation and implementation of regional plans for protection of critical groundwater recharge areas.

"(b) The Congress finds that—

"(1) almost half of the Nation's citizens depend on groundwater for potable water supplies;

"(2) scientific evidence is mounting of contamination of groundwater by toxic organic compounds, nutrients, salts, and other pollutants in all regions of the country;

"(3) groundwater contamination, once it occurs, is extremely difficult to mitigate;

"(4) certain areas overlying a sole source aquifer are particularly critical in maintaining high quality groundwater because of their relatively high rates of existing or potential recharge or proximity to major zones of withdrawal;

"(5) prevention of pollution of high quality groundwater and protection of its critical recharge watershed area cost substantially less than measures to mitigate harm following contamination; and

"(6) there exists no established process to coordinate Federal, State, and local authorities who share responsibilities in the protection of groundwater resources.

"(c) The purposes of this section are—

"(1) to establish procedures for the designation of special protection areas, defined by hydrogeology, water quality, and land use as of critical importance in maintaining water quality in the designated sole source area;

"(2) to establish procedures for the development and implementation of a site-specific comprehensive management plan for each designated special protection area; and

"(3) to establish guidelines for Federal-State cooperation in the planning, funding, and implementation required to carry out the purposes of this section; and

"(4) to provide Federal financial assistance to States and their municipalities in the development and implementation of policies to protection critical groundwater recharge areas but not to impose substantive limitations on State and local land use authorities.

"(d)(1) Upon designation of a sole or principal source area, pursuant to section 1424(e), any one or several municipalities within such area may petition the Governor of the State in which the area is located to apply for the designation of 'special protection area' within such area.

"(2) A petition under this subsection shall propose boundaries for the special protection area and further shall evaluate whether—

"(A) the proposed special protection area is a recharge zone for significant volumes of groundwater with drinking water supply potential;

"(B) the groundwater which is recharged through the proposed special protection area is of high quality;

"(C) portions within the sole or principal source area are already contaminated with toxic organics, nutrients, salts, or other pollutants;

"(D) maintenance of high quality in the ground water recharged through the proposed special protection area would have significant economic, social, and ecological benefits for the sole or principal source area; and

"(E) degradation of groundwater recharged through the proposed special protection area would have significant economic, social, and ecological costs for the area.

"(e) Within one hundred and eighty days following receipt of a petition under this section, the Governor, considering the criteria set forth in subparagraphs (A) through (E) of subsection (d)(2), shall approve or disapprove the petition. If the Governor approves such petition, he shall—

"(1) propose the boundaries of the special protection area;

"(2) designate or, if necessary, establish a planning entity to develop a comprehensive management plan (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'plan') for the special protection area with adequate representation of municipalities to assure their participation throughout the planning process;

"(3) establish technical and citizens advisory committees, hold hearings, and take other appropriate steps to assure and encourage public participation; and

"(4) establish procedures for review, approval, and adoption of the plan pursuant to State law and offer assistance to municipalities and other public agencies with authority, pursuant to State law, to implement the plan.

"(f)(1) Pursuant to approval of the petition as set forth in subsection (e), the Governor shall submit to the Administrator—

"(A) proposed boundaries of the special protection area; and

"(B) a description of the planning entity and the technical and citizens advisory committees.

"(2) Within sixty days after submission of the items referred to in paragraph (1) to the Administrator, the Administrator shall approve or disapprove the Governor's proposed boundaries and the designated planning entity.

"(3) The Administrator may approve the Governor's proposed boundaries and the designated planning entity if he finds that—

"(A) the boundaries are based on the criteria set forth in subparagraphs (A) through (E) of subsection (d)(2) of this section and the purposes of section 1424(e); and

"(B) the planning entity has the authority, pursuant to State law, and the technical expertise to prepare the plan.

"(4) If the Administrator disapproves either the Governor's proposed boundaries or the designated planning entity, he shall submit his reasons for disapproval to the Governor. The Governor may resubmit his request at his discretion.

"(5) If the Administrator approves the Governor's proposed boundaries and the designated planning entity, he may provide to the State, on a matching basis, a grant of 50 per centum to the costs incurred in preparing the petition and developing the plan. The designated planning entity, through the Governor, shall be eligible for such planning funds for a period not to exceed two years.

"(g)(1) A planning entity designated under this section shall be authorized and directed to prepare a comprehensive management plan consistent with the purposes of this Act for the special protection area. In order for a plan to qualify for funding under this Act, such plan shall be designed to maintain the quality of the groundwater recharged through the special protection area through maintenance, to the maximum extent possible, of the natural vegetative and hydrogeologic conditions. Such plan shall include but not be limited to—

"(A) a determination of the quality of the existing groundwater recharged through said special protection area and the natural recharge capabilities of the special protection area water shed;

"(B) an identification of existing and potential point and nonpoint sources of groundwater degradation, groundwater flow patterns, and the relationship between surface water management and groundwater recharge;

"(C) recommendations for groundwater quality standards designed to maintain existing groundwater quality or improve existing groundwater quality if prevailing conditions fail to meet drinking water standards, pursuant to this Act and State law;

"(D) a map showing the detailed boundary of the special protection area;

"(E) a resource assessment which suggests the amount, location, and type of human development and activity which the ecosystem can sustain while still maintaining existing ground and surface water quality and protecting unique ecological features related to maintenance of water quality;

"(F) proposal of limits on Federal, State, and local government, financially assisted activities and projects which, directly or indirectly, may contribute, in any way whatsoever, to any degradation of such groundwater or any loss of natural surface and subsurface infiltration or purification capability of the special protection area watershed;

"(G) development of a comprehensive statement of land use management as it pertains to the maintenance and enhancement of groundwater quality and quantity;

"(H) proposal of limits on land uses in the special protection area which might have an adverse impact on water quality, recharge capabilities, or both;

"(I) consideration and proposal of specific techniques, including, but not limited to clustering, transfer of development rights, and other innovative measures sufficient to achieve the objectives of this section;

"(J) consideration of the establishment of a State institution to facilitate and assist in funding a development transfer credit system;

"(K) proposal to designate specific areas within the special protection area suitable and appropriate for public acquisition for fee or less than fee interests; and

"(L) a program for State and local implementation of the plan described in this subsection in a manner that will insure the continued, uniform, consistent protection of the special protection area in accord with the purposes of this section.

"(2) During the development of the comprehensive management plan, the planning entity shall—

"(A) consult with appropriate officials of any municipality or State or Federal agency which has jurisdiction over lands and waters within the boundaries of the special protection area;

"(B) transmit any draft and final plan to all appropriate municipalities for review and comment;

"(C) consult with interested professional, scientific, and citizen organizations;

"(D) consult with the technical and citizen advisory committees which shall be established by the Governor; and

"(E) conduct public hearings, pursuant to State law, at places within the special protection area, and at such places as may be appropriate, for the purpose of providing interested persons and municipalities with an opportunity to comment on any aspect of the plan.

"(h) Upon completion of the process set forth in subsection (g) or an equivalent process acceptable to the Governor and the Administrator, the planning entity shall submit the plan to the Governor for review. The Governor shall approve or disapprove the plan. In his review of the plan, the Governor shall consider whether—

"(1) the plan will achieve the stated water quality objectives of the plan and this section and protect the ecological value of the special protection area which may be significant to maintain water quality;

"(2) the plan requires the exercise of land use and zoning measures to the greatest extent practicable to regulate the use of land and water resources in a manner consistent with the purposes of this section;

"(3) the planning entity has afforded adequate opportunity, including public hearings, for public involvement in the preparation and review of the plan, has considered such review and comment in the plan as submitted to him;

"(4) written assurances have been received from appropriate municipalities that the recommended implementation program identified in the plan will be initiated within a reasonable time after the approval of the plan by the Administrator;

"(5) the necessary authority and resources exist, pursuant to State law, to assure implementation of the plan at the State and local level; and

"(6) a separate management entity should be designated or established, pursuant to State law, to implement the plan.

"(i)(1) The Governor shall submit a plan approved pursuant to subsection (h) to the Administrator for review. Within one hundred and twenty days, the Administrator shall approve the plan or submit in writing to the Governor his reasons for not approving it. If approval is not given, the Governor shall have ninety days to resubmit a modified plan to the Administrator. In his review, the Administrator shall consider the criteria set forth in subsection (g)(1), and after consultation with the Secretary of Defense, shall determine whether the national defense mission of military installations or related production facilities within, contiguous or adjacent to the special protection area have been adequately provided for.

"(2) If the Administrator approves the plan, he may provide to the State or the appropriate subdivision thereof on a matching basis a grant of 50 per centum of the costs of implementing certain features of the plan including but not limited to public land acquisition within the special protection area and a land credit exchange institution, pursuant to State law, but in no case shall the grant exceed $25,000,000.

"(j)(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out subsections (e) and (g) for development of the plan, and for making grants under subsection (f)(5), $10,000,000 for each of the years ending September 30, 1986; September 30, 1987; and September 30, 1988.

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated for grants to implement the plan pursuant to subsection (i)(2), $10,000,000 in the year ending September 30, 1986; $25,000,000 in the year ending September 30, 1987; and $50,000,000 for each years ending September 30, 1988; and September 30, 1989, such sums to remain available until expended.

"(3) Funds authorized under this subsection shall only be used to carry out the activities set forth in this section. No funds authorized in this subsection may be used to carry out activities authorized by the Clean Water Act, the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, or other sections of the Safe Drinking Water Act.

"(k) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'plan' means the comprehensive management plan developed pursuant to subsection (g) or an equivalent process approved by the Governor of the State and the Administrator;

"(2) the term 'land credit exchange institution' means any institution established under State law to facilitate the exchange, transfer, acquisition, and donation of development rights, conservation easements, or other partial interests in land; and

"(3) the term 'recharge' means the downward flow of water to the water table.".

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today Senator MOYNIHAN and I are reintroducing a bill, the Sole Source Aquifer Protection Act of 1985 which amends the Safe Water Drinking Act. This important legislation was originally introduced in the 98th Congress, but failed to receive the serious consideration this issue warrants.

In light of the threat to much of our Nation's water source from ground water contamination, I urge the Senate to move quickly on this bill in the coming session. If we are to heed the predictions and warnings of the experts, we must now take steps to ensure the United States does not experience a water crisis like the energy crisis of the 1970's.

Ground water for potable water supplies is depended on by almost all nations. Throughout this country, there is mounting scientific evidence of ground water contamination. Unfortunately, this contamination is usually irreversible.

In 16 Massachusetts communities, 25 communities in Pennsylvania, and 22 communities in New York, public water supplies have been discovered to be contaminated. Due to organic contamination, about 100 drinking wells surrounding a landfill in Jackson Township, NJ, have been closed. Under the Rocky Mountain Arsenal near Denver, CO, 30 square miles of the shallow aquifer table are contaminated by chemical byproducts from the manufacture of pesticides and herbicides. A number of domestic stock and irrigation wells have been temporarily abandoned and two have been permanently closed. Unless we act to preserve the quality of its aquifers, Long Island's ground water contamination problem may become a critical one.

Three aquifers are depended on by Long Island residents for their water supplies. About 2.8 million people currently depend solely on these three aquifers as a source of drinking water. This dependence creates a potentially critical situation. Plentiful rainfall combined with highly porous soils, maximize the potential for contaminants to leak into the ground water. Furthermore, some parts of Long Island are in overdraft. This, coupled with saltwater intrusion is a problem.

Through the authority of the Safe Drinking Water Act, the Environmental Protection Agency has designated the aquifers underlying Long Island as sole source. This means that they are the sole or principal source of drinking water for the area. If contaminated, it would create a significant hazard to public health. Nevertheless, contamination has occurred from many sources. Some of these leaking landfill dumpsites, aging gasoline storage tanks, failing septic tank systems, accidental, illegal, or improperly regulated discharges, and last, runoff and drainage from agricultural areas.

Most of the pollutants recently detected in ground water are in minute amounts. Because of this, scientists and toxicologists are uncertain about the health effects of consuming water contaminated with trace levels of organic substances.

However, some believe that the cumulative effect has increased the risk of illness and cancer. The health of Long Island residents and the future economic growth of Long Island is contingent on the prevention of further ground water pollution. There must be prudent watershed management involving Federal, State, and local participation in order to accomplish this goal. On Long Island, this policy will involve the cooperative development and management of a comprehensive plan to protect the Long Island Pine Barrens. Beneath the Pine Barrens, there is the most important and least polluted ground water.

This bill provides for a partnership among Federal, State, and local offices. The role of the Federal Government will primarily be one of coordination, technical, and financial assistance. This bill provides for the establishment of designated special protection areas which contain sole source aquifers. The designation of these areas will assure that sole source areas are protected and managed in such a way as to maintain or improve existing water quality. This amendment also authorizes $180 million for planning and implementation of plans for the special protection areas and land acquisitions. The States will match Federal funds dollar for dollar.

It is now time for Congress to focus on the critical problems facing the water quality of our Nation. The solution presented by this bill will prevent the degradation of water quality. The price of prevention is well worth the cost of insuring perhaps our country's most precious resource—water.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. SYMMS, and Mr. D'AMATO):

S. 25. A bill to amend the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 to make permanent the decrease in the holding period required for long-term capital gain treatment; to the Committee on Finance.

DEFICIT REDUCTION ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to introduce legislation to make a permanent part of the tax code the 6-month holding period for long-term capital gain tax treatment.

On the first day of the 98th Congress, January 26, 1983, I introduced S. 25, legislation to reduce the holding period for long-term capital gains from 1 year to 6 months. This measure, in an amended form, was, included as section 1001 of the Deficit Reduction Act, signed into law by the President on July 18, 1984. Under the terms of the Deficit Reduction Act, however, the provision for the 6-month holding period will expire on January 1, 1988, at which time the holding period once again would be 1 year. This legislation, S. 25 in the 99th Congress, would repeal that sunset date.

I first came to Washington with the administration of John F. Kennedy, and I well recall his cogent explanation of investment as the engine driving our economy. "we want prosperity," President Kennedy told the chamber of commerce in April 1962, "and in a free enterprise system there can be no prosperity without profit. We want a growing economy, and there can be no growth without the investment that is inspired and financed by profit." That, at least, has not changed since 1962.

Nor will it change by 1988. Long-term investment will be just as important to our Nation's economic health then as it was when the Congress enacted the 6-month holding period last year. The same laws and regularities of economic life will prevail. Markets will allocate capital most efficiently when investors face as few disincentives as possible in their search for the highest return. Many investors will be reluctant to shift resources to more productive uses if they must wait a year to claim the capital gains rate on their current investments.

If we agree that investment, as opposed to consumption, should be accorded preferential tax treatment, surely a year is too protracted a period to qualify for such treatment.

The Nation's economy—indeed, our very prosperity—is tied to long-term investment. Let us encourage investment over the long term, by removing a legislative landmine—a provision that less than 3 years from now would automatically double the holding period for long-term capital gains tax treatment.

I urge my colleagues to join me, and I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the legislation appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 25

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (e) of section 1001 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (relating to decrease in the holding period required for long-term capital gain treatment) is amended by striking out ", and before January 1, 1988".

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today as an original cosponsor of legislation introduced by my good friend from New York, Senator MOYNIHAN, to repeal the sunset date on the 6-month capital gains holding period.

Prior to passage of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, the minimum holding period before assets could receive preferential capital gains tax treatment was 12 months. Since coming to the Senate in 1981, I have exerted considerable effort attempting to reduce the 12-month capital gains holding period. I feel strongly that the 12-month holding period deterred long-term investment and savings. The effect was to force individuals to hold assets longer than economic sense dictated just to receive preferential tax treatment. It is my belief that savings and investment should not be based on tax considerations.

Recognizing this fact, Congress passed a reduction of the capital gains holding period from 12 months to 6 months as part of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. This was a major step toward removing tax considerations from personal investment strategies. The shorter capital gains holding period will encourage buying and selling of equities and, thus, increase taxable brokerage commissions.

However, the Deficit Reduction Act reduced the capital gains holding period to 6 months only for assets purchased through December 31, 1987. By sunsetting this important change in law, Congress only did half the job. The legislation we are introducing today will correct this problem by making the 6-month capital gains holding period a permanent part of the tax code.

Thank you, Mr. President.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 26, A bill to amend subchapter I of chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize the payment of incentive special pay to Veterans' Administration health care providers who obtain an advanced academic degree relating to public health; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

INCENTIVE PAY FOR VA HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS WHO OBTAIN ADVANCED PUBLIC HEALTH DEGREES

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation in order to provide our Nation's VA health care practitioners with an incentive to obtain advanced training relating to public health.

Mr. President, as our Veterans' Administration's population grows older, it is becoming increasingly important that VA health care practitioners have advanced training in order to be truly responsive to these unique needs. Further, the time has also come to recognize the extraordinarily complex nature of health care and, in my judgment, our Nation's schools of public health are, indeed, well-qualified to provide this additional training to employees of the Veterans' Administration.

My proposal, if enacted, would authorize a $2,500 pay bonus for individuals employed full time in the Department of Medicine and Surgery or a proportional amount of a $1,500 per annum pay bonus for individuals employed part time.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 26

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subchapter I of chapter 73 of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 4119 as section 4120; and

(2) by inserting after section 4118 the following new section:

"§ 4119. Incentive special pay for health care providers

"(a) The Administrator may pay incentive special pay to any person appointed under this chapter to a position referred to in section 4103 or 4105 of this title (including any person appointed under section 4114 of this title to such a position) who—

"(1) executes an agreement with the Administrator to complete a specified period of service in the Department of Medicine and Surgery; and

"(2) obtains a masters degree in public health or another advanced academic degree relating to public health from an institution of higher education which the Administrator feels is in the best interest of the Veterans' Administration.

"(b)(1) The amount of incentive special pay which the Administrator may pay under this section to any person may not exceed—

"(A) $2,500 per annum in the case of any person employed full time in the Department of Medicine and Surgery; and

"(B) a proportional amount of $1,500 per annum in the case of any person employed part time in the Department, as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) The propositional amount of the incentive special pay payable under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection shall be calculated on the basis of the ratio which the part-time employment of such person in the Department bears to full-time employment.

"(c)(1) An agreement entered into with the Administrator by any person under subsection (a)(1) of this section shall specify a period of one year of service in the Department of Medicine and Surgery or such longer period of service, not exceeding four years, as the person requests. Any such person who entered into an agreement under this section and has not failed to refund any amount which the person became obligated to refund under the agreement shall be eligible to enter into a subsequent agreement under this section.

"(2)(A) Any such agreement shall provide that the person entering into the agreement with the Administrator, in the event that such person voluntarily, or because of misconduct, fails to complete at least one year of service, or such longer period of service as provided for in the first sentence of paragraph (1) of this subsection, pursuant to such agreement, shall be required to refund the total amount received under this section, unless the Chief Medical Director determines, in accordance with regulations prescribed under subsection (f) of this section, that such failure is necessitated by circumstances beyond the control of the person.

"(B) Any such agreement shall specify the terms under which the Veterans' Administration and the person may elect to terminate such agreement.

"(3) Any person who enters into an agreement with the Administrator under this section is eligible to receive incentive special pay beginning on the date the agreement is entered into, or the date the person becomes employed, whichever date is later.

"(d) Any amount of incentive special pay payable under this section shall be paid in biweekly installments.

"(e)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, any additional compensation provided as incentive special pay under this section shall not be considered as basic pay for the purposes of section 5551, 5552, or 5595 of title 5, chapter 81 of such title, or any other provision of law creating an entitlement to benefits based on basic pay.

"(2) Additional compensation paid as incentive special pay under this section to any full-time employee shall be included in basic pay for the purposes of chapter 83 of title 5. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, special pay paid to any full-time employee shall be included in average pay, as defined in section 8331(4) of such title, for the purpose of computing an annuity under such chapter only if—

"(A) the annuity is paid under section 8337 of such title or under subsection (d) or (e) of section 8341 of such title; or

"(B) the employee has completed not less than 15 years of full-time service in the Department of Medicine and Surgery (except that, regardless of the length of such employee's service, incentive special pay may not be included by reason of this clause in average pay in computing an annuity that commences before October 1, 1985, and only one-half of any incentive special pay paid after the effective date of this section may be included by reason of this clause in average pay in computing an annuity that commences on or after October 1, 1985, but before October 1, 1990).

"(3) Any additional compensation provided as incentive special pay under this section shall be considered as annual pay for the purposes of chapter 87 of title 5, relating to life insurance for Federal employees.

"(f) The Administrator shall prescribe such regulations as he considers necessary to carry out this section.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by striking out the item relating to section 4119 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"4119. Incentive special pay for health care providers.

"4120. Relationship between this subchapter and other provisions of law.".

SEC. 2. The amendments made by the first section shall take effect October 1, 1985.

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. GLENN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. METZENBAUM, and Mr. SARBANES):

S. 27. A bill to provide for the conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement of natural and cultural resources located on public or Indian lands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

AMERICAN CONSERVATION CORPS ACT

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to reintroduce legislation to establish an American Conservation Corps [ACC] to provide unemployed youths between the ages of 16 and 25 the opportunity to perform badly needed conservation work across the Nation in year round and summer programs. The ACC is patterned after the highly successful Civilian Conservation Corps [CCC] of the New Deal era.

The bill I submit today is virtually identical to legislation unanimously approved by the Senate last year, but pocket vetoed by President Reagan on October 31, 1984. The few changes reflect administration objections voiced in a message accompanying the veto. I am pleased to list as original cosponsors of this measure Senators MATHIAS, BUMPERS, EAGLETON, GLENN, KENNEDY, LEAHY, METZENBAUM, and SARBANES.

The struggle to enact ACC legislation—through seven congressional hearings, eight committee or subcommittee markups, and four rollcall votes in the House of Representatives—has been long, indeed. First introduced as the Public Lands Rehabilitation, Conservation, and Improvement Act of 1981 (H.R. 4861), the ACC was first passed by the House on June 9, 1982, by a 291-to-102 vote. The House voted again, in December 1982, to approve the ACC, but the Senate did not act on H.R. 4861. Nor did the Senate act on S. 2061, a companion bill that Senator MATHIAS and I had introduced on February 3, 1982.

On January 26, 1983, the first day of the 98th Congress Senator MATHIAS and I reintroduced the ACC legislation as S. 27. Our measure attracted bipartisan support from 22 cosponsors. Representative SEIBERLING, chairman of the House Interior and Insular Affairs Subcommittee on Public Lands and National Parks, introduced a companion bill, H.R. 999, which was passed by the House by an overwhelming vote of 301 to 87 on March 1, 1983. On May 13, 1983, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee voted 18 to 1 to report H.R. 999 as a shell authorization bill, and Senator MATHIAS and I set about working with committee members to draft a compromise amendment to be offered as a substitute. Negotiations on the amendment, which was to delineate program details, required more than 1 year. On October 3, 1984, the amendment was agreed to in the Senate by unanimous consent; 6 days later the Senate amendment was concurred to, and H.R. 999, as amended, was passed by the House by a 296-to-75 vote.

Despite such overwhelming support, President Reagan pocket vetoed the measure, arguing that "the private sector is much more likely to offer young people promising career opportunities than temporary make-work Federal job programs such as the American Conservation Corps." I would respond by noting first the success of 27 functioning State and local corps programs—all of which have earned overwhelming support among youth employment and resource management authorities and, more importantly, the participants themselves. Nor would anyone deny the success of the CCC 50 years ago.

The need for a national ACC is persistent and great. The simple, sad truth of the current economic recovery is that it has passed by our chronically unemployed youth, many of whom have never held a job. Malcolm S. Forbes noted as much stating in the August 1983 issue of Forbes magazine:

> The economic recovery isn't going to meet the youth employment need that plagues virtually all our cities. With a renewed Civilian Conservation Corps we can make a real beginning in tackling the problem.

Let me outline changes made in the previous legislation to meet some of the administration's objections.

First, funding would be reallocated, with more emphasis given on State programs. Funding for State programs—to be administered through the Department of the Interior—has been increased from 35 percent of total funds to 50 percent. The shares available for the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture—for Federal programs—have been reduced from 25 percent for each to 20 percent; 5 percent will still be available for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and another 5 percent—down from 10—will be available to other Federal agencies.

Second, an administrative cost cap has been imposed.

Third, and finally, authorizations have been frozen at $75 million annually for fiscal years 1985-87. The program will not grow larger during its 3 years of authorization.

Mr. President, as I noted earlier, the ACC legislation I am introducing today is the result of more than 3 years of very careful negotiations and development. This bill has been shaped by disparate concerns to ensure that the work done is of high priority, and not merely leaf raking. No Forest Service jobs would be displaced. The participants will work hard, while learning self-discipline and a work ethic. Unnecessary costs are avoided by locating residential centers near the work to be done and near the enrollees' homes. Enrollees will be given every opportunity to learn job skills and obtain education.

Mr. President, the budget deficit looms before us. Some programs need to be cut. But it remains the Nation's best interest to put some of our unemployed youth to work restoring and preserving our deteriorating natural, historic, and cultural resources and facilities. The ACC will be cost effective—as previous programs have demonstrated—and it will be successful. I urge my colleagues to support it.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 27

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "American Conservation Corps Act of 1985.".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) conserving or developing natural and cultural resources and enhancing and maintaining environmentally important lands and waters through the use of the Nation's young men and women, is beneficial not only to the youth of the Nation by providing them with education and work opportunities, but is also beneficial for the Nation's economy and its environment; and

(2) through this work experience opportunity, the Nation's youth will further their understanding and appreciation of the natural and cultural resources in addition to learning basic and fundamental work ethics including discipline, cooperation, understanding to live and work with others, and learning the value of a day's work for a day's wages.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to—

(1) enhance and maintain conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement work on Federal and non-Federal public lands and Indian lands, improve and restore Federal and non-Federal public lands and Indian lands, resources, and facilities, conserve energy and restore and maintain community lands, resources, and facilities;

(2) establish an American Conservation Corps to carry out a program to improve, restore, maintain, and conserve these lands and resources in the most cost-effective manner;

(3) assist State and local governments in carrying out needed non-Federal public land and resource conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement projects;

(4) provide for implementation of the program in such manner as will foster conservation and the wise use of natural and cultural resources through the establishment of working relationships among the Federal, State, and local governments, Indian tribes, and other public and private organizations; and

(5) increase (by training and other means) employment opportunities for young men and women including, but not limited to, those who are economically, socially, physically, or educationally disadvantaged and who may not otherwise be productively employed.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For purposes of this Act—

(1) The term "Federal public lands" means any lands or waters (or interest therein) owned or administered by the United States.

(2) The term "non-Federal public lands" means any lands or waters (or interest therein) owned or administered by any agency or instrumentality of a State or local government.

(3) The term "program" means the conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement program established by this Act.

(4) The term "program agency" means any Federal agency or instrumentality with responsibility for the management of any public or Indian lands, any State agency designated by the Governor to manage the program in that State, and the governing body of any Indian tribe.

(5) The term "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other group which is recognized as an Indian tribe by the Secretary of the Interior. Such term also includes any Native village corporation, regional corporation, and Native group established pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.).

(6) The term "Indian" means a person who is a member of an Indian tribe.

(7) The term "Indian lands" means any real property owned by an Indian tribe, any real property held in trust by the United States for individual Indians or Indian tribes, and any real property held by individual Indians or Indian tribes which is subject to restrictions on alienation imposed by the United States.

(8) The term "employment security service" means the agency in each of the several States with responsibility for the administration of unemployment and employment programs and the oversight of local labor conditions.

(9) The term "chief administrator" means the head of any program agency as that term is defined in paragraph (4).

(10) The term "enrollee" means any individual enrolled in the American Conservation Corps in accordance with section 5.

(11) The term "crew leader" means an enrollee appointed under authority of this Act for the purpose of supervising other enrollees engaged in work projects pursuant to this Act.

(12) The term "State" means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

(13) The term "economically disadvantaged" with respect to youths has the same meaning given such term in section 4(8) of the Job Training Partnership Act.

PUBLIC LANDS CONSERVATION, REHABILITATION, AND IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

SEC. 4. (a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAMS.—There is hereby established within the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture an American Conservation Corps.

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM ON FEDERAL PUBLIC LANDS.—Not later than ninety days after the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, after consultation with the Secretary of Labor, shall establish and administer a conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement program on Federal public lands and Indian lands to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM ON NON-FEDERAL PUBLIC LANDS.—The Secretary of the Interior, after consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Labor, shall establish and administer a conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement program on non-Federal public lands to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(b) REGULATIONS AND ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, after consultation with the Secretary of Labor, shall jointly promulgate the regulations necessary to implement the programs established by subsection (a). Within thirty days after the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish procedures to give Federal and non-Federal program agencies and other interested parties, including the public, adequate notice and opportunity to comment upon and participate in the formulation of such regulations. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide assistance, consistent with the terms of this Act, to program agencies for the establishment and operation of residential and nonresidential American Conservation Corps centers and for the implementation by the American Conservation Corps of projects designed to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(c) PROJECTS INCLUDED.—The programs established under this section may include projects such as—

(1) wildlife habitat conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement;

(2) rangeland conservation, rehabilitation, and improvement;

(3) recreational area development, maintenance, and improvement;

(4) urban revitalization;

(5) historical and cultural site preservation and maintenance;

(6) fish culture and habitat maintenance and improvement and other fishery assistance;

(7) road and trail maintenance and improvement;

(8) erosion, flood, drought, and storm damage assistance and control;

(9) stream, lake, and waterfront harbor and port improvement, and pollution control;

(10) insect, disease, rodent, and fire prevention and control;

(11) improvement of abandoned railroad bed and right-of-way;

(12) energy conservation projects and renewable resource enhancement;

(13) recovery of biomass from public lands, particularly forestlands;

(14) reclamation and improvement of strip-mined land; and

(15) forestry, nursery, and silvicultural operations.

(d) PREFERENCE FOR CERTAIN PROJECTS.—The programs shall provide a preference for those projects which—

(1) will provide long-term benefits to the public;

(2) will instill in the enrollee involved a work ethic and a sense of public service;

(3) will be labor intensive; and

(4) can be planned and initiated promptly.

(e) LIMITATION TO FEDERAL AND NON-FEDERAL PUBLIC LANDS.—Projects to be carried out under the program shall be limited to projects on Federal and non-Federal public lands or Indian lands except where a project involving other lands will provide a documented public benefit as determined by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture. The regulations promulgated under subsection (b) shall establish the criteria necessary to make such determinations.

(f) CONSISTENCY.—All projects selected and carried out under this Act for conservation, rehabilitation, or improvement of any Federal or non-Federal public lands or Indian lands shall be consistent with the provisions of law and policies relating to the management and administration of such lands, with all other applicable provisions of law, and with all management, operational, and other plans and documents which govern the administration of the area.

(g) CONSERVATION CENTERS.—(1) Each program agency may apply for approval of conservation centers to carry out projects under this Act.

(2) Applications for approval of conservation centers on Federal public lands shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture in such manner as is provided for by the regulations promulgated under subsection (b). Applications for the approval of conservation centers on non-Federal public lands or Indian lands shall be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior. No application may be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture before the 30-day period for review and comment by the appropriate State Job Training Coordinating Council (established under the Job Training Partnership Act), if any, which shall consult with the appropriate Private Industry Council, or Councils, in the area in which a project is carried out. Comments of the State Job Training Coordinating Council and Private Industry Council shall be forwarded to the Secretary at the time the grant application is submitted.

(3) No grant or other agreement may be entered into under this section unless an application is submitted to and approved by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, as the case may be. Each application shall contain—

(A) a comprehensive description of the objectives and performance goals for the conservation center and a description of the types of projects to be carried out, including a description of the types and duration of training and work experience to be provided;

(B) a plan to make arrangements for certification of the training skills acquired by enrollees under this Act;

(C) a plan to make arrangements for the award of academic credit by educational institutions and agencies to enrollees for competencies developed under training programs or from work experience under this Act;

(D) an estimate of the number of enrollees and crew leaders necessary for the proposed projects, the length of time for which the services of such personnel will be required and the services which will be required for their support;

(E) a description of the facilities and equipment to be available for use in the center;

(F) a plan for managing the conservation center, supplying the necessary equipment and material, and administering the payroll; and

(G) such other information as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe.

(4) In approving the location and type of conservation centers, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall give due consideration to—

(A) the proximity of the center to the work to be done;

(B) the cost and means of transportation available between the center and the homes of the enrollees who may be assigned to those centers;

(C) the access of economically, socially, physically, or educationally disadvantaged youths to the centers; and

(D) the cost of establishing the center.

Every effort shall be made to assign youths to residential or nonresidential centers as near to their homes as practicable.

(5)(A) Every conservation center shall have sufficient supervisory staff appointed by the chief administrator which may include enrollees who have displayed exceptional leadership qualities.

(B) No project shall be undertaken without the on-site presence of knowledgeable and competent supervision, and all projects undertaken shall be documented in advance in an approved written project plan.

(h) LOCAL GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION.—Any State carrying out a program under this Act shall provide a mechanism under which local governments within the State may be approved by the State to participate in the program and to carry out projects in accordance with the requirements of this Act.

(i) AGREEMENTS.—Program agencies may enter into contracts and other appropriate arrangements with local government agencies and nonprofit organizations for the management of conservation centers under the program.

(j) JOINT PROJECTS.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are authorized to develop jointly with the Secretary of Labor regulations designed to allow, where appropriate, joint projects in which activities supported by funds authorized under this Act are coordinated with activities supported by funds authorized under employment and training statutes administered by the Department of Labor (including the Job Training Partnership Act). Such regulations shall provide standards for approval of joint projects which meet both the purposes of this Act and the purposes of such employment and training statutes under which funds are available to support the activities proposed for approval. Such regulations shall also establish a single mechanism for approval of joint projects developed at the State or local level.

ENROLLMENT, FUNDING, AND MANAGEMENT

SEC. 5. (a) ENROLLMENT IN PROGRAM.—(1)(A) Enrollment in the American Conservation Corps shall be limited to individuals who, at the time of enrollment, are—

(i) unemployed;

(ii) not less than sixteen or more than twenty-five years of age (except that programs limited to the months of June, July, and August may include individuals not less than fifteen years and not more than twenty-one years of age at the time of their enrollment); and

(iii) citizens (including those citizens of the Northern Mariana Islands as defined in Public Law 98-213 (97 Stat. 1459)) or lawful permanent residents of the United States.

(B) Special efforts shall be made to recruit and enroll individuals who, at the time of enrollment, are economically disadvantaged.

(C) In addition to recruitment enrollment efforts required in subparagraph (B), the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make special efforts to recruit enrollees who are socially, physically, and educationally disadvantaged youths.

(D) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), a limited number of special corps members may be enrolled without regard to their age so that the corps may draw upon their special skills which may contribute to the attainment of the purposes of the Act.

(2) Except in the case of a program limited to the months of June, July, and August, individuals who at the time of applying for enrollment have attained age sixteen but not attained age nineteen, and who are no longer enrolled in any secondary school shall not be enrolled unless they give adequate written assurances, under criteria to be established by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, that they did not leave school for the express purpose of enrolling. The regulations promulgated under section 4(b) shall provide such criteria.

(3) The selection of enrollees to serve in the American Conservation Corps in any conservation center shall be the responsibility of the chief administrator of the program agency. Enrollees shall be selected from those qualified persons who have applied, to or been recruited by, the program agency, a State employment security service, a local school district with an employment referral service, an administrative entity under the Job Training Partnership Act, a community or community-based nonprofit organization, the sponsor of an Indian program, or the sponsor of a migrant or seasonal farmworker program.

(4)(A) Except for a program limited to the months of June, July, and August, any qualified individual selected for enrollment may be enrolled for a period not to exceed twenty-four months. When the term of enrollment does not consist of one continuous twenty-four-month term, the total of shorter terms may not exceed twenty-four months.

(B) No individual may remain enrolled in the American Conservation Corps after that individual has attained the age of twenty-six, except as provided in section 5(a)(1)(B).

(5) Within the American Conservation Corps the directors of centers shall establish and stringently enforce standards of conduct to promote proper moral and disciplinary conditions. Enrollees who violate these standards shall be transferred to other locations, or dismissed, if it is determined that their retention in that particular center, or in the Corps, will jeopardize the enforcement of such standards or diminish the opportunities of other enrollees. Such disciplinary measures will be subject to expeditious appeal to the appropriate Secretary.

(b) SERVICES, FACILITIES, SUPPLIES, ET CETERA.—The program agency shall provide quarters, board, limited and emergency medical care, transportation from conservation centers to work sites, and other services, facilities, supplies, and equipment. Whenever possible, the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make arrangements with the Secretary of Defense to have such logistical support provided by a military installation near the proposed center, including the provision of temporary tent centers where needed. Basic standards of work requirements, health, nutrition, sanitation, and safety for all conservation centers shall be established and enforced.

(c) REQUIREMENT OF PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN SERVICES.—Enrollees shall be required to pay a reasonable portion of the cost of room and board provided at conservation centers into rollover funds administered by the appropriate Secretary. Such payments and rates are to be established after evaluation of costs of providing the services. The rollover funds established pursuant to this section shall be used solely to defray the costs of room and board for enrollees. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are authorized to make available to program agencies surplus food and equipment as may be available from Federal programs.

FEDERAL AND STATE EMPLOYEE STATUS

SEC. 6. (a) IN GENERAL.—Enrollees, crew leaders, and volunteers are deemed as being responsible to, or the responsibility of, the program agency administering the project on which they work. Non-Federal program agencies shall be required as a minimum to provide tort claims protection and work related injury benefits to enrollees and crew leaders. Except as otherwise specifically provided in the following paragraphs, enrollees and crew leaders in Federal projects for which funds have been authorized pursuant to paragraphs (2), (3), (4), and (5) of section 13(a) shall not be deemed Federal employees and should not be subject to the provisions of law relating to Federal employment:

(1) For purposes of subchapter I of chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code, relating to the compensation of Federal employees for work injuries, enrollees and crew leaders serving Federal program agencies shall be deemed civil employees of the United States within the meaning of the term "employee" as defined in section 8101 of title 5, United States Code, and the provision of that subchapter shall apply, except—

(A) the term "performance of duty" shall not include any act of an enrollee or crew leader while absent from his or her assigned post of duty, except while participating in an activity authorized by or under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture or the conservation supervisory staff (including an activity while on pass or during travel to or from such post of duty); and

(B) compensation for disability shall not begin to accrue until the day following the date on which the injured enrollee's or crew leader's employment is terminated.

(2) For purposes of chapter 171 of title 28, United States Code, relating to tort claims procedure, enrollees and crew leaders or Federal projects shall be deemed employees of the United States within the meaning of the term "employee of the Government" as defined in section 2671 of title 28, United States Code.

(3) For purposes of section 5911 of title 5, United States Code, relating to allowances for quarters, enrollees and crew leaders shall be deemed employees of the United States within the meaning of the term "employee" as defined in that section.

(b) AMENDMENT OF TITLE 5.—Section 8332(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (11);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (12) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) service as an enrollee or crew leader only if the enrollee or crew leader in the American Conservation Corps later becomes subject to this subchapter.".

USE OF VOLUNTEERS

SEC. 7. Where any program agency has authority to use volunteer services in carrying out functions of the agency, such agency may use volunteer services for purposes of assisting projects related to conservation centers established under this Act and may expend funds made available for those purposes to the agency, including funds made available under this Act, to provide for services or costs incidental to the utilization of such volunteers, including transportation, supplies, lodging, subsistence, recruiting, training, and supervision. The use of volunteer services permitted by this section shall be subject to the condition that such use does not result in the displacement of any enrollee.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

SEC. 8. The Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority may accept the services of volunteers and provide for their incidental expenses to carry out any activity of the Tennessee Valley Authority except policy-making or law or regulatory enforcement. Such volunteers shall not be deemed employees of the United States Government except for the purposes of chapter 81 of title 5 of the United States Code, relating to compensation for work injuries, and shall not be deemed employees of the Tennessee Valley Authority except for the purposes of tort claims to the same extent as a regular employee of the Tennessee Valley Authority would be under identical circumstances.

SPECIAL RESPONSIBILITIES

SEC. 9. (a) PAY.—(1) The rate of pay for enrollees shall be 95 percent of the pay rate for members of the Armed Forces in the enlisted grade E-1 who have served for four months or more on active duty, from which a reasonable charge for enrollee room and board shall be deducted by the program agency.

(2) Enrollees shall receive $50 cash incentive stipends for every three months of enrollment in the program.

(3) The rate of pay for crew leaders shall be at a wage comparable to the compensation in effect for grades GS-3 to GS-7.

(b) COORDINATION.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture and the chief administrators of other program agencies carrying out programs under this Act shall coordinate the programs with related Federal, State, local, and private activities.

(c) CERTIFICATION AND ACADEMIC CREDIT.—Pursuant to the provisions of paragraphs (B) and (C) of section 4(g)(3), the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide guidance and assistance to program agencies in securing certification of training skills or academic credit for competencies developed under this Act.

(d) RESEARCH AND EVALUATION.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide for research and evaluation to—

(1) determine costs and benefits, tangible and otherwise, of work performed under this Act and of training and employable skills and other benefits gained by enrollees, and

(2) identify options for improving program productivity and youth benefits, including improved alternatives for: organization, subjects, sponsorship, and funding of work projects; recruitment and personnel policies; siting and functions of conservation centers; work and training regimes for youth of various origins and needs; and cooperative arrangements with programs, persons, and institutions not covered under this Act.

(e) DEMONSTRATIONS.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize pilot or experimental projects to demonstrate or test new or alternative arrangements or subjects of work and training for programs under this Act, which may include alternative identified under subsection (d)(2).

(f) CCC SITES.—The Secretary of the Interior, after consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, shall study sites at which Civilian Conservation Corps activities were undertaken for purposes of determining a suitable location and means to commemorate the Civilian Conservation Corps. Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall submit a report to the Congress containing the results of the study carried out under this section. The report shall include cost estimates and recommendations for any legislative action.

(g) STUDY.—(1) Program agencies shall not use more than 10 per centum of the funds available to them to provide training and educational materials and services for enrollees and may enter into arrangements with academic institutions or educational providers, to include local educational agencies, community colleges, four-year colleges, area vocational-technical schools and community based organizations, for academic study by enrollees during nonworking hours to upgrade literacy skills, obtain a high school diploma or its equivalency, or college degree, or enhance employable skills. Enrollees who have not obtained a high school diploma or its equivalency shall have priority to receive services under this subsection. Whenever possible, an enrollee seeking study or training not provided at his or her conservation center shall be offered assignment to a conservation center providing such study or training.

(2) Standards and procedures with respect to the awarding of academic credit and certifying educational attainment in programs conducted under paragraph (1) shall be consistent with the requirement of applicable State and local law and regulations.

(h) GUIDANCE AND PLACEMENT.—Program agencies shall provide such job guidance and placement information and assistance for enrollees as may be necessary. Such assistance shall be provided in coordination with appropriate State, local, and private agencies and organizations.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 10. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall prepare and submit to the President and to the Congress at least once each year a report detailing the activities carried out under this Act. Such report shall be submitted not later than December 31 of each year following the date of enactment of this Act. The report shall describe (1) conservation work procedures, accomplishments, and benefits; (2) the short-term post-program experience of enrollees, including data on the number of those terminating from the program who are unemployed, employed, have left the labor force, and are enrolled in further education and shall also report on the long-term impacts of the program on the employability of enrollees; (3) other youth benefits; and (4) problems and opportunities encountered in carrying out the Act which require attention. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculutre shall include in such report such recommendations as each considers appropriate.

LABOR MARKET INFORMATION

SEC. 11. The Secretary of Labor shall make available to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture and to any program agency under this Act such labor market information as is appropriate for use in carrying out the purposes of this Act.

EMPLOYEE APPEAL RIGHTS

SEC. 12. (a) FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.—In the case of—

(1) the displacement of a Federal employee (as defined in paragraph (1) of section 7511(a) of title 5, United States Code) or the failure to reemploy such a Federal employee from a reemployment priority list or return a Federal employee from furlough affected under title 5, United States Code, part 351 or part 752, contrary to a certification under section 13(b) (1) or (2), or

(2) the displacement of such a Federal employee by reason of the use of one or more volunteers under section 7 of this Act, such employee is entitled to appeal such action to the Merit Systems Protection Board under section 7701 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) OTHER INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of—

(1) the displacement of any other individual employed (either directly or under contract with any private contractor) by a program agency or grantee, or the failure to reemploy an employee in layoff status, contrary to a certification under section 13(b) (1) or (2), or

(2) the displacement of such individual by reason of the use of one or more volunteers under section 7 of this Act, the requirements contained in section 144 of the Job Training Partnership Act (Public Law 97-300) shall apply, and such individual shall be deemed an interested person for purposes of the application of such requirements.

(c) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term "displacement" includes, but is not limited to, any partial displacement through reduction of nonovertime hours, wages, or employment benefits.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 13. (a) DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.—Of the sums appropriated pursuant to subsection (f) to carry out this Act for any fiscal year—

(1) not less than 50 per centum shall be made available to the Secretary of the Interior for expenditure by State program agencies;

(2) not less than 20 per centum shall be made available to the Secretary of the Agriculture for expenditure by program agencies within the Department of Agriculture;

(3) not less than 5 per centum shall be made available to the Secretary of Agriculture, under such terms as are provided for in regulations promulgated under section 4(b), for expenditure by other Federal program agencies and for demonstration projects or projects of special merit carried out by any program agency or by any nonprofit organization or local government which is undertaking or proposing to undertake projects consistent with the purposes of this Act;

(4) not less than 20 per centum shall be made available to the Secretary of the Interior for expenditure by program agencies within the Department of the Interior; and

(5) not less than 5 per centum shall be made available to the Secretary of the Interior for expenditure by the governing bodies of participating Indian tribes. Fifteen per centum of the amount disbursed to State program agencies under paragraph (1) (or to local governments within the State where subsection (c) applies) shall be divided equally among the States and 85 per centum of such amount shall be distributed among such States proportionately according to the total youth population of such States between the ages of fifteen and twenty-five (as determined on the basis of the most recent census). Any State receiving funds for the operation of any conservation center shall be required to provide not less than 15 per centum of the cost of operation of such center. Any State receiving funds for any fiscal year shall provide not less than 10 per centum of such funds to local governments approved by the State under section (4)(h) to carry out projects under this Act unless no such local government in that State is approved before the end of such fiscal year. In any case where no such local government is approved before the end of such fiscal year, such 10 per centum may be expended by the State in accordance with this Act.

(b) AWARDS OF GRANTS.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture shall not make any grant to, or enter into any agreement with any program agency for the funding of any conservation center under this Act unless such agency certifies that projects carried out by the conservation center will not—

(1) result in the displacement of individuals currently employed (either directly or under contract with any private contractor) by the program agency concerned (including partial displacement through reduction of nonovertime hours, wages, or employment benefits);

(2) result in the employment of any individual when any other person is in a layoff status from the same or substantially equivalent job within the jurisdiction of the program agency concerned; or

(3) impair existing contracts for services.

(c) STATE SHARE TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—If, at the commencement of any fiscal year, any State does not have a program agency designated by the Governor to manage the program in that State, then during such fiscal year each local government within such State may establish a program agency to carry out the program within the political subdivision which is under the jurisdiction of such local government. In any such case, the State share (or a reasonable protion thereof, including amounts authorized to be appropriated pursuant to subsection (f) for such State) may be made available by the Secretary of the Interior for expenditure by such local government program agencies to carry out the program within such political subdivisions. Such local government program agencies shall be in all respects subject to the same requirements as State program agencies. Where more than one local government within a State has established a program agency under this subsection, the Secretary of the Interior shall allocate funds between such agencies in such manner as he deems equitable.

(d) PAYMENT TERMS.—Payments under grants under this section may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement and at such intervals and on such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, as appropriate, finds necessary.

(e) USE OF FUNDS.—Contract authority under this Act shall be subject to the availability of appropriations. Funds provided under this Act shall only be used for activities which are in addition to those which would otherwise be carried out in the area in the absence of such funds. Not more than 10 per centum of the funds made available to any program agency for projects during each fiscal year may be used for the purchase of major capital equipment.

(f) The regulations under section 4(b) shall establish appropriate limitations on the administrative expenses of Federal and non-Federal program agencies carrying out programs under this Act. Such limitations shall insure that administrative expenses of such programs shall be minimized to the extent practicable taking into consideration the purposes of this Act and the nature of the programs carried out under this Act.

(g) APPROPRIATION LEVELS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of carrying out this Act $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1985 through 1986. Funds appropriated under this Act shall remain available until expended.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator MOYNIHAN in cosponsoring the American Conservation Corps bill which would establish a new civilian conservation corps.

Congress last year overwhelmingly passed legislation that would have created an American Conservation Corps, which would have put unemployed young people to work rehabilitating our Federal lands. Unfortunately, President Reagan vetoed the bill. I will be among the many Senators and Representatives who will be working again this year to bring the corps to life.

The American Conservation Corps would be largely modeled on the Civilian Conservation Corps of the 1930's. It would have provided jobs for up to 37,000 young people, and the jobs would not have been meaningless make work. Typical projects would include forestry, range land conservation, and recreational area improvement.

For much of the 98th Congress we had administration witnesses and others appear before congressional committees testifying about the deteriorating condition of our national parks, our national forest recreation areas, our wildlife refuges, and other public lands. The pressure on these areas continues to mount—a combination of heavier recreational use and increased mineral exploitation.

Previous experience with the Youth Conservation Corps showed that such programs can get work accomplished for less money than would be required if private firms were contracted. So far as most Members of Congress are concerned, the American Conservation Corps would not only be cost effective but would provide jobs for disadvantaged young people who will otherwise remain unemployed.

We only need to remember that much of the timber we are now harvesting from our national forests was seeded under the old CCC's to understand the value of an updated conservation program today.

Modifications to last year's bill include a constant $75 million authorization over 3 years, a 10-percent administrative cost cap, and a revised funding distribution mix which increases the States' share to 50 percent and reduces the Departments of Agriculture and Interior shares to 20 percent each.

Again, I am proud to be a cosponsor of this bill which I have actively supported for the last three Congresses. At a time when pressures on public lands are increasing and funds for maintaining the lands are in short supply, a targeted and effective conservation corps is not only desirable but necessary. I hope that the Senate can move quickly on this bipartisan proposal.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 28. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to modify the qualifications required for appointment to the positions of Chief Medical Director, Deputy Chief Medical Director, and Associate Deputy Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration; the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to authorize that the individual appointed to the position of Chief Medical Director, Deputy Chief Medical Director, and Associate Deputy Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration may be a member of one of the several health care professions which currently are employed by the Veterans' Administration, rather than be restricted to doctors of medicine.

In my judgment, the time has come to legislatively recognize the truly interdisciplinary nature of health care within our Nation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 28

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) paragraph (1) of section 4103(a) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "a qualified doctor of medicine," and inserting in lieu thereof "a person qualified under section 4105 of this title for appointment to a position referred to in subsection (a)(1), (a)(2), (a)(3), (a)(5), (a)(6), (a)(7), or (a)(8) of such section,".

(b) Paragraph (2) of such section is amended by striking out "a qualified doctor of medicine," and inserting in lieu thereof "a person qualified for appointment to the position of Chief Medical Director,".

(c) Paragraph (3) of such subsection is amended by striking out "a qualified doctor of medicine," and inserting in lieu thereof "a person qualified for appointment to the position of Chief Medical Director,".

By Mr. HATCH (for himself and Mr. DECONCINI):

S. 29. A bill to amend titles 18 and 29 of the United States Code, to eliminate, and establish an alternative to the exclusionary rule in Federal criminal proceedings; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ALTERNATIVE TO THE EXCLUSIONARY RULE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Senate and indeed the entire Nation was gratified by the enactment of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984. This new law has placed many new and valuable tools in the hands of our Federal law enforcement officers as they carry on the battle against crime. The bail reform provisions of the act should prevent dangerous criminal suspects from perpetrating further crimes pending trial or pending appeals after conviction. The sentencing provisions should provide uniformity and stiffer penalties for Federal offenses. The list of benefits provided by the act, however, must not obscure the message that criminal justice reform is not complete. Many important legislative changes to deter crime, such as the capital punishment bill, were not included in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984. Perhaps the chief item of unfinished criminal justice reforms in terms of detecting crime and apprehending criminals is finding a suitable alternative to the exclusionary rule. Accordingly, I am introducing today a bill to replace the exclusionary rule in Federal criminal proceedings with alternatives more likely to ensure enforcement of the fourth amendment.

The exclusionary rule, or the suppression doctrine, is a judicial policy mandating the inadmissibility of evidence obtained unreasonably according to current fourth amendment standards. Thus, the rule has the potential, as the Chief Justice has noted, of "excluding from evidence the traditional corpus delicti in a murder of kidnapping case." Stone v. Powell, 428 U.S. at 502 (1976). In other words, credible and probative evidence, often critical to conviction, seized in the heat of apprehending a suspected felon is excluded from court consideration solely because a court deliberating months later feels it was obtained in an unreasonable fashion. As the rule now operates, a criminal, who in fact committed a dreadful violent crime and may have been caught in the act, is set free, not bcause he is innocent but because the evidence necessary to establish his guilt is deemed to have been unreasonably seized.

The fourth amendment provides:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath and affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized. (U.S. Constitution, Amendment IV).

Although the fourth amendment triggers its judicial application, the exclusionary rule is not a part of the Constitution, but a court-made rule of evidence that was not adopted for Federal courts until 1914, Weeks, v. U.S. 232 U.S. 383 (1914), and State criminal trails until 1961, Mapp v. Ohio, 367 U.S. 643 (1961). See also authorities cited in Rader, "Legislating a Remedy for the Fourth Amendment," 23 S. Tex. L.J. 585 (1982).

Whereas a law enforcement officer acting in violation of the fourth amendment should be held responsible for his actions, the exclusionary rule instead is custom made to deter the prosecutor, not those law enforcement officers, guilty of committing the illegal acts. The exclusionary rule is succinctly explained by the distinguished legal authority Dean Wigmore:

The Doctrine of Weeks v. United States also exemplifies a trait of our Anglo-American judiciary peculiar to the mechanical and unnatural type of justice. The natural way to do justice here would be to enforce the healthy principle of the fourth amendment directly, i.e., by sending for the high-handed, over-zealous marshal who had searched without a warrant, imposing a thirty-day imprisonment for his contempt of the constitution, and then proceeding to affirm the sentence of the convicted criminal. But the proposed indirect and unnatural method is as follows:

"Titus, you have been found guilty of conducting a lottery: Flavius, you have confessedly violated the constitution. Titus ought to suffer imprisonment for crime, and Flavius for contempt. But no! We shall let you both go free. We shall not punish Favius directly, but shall do so reversing Titus' conviction. 8 Evidence § 2184 (3d ed. 1940).

In England, as well as throughout the Commonwealth generally, the illegality of a seizure does not prevent evidence from being admissible in criminal proceedings. Also, police violators of the law are held personally accountable for their transgressions.

This English precedent has direct relevance to our own fourth amendment. The roots of our fourth amendment are evident in the maxim cited by Lord Coke that "every man's house is his castle." Recent studies indicate that in the turbulent times just prior to the American revolution, the English prohibitions against unreasonable searches were enforced against officers of the king by a suit for damages. See Rader, "Legislating a Remedy for the Fourth Amendment," 23 S. Tex. L. J. 585 (1982). In the famous case of Entick v. Carrington, 19 Howell's State Trials 1029 (1765), the English court awarded enormous damages to the victim of an illegal search even though it was conducted by one of the king's own ministers. The First Congress must have been aware of this landmark case and in the absence of any explicit remedy for violations of the fourth amendment must be assumed to have preferred existing remedies for its enforcement, namely the remedy of the Entick case.

Despite this evidence about the First Congress's likely preferences for enforcement of their language, the judge-made exclusionary rule has gained prominence in the United States, alone among world criminal justice systems. While the Entick remedy had the virtue of punishing offending officer who performed an illegal search and still permitting proper consideration of probative evidence, the suppression doctrine excludes the otherwise guilty criminal as well as the offending law enforcement official from answering for their misconduct. Both malefactors are freed to again break the law.

A number of Supreme Court Justices have questioned the wisdom of the exclusionary rule. Mr. Justice Black, in a concurring opinion in Wolf v. Colorado, 388 U.S. 25 (1949), stated:

> The Federal Exclusionary Rule is not a command of the fourth amendment but is a judicially created rule of evidence which Congress might negate.

Again, in Linkletter v. Walker, 381 U.S. 618, 648 (1965), Mr. Justice Black said:

> The inference I gather from these repeated statements is that the rule is not a right or privilege accorded to defendants charged with crime but is a sort of punishment against officers in order to keep them from depriving people of their Constitutional rights. In passing I would say that if that is the sole purpose, reason, object and effect of the rule, the court's action in adopting it sounds more like law-making than construing the Constitution.

More recently, Chief Justice Burger stated:

> It creates a damage remedy not provided for by the Constitution and not enacted by Congress.

Clearly indicating his view regarding the deleterious effect the exclusionary rule has on justice. In Bivens v. Six Unknown Federal Narcotic Agents, 403 U.S. 388 (1971), Chief Justice Burger recommended this course of action:

> Reasonable and effective substitutes can be formulated if Congress would take the lead, as it did for example in 1946 in the Federal Tort Claims Act. I see no insurmountable obstacle to the elimination of the Suppression Doctrine if Congress would provide some meaningful and effective remedy against unlawful conduct by government officials.

It seems then that the Supreme Court has thrown down the gauntlet. Now Congress must answer the challenge.

The rule's adamant demand for a perfect trial is without constitutional foundation. In criminal prosecutions, the sixth amendment maintains that the accused be given a speedy and public trial, not necessarily a perfect trial. In addition, the Supreme Court has repeatedly interpreted the due process clause of the 5th and 14th amendments to require that a "fair trial" be provided, not the aforementioned perfect trial. The concept of a fair trial is an important one. Mr. Justice Rehnquist, in Michigan v. Tucker, 417 U.S. 433 (1974), stated:

> Just as the law does not require that a defendant receive a perfect trial, only a fair one, it cannot realistically require that policemen investigating serious crimes make no errors whatsoever.

The protection of the citizenry is the foremost responsibility of the law enforcement officer; his first priority is to remove nefarious persons such as rapists, murderers, and kidnapers from the streets. In the performance of his duties, the policeman may sometimes err. The exclusionary rule does not distinguish between flagrant violations and accidental errors.

For example, it does not distinguish between clearly unreasonable searches of one's home and simple misstatements of information on a search warrant. Regardless of the magnitude of the error of the policeman, the rule mandates the suppression of evidence obtained in violation of the fourth amendment. The release of a convicted murderer due to an error in a search warrant may be necessitated by the exclusionary rule.

Under the rule, evidence considered to have been obtained illegaly is not permitted into trial, and if causal connection is determined, even the most credible kinds of evidence may be deemed "tainted" and also excluded from the trial. Causal connection refers to the judicial decision that where additional evidence is believed to have been gathered as a result of illegally seized evidence, it shall be subject to the exclusionary rule. For example, the body of a victim is inadmissible evidence at trial if the body was found as a result of a confession of a pickpocket being held illegally by law enforcement officers.

In our society, differing types of criminal elements are present. There are criminals such as gamblers and pickpockets who seek monetary gain by committing crimes against property. There are also criminals such as rapists and child molesters who commit violent crimes against the person. The exclusionary rule, however, does not differentiate between heinous crimes against the person such as rape, child abuse, or homicide and simple monetary crimes. Its use allows the same reversal for a convicted child molester, on the grounds of the illegality of the search and seizure, as it does a convicted gambler.

Our courts also make a distinction insofar the penalties meted out to the convicted criminal. The Court demarcates misdemeanors and more serious felony crimes. The penalties established are based on the magnitude of the crime committed. Conviction of a misdemeanor elicits a penalty ranging from a fine or probation to 1 year imprisonment in prison. Conviction of a serious felony crime elicits a penalty ranging from 1 year incarceration in a State or Federal penitentiary to the death penalty. Whereas the courts take into consideration the gravity of the crime, the exclusionary rule does not distinguish the misdemeanor from the more serious felony crime. The rule releases a convicted gambler the same as a convicted killer, totally ignoring the gravity of the crime.

The primary reason for the institution of the exclusionary rule was to deter abusive law enforcement practices. However, there is little substantive proof that the exclusionary rule is an effective deterrent. Mr. Justice White, in his dissenting opinion in Stone against Powell, stated:

> As time went on after coming to the bench I became convinced that Weeks v. United States, (Citations omitted), and Mapp v. Ohio had overshot their mark insofar as they aimed to deter lawless action by law enforcement personnel and that in many of its applications the exclusionary rule was not advancing that aim in the slightest and that in this respect it was a senseless obstacle to aiming at the truth in many criminals trials. 428 U.S. 465, 537 (1967).

In the Janis case, Justice Blackmun, speaking for the Court, cited a long list of empirical studies into the effectiveness of the suppression doctrine as a deterrent of fourth amendment violations and concluded: "No empirical observer has yet been able to establish with any assurance whether the rule has a deterrent effect even in the situations in which it is now applied." (428 U.S. at 449 n. 22). The burden of proof should be upon advocates of the exclusionary rule to demonstrate that it accomplishes its purpose. After nearly 24 years, that burden of proof has still not been satisfied. It is time to try something with a greater chance of success.

It has even been suggested that the exclusionary rule promotes illicit conduct by law enforcement officers.

Since the rule is conviction-oriented, it is only brought to play at the trial stage of criminal proceedings when law enforcement officials are seeking a conviction, it permits harassment or seizure of contraband by officers who have no intention of a conviction while providing no direct punishment to the officer who may have violated fourth amendment rights. In some instances, the rule diminishes abidance of the law and compels officers to turn to illegal means of law enforcement; that is, false testimony. Where, then, lies the protection for the innocent victim of illegal searches and seizures required by the fourth amendment? Assuming an illegal search and seizure is committed upon a law-abiding citizen, the rule offers him little help, remedy, or protection—certainly no compensation.

Prof. Virgil Peterson's thoughts as to the ineffectiveness of the rule in its protection of the innocent are expressed well:

> Rejection of the evidence does nothing to punish the wrongdoing official while it may and likely will, release the wrongdoing defendant. It deprives society of its remedy against one lawbreaker because he has been pursued by another. It protects one against whom incriminating evidence is discovered, but does nothing to protect innocent persons who are the victims of illegal but fruitless searches. (In restrictions of the law of search and seizure, 52 Northwestern Univ. L. Rev. 46 at 55 (1958).

Further proof is found in a report from the American Bar Association's Division of Judicial Administration. A relevant section reads:

> Not only has the rule failed to achieve its stated purpose, but it has imposed substantial costs on society in the process. First, the exclusionary rule affords no protection or remedy to innocent persons whose fourth amendment rights have been infringed. Justice Frankfurter noted that the exclusion of evidence is a remedy which directly serves only to protect those upon whose person or persons something incriminating has been found . . . next it is clear that the exclusionary rule imposes a single, inflexible, and drastic sanction without regard to the nature, circumstances or degree of police misconduct.

To ascertain the validity of the many criticisms of the exclusionary rule, an empirical study was conducted in Chicago in 1971-72. The study was administered by the U.S. Department of Justice and the University of Chicago Law School. The results indicated the ineffectiveness of the rule as a deterrent to abusive law enforcement practices and illustrated the lopsided protections the rule gives for violations of the fourth amendment rights. Instead of protecting the innocent law-abiding citizen, the rule releases the criminal as well as the offending law enforcement official from answering for his misconduct. In a brief (amicus curiae) submitted by the district attorney of Alameda County in the case of People against Cahan, the district attorney stated:

> (The) net result of the exclusionary rule is that the persons who will benefit the most, in fact almost exclusively, are the blackmailer, the kidnapper, the big-time narcotic peddler, the racketeer, the dishonest gambler who preys in devious ways upon a gullible public, the panderer and procurer, the entrepreneur of syndicated prostitution, who like the pimp, lives off the earnings of prostitutes, and other types of organized syndicated crimes 44 Cal. 2d 434 (1955).

In recent Supreme Court decisions concerning the exclusionary rule, Justices have continued to echo the fact, which was first introduced in Wolf v. Colorado, 338 U.S. 25 (1949), that the rule is "judicially created and one which Congress might negate." The bill I propose today is in response both to the cries of these Justices of the Supreme Court and to our fellow Americans, who are increasingly becoming victims of violent criminal acts.

My bill, comprised of two major provisions, would eliminate the exclusionary rule, thus permitting evidence not be held inadmissible, when obtained in violation of fourth amendment rights by Federal law enforcements officials, in a Federal criminal trial. Also, my bill would allow for redress for innocent persons of fourth amendment violations. Federal law enforcement officials who violate fourth amendment rights will not be afforded protection by this bill; but they will instead be required to answer for their actions. Both provisions are needed.

The first provision would require the addition of a new section, section 3505—elimination of the exclusionary rule—in chapter 223 of title 18 of the United States Code. It would eliminate the exclusionary rule as it pertains to Federal criminal proceedings. The proof of innocence or guilt must be based on the truth. In my opinion, truth is denied when courts are not given the opportunity to judge evidence solely on the basis of its reliability. By eliminating the exclusionary rule, all evidence would be available to the trial judge for his determination as to its relevance to the case.

The second provision would add a new chapter, 172—illegal search and seizure—to title 28 of the United States Code. It would provide a civil tort remedy for individuals whose fourth amendment rights have been violated by Federal law enforcement officials. It would define Federal officials who would be subject to appropriate discipline for violating fourth amendment rights, and it would stipulate that the U.S. Government would be held liable for the actions of its officials who violate fourth amendment rights.

It would also set forth the standards for recovery of actual damages and such punitive damages, up to but not to exceed $25,000, as the court may award. Finally, it would provide the court the opportunity to award any claimant who prevails in such action reasonable attorney fees, and other litigation costs reasonably incurred as the court may deem appropriate. Thus, this second provision would offer the protection guaranteed by the fourth amendment of the U.S. Constitution as well as act as a deterrent to potential violations of searches and seizures by Federal law enforcement officials.

In a recent case, the Supreme Court adopted an exception to the exclusionary rule which permits the admission of illegally seized evidence if the seizure was undertaken in the good faith belief that it was in conformity with the fourth amendment. Senior Judge Malcolm Wilkey of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals has commented with great insight on the need for legislative correction beyond the good faith exception:

> The proposed remedy has a certain plausibility, and it will have one favorable result: fewer guilty criminals will be set free by the application of the exclusionary rule. However, the guilty going free because the constable blundered is only the most visible of the many evils associated with the exclusionary rule. There are also evils which in the aggregate are greater than sometimes freeing the guilty criminal, and each and every one of these is preserved by this proposed "remedy."
> Looking back at the list of existing evils in Part I above, it is clear that only the first evil will be partially corrected by the adoption of the good faith exception. Each and every one of the other eleven listed evils will be retained after the proposed good faith exception remedy goes into effect. For example, the good faith exception does not purport to give innocent victims of illegal searches and seizures any remedy at all; only the truly guilty will continue to benefit by the exclusionary rule (Cost 2). All internal disciplinary efforts of law enforcement agencies will be totally negated by the continued retention of the exclusionary rule in any form (Cost 3). The necessity to determine whether the officer acted in "good" or "bad" faith makes impossible any effective disciplinary remedy by either law enforcement agencies or outside review boards. Discipline of the officer will always undermine the prosecution of the case, if there remains any chance that the search can be found sufficiently illegal to invoke the exclusionary rule. The burden on the court is in no way lightened; it will still be necessary to determine in every criminal trial whether the officer acted in "good" or "bad" faith (Cost 4). This is now and will continue to be an unabated waste of judicial resources (Cost 5 and 6). The necessity of determining good or bad faith will be an outright encouragement to perjury, even as now (Cost 7); similarly, the retention of the rule for "bad faith" searches makes hypocrites out of judges (Cost 8). We could go down the list of remaining evils listed and see that each and every one would still be present if the proposed good faith exception is adopted.
> In addition to perpetuating the present evils, the proposed good faith exception will create an additional evil:
> Cost 13: The "good faith" exception puts a premium on ignorance and lack of training in law enforcement agencies. The ideal police recruit will be the "noble savage" who never heard of the Constitution. He will be able to do many illegal things in perfect "good faith."

In order to give my colleagues the benefit of the rest of Judge Wilkey's observations about the exclusionary rule, I will include his article at the conclusion of my remarks.

This is perhaps a good time to look at the suppression doctrine from one final vantage point—that of the courts.

The exclusionary rule forces the courts to accept suppression motions on all evidence claimed to have been obtained in violation of the fourth amendment rights. This has admittedly doubled the court calendar. The other bills continue to request that courts decide whether the evidence should be admissible in court at a suppression hearing. Thus, the exclusionary rule would remain a time consuming, added burden on the court system.

Even innocent persons subjected to illegal searches and seizures, who are arrested as a result of the illegal searches and seizures, must wait for a date on the court calendar just for a suppression hearing, and then, whether or not the evidence is found to be admissible, they must wait yet another date of the court calendar for their trial. If the innocent person cannot afford bail, he probably will have to wait for his trial date confined in a local jail. On the other hand, if an alleged child molester can afford bail, he will await his trial date back in society among children.

My proposed bill would not allow this injustice to occur. It would free up the court's calendar by eliminating the need for an extra proceeding prior to trial, thereby allowing the courts to handle cases in a more timely and expeditious manner. The speed with which the courts could handle cases would insure the release of innocent persons faster as well as speed up the removal of criminals from the streets.

Congress enacted legislation to allow civil tort actions to be taken against State authorities who abuse their powers. 42 U.S.C. 1983 (1970):

> Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or territory, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress.

Congress should offer redress when Federal law enforcement officials violate fourth amendment rights. The bill I propose offers just such a remedy.

In conclusion, the exclusionary rule has not lived up to its expectations. The court which created the rule has itself found many exceptions to its application and has hinted at the need to rectify its shortcomings by legislation. This bill would permit the Federal courts to pursue truth by allowing admission of probative evidence. It would also create a working deterrent to fourth amendment violations. It would also provide a remedy for the innocent person whose fourth amendment rights may now be violated with relative impunity.

By Mr. LAUTENBERG (for himself and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 30. A bill to provide a limitation on discharge of raw sewage by New York City; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

RAW SEWAGE ABATEMENT ACT OF 1985

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to address a regional water quality problem that has plagued New Jersey for decades. I refer to the unconscionable practice, by the city of New York, of dumping hundreds of millions of gallons of raw sewage a day into the Hudson-Raritan Estuary, which washes New Jersey's shores.

Today the city of New York is dumping approximately 230 million gallons of raw sewage a day into the Hudson and East Rivers. This practice has gone on for decades, Mr. President, unabated by legal action by the Interstate Sanitary Commission, a tristate body with environmental responsibilities for the New Jersy, New York, and Connecticut area, entreaties and enforcement actions by the Environmental Protection Agency; and two court-ordered deadlines to cease this practice which have long passed.

New York City is the only major municipality in the country which still does not provide at least preliminary treatment of its wastes. In fact, the city of New York is responsible for dumping over two-thirds of the raw sewage discharged in the entire Nation. It does so because of the absense of sewage treatment plants in two major drainage areas in New York City, encompassing parts of Manhattan and Brooklyn.

The city of New York is now building the North River and Red Hook sewage treatment plants to treat these wastes under court-ordered deadlines. By August 1, 1986, it is supposed to have the North River plant on line to treat up to 170 million gallons of sewage and wastes a day. By August 1, 1987, it is supposed to have the Red Hook treatment plant on line to treat 60 million gallons a day of waste. By those dates, the respective plants are required to achieve advanced preliminary treatment. They are not required to provide secondary treatment until 1991 and 1989 respectively.

These deadlines are dictated by a consent decree signed by the city of New York in December 1982. This decree is the third such consent decree that the city of New York has entered into with respect to these facilities. The first was signed in 1977; the second in 1979. Both of these decrees were renegotiated to extend the city's deadline for complying with the Clean Water Act. No fines or penalties were ever levied against the city for failure to comply with earlier court-ordered deadlines. In each case, EPA simply extended New York's deadlines.

Mr. President, these consent decrees have been negotiated by a small number of parties—the city, the State of New York, the EPA, and a district court judge—none of whom are accountable directly to the public. In essence, they have served as a legal cover for the city. This cozy arrangement has resulted in special treatment for the city of New York under the Clean Water Act. It has contributed to continued degradation of regional waters.

As a result of these arrangements, legal action initiated by the Interstate Sanitary Commission decades ago has not resulted in the abatement of raw sewage dumping by the city. If New York complies with the deadlines in its current consent decree, it will not even begin to provide secondary treatment for the wastes for these drainage areas until 5 years after it was required to do so by its first consent decree.

Mr. President, this legislation is guided by a simple aphorism drawn from the sports world: three strikes and you're out.

Simply stated, it will impose a cap on raw sewage discharges from the drainage areas in the city of New York currently without treatment plants if the city fails to meet the deadlines for achieving advanced preliminary treatment contained in its current consent decree. These deadlines are August 1, 1986, for the North River plant in Manhattan and August 1, 1987, for the Red Hook plant in Brooklyn.

If these deadlines are met, the cap will be unnecessary because all raw sewage discharges will cease. If the city fails to meet these deadlines, a cap will be imposed in the drainage area in violation of the decree. It will stay in effect until the city brings the affected plant online and it operates successfully for 6 months.

The cap imposed by this amendment will be based on the annual average daily discharge of raw sewage between March 15, 1985, and March 15, 1986, for the North River drainage area, and March 15, 1986, and March 15, 1987, in the Red Hook drainage area, or the 12 months preceding operation of the plants, whichever is earlier. If the city misses its consent decree deadlines, it will be in violation of this amendment if it discharges, in any 30-day period, more raw sewage than the annual daily average discharged during the applicable baseline year.

Mr. President, this legislation combines the use of the carrot and the stick.

It provides a strong incentive for the city to have both of these plants online as soon as possible. It directs the EPA to work with the city to end raw sewage discharges at the earliest possible date.

If New York City does not meet its deadlines, the amendment provides for tough penalties unless the city is prevented from complying by circumstances beyond its control.

The imposition of a cap on raw sewage discharges, upon a violation of the consent decree, in effect says to the city of New York, "You cannot continue to grow without restraint if you cannot treat your wastes."

Upon violation of the cap, the city would be subject to the enforcement provisions in section 309 of the Clean Water Act. These penalties would be in addition to those provided for violation of the consent decree. They include tough civil and criminal penalties, and would enable EPA to seek a temporary or permanent injunction against the city, to bring civil actions against the city, and to initiate criminal prosecution in cases of negligence or falsification of records.

With the changes proposed this year to section 309 of the Clean Water Act, a violation of the cap imposed by this amendment could result in substantial penalties of up to $50,000 a day. A violation stemming from a criminal conviction could lead to imprisonment.

Finally, Mr. President, the legislation states that it is the sense of the Congress that EPA should not extend the deadlines in the city's existing consent decree any further.

Mr. President, this bill has been very carefully crafted to take account of so-called acts of God, and other circumstances which are beyond the city's control. Thousands of cities around this Nation, large and small, with far fewer resources than the city of New York, have struggled to comply with the Clean Water Act. Not one other major city in the country is discharging raw sewage into waterways. Only three other States even have discharges of raw sewage exceeding 10 million gallons a day. Even the well publicized situation in Boston involves partially treated sewage in a volume that is just one-tenth of the total discharged by New York City every day.

New Jersey has had its share of water quality problems. But not one New Jersey municipality is discharging raw sewage. Treatment plants in northern New Jersey are all achieving advanced preliminary treatment, and the major plants serving this area are achieving secondary treatment.

The New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection has imposed approximately 50 sewer hookup bans in New Jersey, currently affecting about 75 communities, to improve compliance with the Clean Water Act. Several communities may finance the upgrading of their sewage treatment plants to secondary treatment without any Federal or State aid. In some cases, the Department of Environmental Protection in New Jersey is requiring private sector parties to contribute to local efforts to upgrade sewage treatment facilities as the price of securing a sewer hookup permit and proceeding with planned development.

Mr. President, I regret the regional tension that has arisen over this issue. New Jersey and New York do not need to grow at each other's expense. Regional growth is good for both States.

By the same token, Mr. President, this growth should be accompanied by appropriate environmental protection. It must not come at the expense of the environment. It must not come at the expense of New Jersey's tourist and commercial and recreational fishing industries.

Should New York continue past environmental practices, New Jersey would be the loser twice. It would suffer from a competitive disadvantage, by following a clean growth strategy while New York City pursued growth unlimited by environmental concerns.

It would also suffer as the continued recipient of New York's pollution.

This legislation will provide strong incentives for New York City to comply with its consent decree without unfairly penalizing the city.

Mr. President, I am very pleased that the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, the Senator from Vermont, Senator STAFFORD, has seen fit to include this bill—of such vital importance to New Jersey—in the committee legislation he is introducing today to renew the Clean Water Act. Last year, I had planned to offer this bill as an amendment to S. 431, the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1983, when that legislation was brought before the full Senate for consideration. Unfortunately, S. 431 was never scheduled for Senate floor action last year, and it died when Congress adjourned in mid-October.

Mr. President, I know it is the intention of Senator STAFFORD, and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Environmental Pollution, Senator CHAFEE, to hold early hearings on reauthorization of the Clean Water Act and to report it out of the committee as soon as possible after we convene. I share that goal and look forward to working with them in this important legislation. I very much appreciate Senator STAFFORD'S willingness to include my legislation, the Raw Sewage Abatement Act, in his larger bill and his accommodation of New Jersey's environmental needs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 30

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Raw Sewage Abatement Act of 1985".

LIMITATION ON DISCHARGE OF RAW SEWAGE BY NEW YORK CITY

SEC. 2. (a)(1) If the wastewater treatment plant identified in the conset decree as the North River plant has not achieved advanced preliminary treatment as required under the terms of the consent decree by August 1, 1986, the city of New York shall not discharge raw sewage from the drainage areas of such plant (as defined in the consent decree) into navigable waters after such date in an amount which is greater for any 30-day period than an amount equal to 30 times the average daily amount of raw sewage discharged from such drainage area during the 12-month period ending on the earlier of the date on which such plant becomes operational or March 15, 1986 (as determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency), except as provided in subsection (b).

(2) If the wastewater treatment plant identified in the consent decree as the Red Hook plant has not achieved advanced preliminary treatment as required under the terms of the consent decree by August 1, 1987, the city of New York shall not discharge raw sewage from the drainage area of such plant (as defined in the consent decree) into navigable waters after such date in an amount which is greater for any 30-day period than an amount equal to 30 times the average daily amount of raw sewage discharged from such drainage area during the 12-month period ending on the earlier of the date on which such plant becomes operational or March 15, 1987 (as determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency), except as provided in subsection (b).

(b)(1) In the event of any significant interruption in the operation of the North River plant or the Red Hook plant caused by an event described in subparagraphs (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (5) occurring after the applicable deadline established under subsection (a), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a) with respect to such plant, but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as may be reasonably necessary for the city of New York to resume operation of such plant.

(2) In the event that the volume of precipitation occurring after the applicable deadline established under subsection (a) causes the discharge of raw sewage to exceed the limitation under subsection (a), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a) with respect to either or both such plants, but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be necessary to take into account the increased discharged caused by such volume of precipitation.

(3) In the event that an increase in discharges from the North River drainage area constituting a violation of subsection (a)(1) is due to a random or seasonal variation, and that any sewer hookup occurring, or permit for a sewer hookup granted, after July 31, 1986, is not responsible for such violation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a)(1), but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be reasonably necessary to take into account such random or seasonal variation.

(4) In the event that an increase in discharges from the Red Hook drainage area constituting a violation of subsection (a)(2) is due to a random or seasonal variation, and that any sewer hookup occurring, or permit for a sewer hookup granted, after July 31, 1987, is not responsible for such violation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a)(2), but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be reasonably necessary to take into account such random or seasonal variation.

(5) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall extend either deadline under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) to such extent and for such limited period of time as may be necessary required to take into account any—

(A) act of war,

(B) unanticipated grave natural disaster or other natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, the effects of which could not have been prevented or avoided by the exercise of due care or foresight, or

(C) other circumstances beyond the control of the city of New York, such circumstances not to include (i) the unavailability of Federal funds under section 201 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, (ii) the unavailability of funds from the city of New York or the State of New York, or (iii) a policy decision made by the city of New York or the State of New York to delay the achievement of advanced preliminary treatment at the North River plant or Red Hook plant beyond the applicable deadline in subsection (a).

(c) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), any violation of subsection (a) shall be considered to be a violation of section 301 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, and all provisions of such Act relating to violations of such section 301 shall apply.

(d) For purposes of this section, the "consent decree" is the consent decree entered into by the Environmental Protection Agency, the city of New York and the State of New York, on December 30, 1982, relating to construction and operation of the North River and Red Hook wastewater treatment plants.

(e) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall work with the city of New York to eliminate the discharge of raw sewage by such city at the earliest practicable date.

(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying the terms of the consent decree.

(g) It is the sense of the Congress that the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should not agree to any further modification of the consent decree with respect to the schedule for achieving advanced preliminary treatment.

(h)(1) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect with respect to the North River drainage area until such time as the North River plant has achieved advanced preliminary treatment (as defined in the consent decree) for a period of six consecutive months.

(2) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect with respect to the Red Hook drainage area until such time as the Red Hook plant has achieved advanced preliminary treatment (as defined in the consent decree) for a period of six consecutive months.

(i) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish and carry out a program within available funds to implement the monitoring activities which may be required under subsection (a) by December 1, 1984. The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish the methodologies, data base, and any other information required for making determinations under subsection (b) for the North River drainage area (as defined in the consent decree) by July 31, 1986, unless the requirements of subsection (h)(1) have been satisfied, and for the Red Hook drainage area (as defined by the consent decree) by July 31, 1987, unless the requirements of subsection (h)(2) have been satisfied. In carrying out such program, if the Administrator finds that a violation of subsection (a) has occurred, the Administrator shall also determine, within 30 days after such finding, whether a provision of subsection (b) applies. If the Administrator requires information from the city of New York in order to determine whether a provision of subsection (b) applies, the Administrator shall request such information. If the city of New York does not supply the information requested by the Administrator, the Administrator shall determine that subsection (b) does not apply. The city of New York shall be responsible only for such expenses as are necessary to provide such requested information. Enforcement action pursuant to subsection (c) shall be commenced at the end of such 30 days unless a provision of subsection (b) applies.

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 31. A bill to amend the Agricultural Act of 1949, to permit the Secretary of Agriculture to use surplus Government-owned commodities to make disaster payments for the 1984 and 1985 crops of wheat, feed grains, cotton, and rice; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

AGRICUTLURAL DISASTER PAYMENT-IN-KIND ACT OF 1985

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Agricultural Disaster Payment-in-Kind Act of 1985. This bill is similar to S. 1439, a bill I introduced in the 98th Congress, which would have given the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to make disaster payments to eligible producers of wheat, feed grains, cotton, and rice for the 1983-85 crops. The bill I'm introducing today gives the Secretary that authority, but applies it only toward the 1984 and 1985 crops of wheat, feed grains, cotton, and rice. Also, Mr. President, I intend to propose this measure when we consider the comprehensive 4-year farm bill later in the year.

Mr. President, many of our Nation's agricultural producers have experienced serious losses the last several years due to natural disasters. Currently, when a disaster occurs they are eligible for disaster loans from the Farmers Home Administration, and also, they may be eligible for disaster payments from the Department of Agriculture. The disaster payments, however, are discretionary, and I think one of the reasons they're not made is due to the cost involved, even though in many instances I think they are warranted.

The bill I'm introducing today provides the Secretary of Agriculture with another tool when a disaster occurs. Instead of making disaster payments in cash, he could, at his discretion, make them in the form of surplus commodities.

There are other steps we could take, Mr. President, and as we begin debate on the next farm bill I hope we can have a meaningful discussion in this Chamber over ways to provide a helping hand to our Nation's agricultural producers. This bill is designed to add another tool to the Secretary in allowing us to assist our producers through a very difficult period.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to support this effort in the months ahead.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 31

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Agricultural Disaster Payment-In-Kind Act of 1983".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. Effective for the 1984 and 1985 crops of wheat, feed grains, cotton, and rice, section 408 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1428) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(n)" 'surplus government-owned commodities' means barley, corn, cotton, dry edible beans, flaxseed, grain sorghum, oats, rice, soybeans, sunflower seeds, wheat, or any other agricultural commodity, which is owned and held by the Commodity Credit Corporation and not obligated for any other purpose under any other provision of law.".

"(E) The Secretary may use cash or surplus government-owned commodities, or both, to make disaster payments required under subparagraph (A) or (B).".

By Mrs. KASSEBAUM (for herself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. BIDEN, and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 32. A bill to provide for a 1-year, across-the-board freeze on Federal spending; to the Committee on Finance.

1-YEAR FEDERAL SPENDING FREEZE

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, as we commence the first session of a new Congress, the 99th, much has changed—yet, in terms of the problems we face, much remains the same. We continue to reap the benefits of an unabated economic recovery, however, the dangers of unprecedented deficits continue to loom large on the economic horizon.

Last Congress, I joined with three of my colleagues in this body in authoring a bipartisan program to achieve meaningful deficit reduction through an across-the-board freeze on Federal spending. The KGB plan, as it came to be known, evolved as a major alternative to the deficit downpayment plan which ultimately became law. However, the KGB freeze was supported by fully one-third of the Members of this body at the time of last year's budget debate.

Today, I am joining with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] in reintroducing the KGB freeze. We continue to believe that a comprehensive program of spending restraint must be legislated as soon as possible. We believe a bipartisan plan is a necessity and that such a plan must freeze everything across the board.

The bill we are introducing would be effective in putting us on a course of significant deficit reduction. Our 1-year freeze would save $35 billion in the first year and $170 billion over the next 3 years. Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 32

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

FREEZE ON BUDGET AUTHORITY

SEC. 1. (a) It shall not be in order in the Senate or House of Representatives to consider any bill or resolution making appropriations if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for function 050, national defense, to exceed $292,900,000,000 in fiscal year 1986.

(b) It shall not be in order in the Senate or House of Representatives to consider any bill or resolution making appropriations if the enactment of such bill or resolution, as recommended by the respective committee on appropriations, would cause the aggregate total budget authority for non-defense discretionary activities to exceed $139,800,000,000 in fiscal year 1986.

(c) For the purposes of this section, budget authority shall be determined on the basis applicable for fiscal year 1985.

(d) The provisions of subsection (a) or (b) of this section may be waived or suspended in the Senate by a majority vote of the members voting, a quorum being present, or by unanimous consent of the Senate.

(e) It is the sense of Congress that the unprecedented magnitude and persistence of current and projected federal budget deficits must be addressed in a comprehensive strategy to moderate increases in defense spending while continuing the effective constraints on nondefense discretionary programs. To assure the success of such an initiative, the foregoing procedural restraints, in addition to the total aggregate spending limitations pursuant to the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended, are necessary on budget authority both for defense and for nondefense discretionary programs for fiscal year 1986.

FREEZE ON HOSPITAL REIMBURSEMENTS

SEC. 2. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this act (or any amendments made by this act) or any provision of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the "applicable percentage increase" under section 1886(b)(3)(B) of the Social Security Act for any twelve-month cost reporting period or fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 1985, and before October 1, 1986, shall be 0 percent.

(b) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to the Congress within 45 days after the date of the enactment of this act with respect to suggested methods for assuring that hospitals will not increase amounts charged to patients who are not entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act in order to compensate for amounts not paid by reason of the limitation under subsection (a).

FREEZE ON PHYSICIAN REIMBURSEMENT

SEC. 3. (a)(1) Section 1842(b)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (S), by striking out "15" and inserting in lieu thereof "27:"

(B) in subparagraph (B), by striking out "15" and inserting in lieu thereof "27;" and

(C) in subparagraph (C), by striking out "1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1986."

(2) Section 1842(b)(4)(D) is amended—

(A) by striking out "1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1986;"

(B) by striking out "1986" and inserting in lieu thereof "1987;"

(C) by striking out the "12" following "for all of the" and inserting in lieu thereof "24;" and

(D) by striking out "15" and inserting in lieu thereof "27."

(b) Section 1842(l)(1) is amended by deleting "15" and inserting in lieu thereof "27."

FREEZE ON COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS

SEC. 4. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no increase shall be made in payments or benefit amounts under any provision of law which would otherwise require such increase to become effective during fiscal year 1986 as a result of changes in—

(1) the Consumer Price Index (or any component hereof); or

(2) any other index which measures costs, prices, or wages.

(b) No person shall be entitled to any increase in payments or benefit amounts under any provision of law if payment thereof is denied by reason of this section.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any change in—

(1) the Consumer Price Index (or any component thereof); or

(2) any other index which measures costs, prices, or wages, which would have resulted in any increase in payments or benefits amounts during fiscal year 1986 but for the provisions of subsection (a) shall not be taken into account for purposes of determining any increase in payments or benefit amounts during fiscal year 1987 or any fiscal year thereafter.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. The contrasts between this bill and the administration's unofficially announced approach to deficit reduction are dramatic. When priced from the same baseline, both plans achieve approximately the same level of deficit reduction. Those savings are achieved, however, in decidedly different fashions.

The administration's announced desire to freeze Federal spending "in the aggregate" is replete with selective increases balanced through selective program reductions and eliminations. Of particular significance is the proposed increase for spending on defense that must be offset by nondefense discretionary spending and entitlement reductions. The lack of equity in such a tradeoff eliminates any possibility that the administration's plan can generate the public or congressional support crucial for enactment.

By choosing to exempt Social Security from program restraint, while freezing automatic cost-of-living adjustments in all other Federal benefit programs, the administration has introduced an additional element of inequity in its program that further guarantees its political unacceptability. How can we, in our capacity as legislators, justify freezing the benefits of veterans, of retired civil servants, of railroad retirees, and of those on subsistence programs while selectively exempting the single largest category of Federal program beneficiaries from spending restraint.

I, for one, believe that further actual dollar reductions in programs for child nutrition, WIC, legal services, student aid, and the elimination of programs for agricultural conservation and low-income weatherization cannot pass the Congress. Yet this is exactly what the administration indicates it will propose in its plan to freeze spending in the aggregate.

Because the administration has chosen to construct its freeze on a series of subjective decisions to increase spending for certain programs while reducing funding for others, it has missed the opportunity to neutralize the political obstacles to achieving economic progress against deficits. By proposing selective reductions rather than uniform restraint, the administration has chosen to eschew the equity issue, and has in fact handed that argument to the program constituencies targeted for reductions. As the past 3 years have demonstrated, that is a prescription for failure.

On the other hand, an across-the-board freeze guarantees equity of sacrifice. With almost every American and with every beneficiary of Federal spending sharing the burden of deficit reduction, the element of equity is introduced into the freeze concept. It is equity of sacrifice which affords an across-the-board freeze political acceptability. This is the approach we have taken in the bill we are introducing today.

The KGB freeze would clearly and unequivocally establish deficit reduction as a national priority. Every segment of the budget would be frozen in place without the need for protracted debate over program benefits and relative priorities. That is, in my view, the only way we are ever going to be able to achieve meaningful deficit reduction in the face of entrenched program defenses by special interest constituencies.

Freezing everything, across-the-board, would reduce the deficit by $35 billion in the first year. These savings are not based on fuzzy projections; they are direct and immediate. A freeze would demonstrate that Congress is fiercely determined to address the deficit problem now—not later.

Last year during Senate Budget Committee deliberations, a bipartisan consensus began to evolve in support of the KGB freeze. Although the freeze was rejected by the committee on a close vote, it went to the Senate floor with the momentum necessary to mount a major challenge to the administration-sponsored "deficit down payment." The vote by which the plan was rejected in May was reversed in the final days of the last Congress when two-thirds of the Senate voted in support of further action on the KGB freeze as embodied in the Tsongas amendment to the debt ceiling bill.

Mr. President, I hope we can begin immediately to give consideration to the deficit problems that threaten our economic future. When that issue is before this body, I shall join with my colleagues from Iowa, Delaware, and Montana in advocacy of the measure we have introduced today.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to join Senators GRASSLEY, KASSEBAUM, and BIDEN in reintroducing a 1-year, across-the-board Federal budget freeze.

Three nights ago the clock in Times Square counted down the final seconds of 1984 and brought in the New Year. And earlier today, the clocks in Washington counted down the final moments of the 98th Congress and brought in the 99th.

But there's another clock ticking: the deficit clock. It shows that the Federal budget deficit is increasing by $22 million an hour. At this rate, the deficit will exceed $200 billion again this year, and total Federal debt will double over the next 6 years, until it exceeds $3 trillion.

These huge and persistent deficits have serious economic consequences.

First, these deficits inflate the international value of the dollar, making imports cheaper and exports more expensive. This is a major reason that we will have a $130 billion merchandise trade deficit this year, signifying a shift of about 4 million jobs overseas.

Second, these deficits endanger sustained economic growth and threaten higher interest rates. As Dr. Alice Rivlin told the Finance Committee last year, "There is a significant risk that the high real interest rates resulting from the deficits could cause the current expansion to stall * * * *"

Third, these deficits mortgage our children's future. Until now, every generation of Americans has tried to create a better life for the next generation. But now, we're requiring the next generation to bail us out. This is wrong. As Jefferson said, "We should consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle posterity with our debts, and morally bound to pay them ourselves."

The Helena, MT, Independent Record summarized the situation well a few weeks ago, saying that "the nation's economic welfare hangs on reducing the deficit."

Virtually all economists agree. As President Ford's Chief Economic Advisor, Alan Greenspan, told the Finance Committee yesterday, there is "a very broad consensus * * * that deficits that now confront us are too large, threaten the economy, and must be reduced as quickly as possible."

But politically, that's hard to do. Everybody wants to cut the deficit out of somebody else's pocket: conservatives want to cut only social spending; liberals want to cut only defense spending. The result is a political "gridlock" that prevents us from accomplishing anything.

THE FREEZE

There is a way to break this gridlock: a 1-year, across-the-board spending freeze on all Federal programs: discretionary domestic programs, defense programs, and entitlement programs.

The freeze is not a perfect solution. Every one of the four of us—every one of our colleagues in the Senate—has programs we'd like to enhance and programs we's like to cut more. But today, we do not have the luxury of negotiating piecemeal agreements on a program-by-program basis. We must each give up something for the good of our children and our Nation. Shared sacrifice is needed for the common good.

A freeze can be and should be rapidly enacted. It will give us a real start on the deficit problem. A freeze is a shock—it stops us dead. It permanently lowers the base for spending and so provides lasting savings. It stops the hemorrhage while we debate changes in the structure of the budget and the role of Government.

Everybody can argue for some exceptions. I would hope that in the end we will exempt programs for the poorest of our citizens. But in the beginning we start with the proposal for an across-the-board freeze.

That's why Senators BIDEN, GRASSLEY, KASSEBAUM and I are reintroducing our 1-year spending freeze proposal. This proposal would freeze fiscal 1986 discretionary domestic spending and defense budget authority at fiscal 1985 levels, and eliminate cost-of-living adjustments for 1 year. As a result, the freeze would reduce the deficit by about $35 billion in 1986 and by a total of about $168 billion by 1988.

BALANCE AND FAIRNESS

As I have worked on deficit reduction efforts for the past year, I have continuously argued that a deficit reduction package must meet three fundamental standards.

The first standard is fairness. No groups should be singled out for cuts. For example, the elderly and the poor must not be forced to accept cuts in Social Security, Medicare, and Medicaid, unless others are forced to make equally significant sacrifices.

The second standard is balance. Any package must include cuts in defense spending as well as in domestic spending. No programs should be off limits.

The third standard is bipartisanship. The deficit is not a partisan problem. Republicans and Democrats must work together to find a solution.

The beauty of this freeze we're proposing is that it meets all three of these criteria.

It's fair because every category of Federal spending will be subject to the same deficit reduction approach.

It's balanced because defense spending restraint would be as significant a component of deficit reduction as entitlement program restraint.

It's bipartisan because Senator KASSEBAUM, Senator BIDEN, Senator

GRASSLEY and I have foresworn partisanship to offer this proposal together.

ALL FREEZES ARE NOT CREATED EQUAL

Since the President and his administration newly discovered the deficit, we have been reading and hearing a great deal about a budget "freeze." It's hard to find anyone who doesn't like the freeze concept. The President is said to be considering a freeze. The new majority leader of the Senate says we need a "freeze plus," and articles pop up explaining different freezes.

The freeze is in danger of becoming the new and apparently simple solution to our incredible deficit problem. But caveat emptor—let the buyer beware. As the Washington Post pointed out in a recent editorial, not all freezes are created equal. And none are painless and simple.

The appeal of a budget freeze—and its apparent simplicity—is that if offers shared pain. This is only true if there are in fact no sacred cows—if programs are treated alike.

If the stories emanating from discussions at the White House are correct, this is not the kind of freeze the President is considering. According to reports, the President may propose an "overall freeze" within which some programs will grow and others shrink. But the President has pledged not to touch social security COLA's; he continues to argue that his defense increases cannot be reduced at all; interest payments cannot be frozen. Thus the President's "freeze" isn't a case of shared sacrifice: there are sacred cows. And as a result, the cuts in other programs will have to be drastic.

There is bipartisan support for the "freeze" concept if the sacrifice is truly shared. But many of us are unlikely to vote for something just because it is called a "freeze". We want to know what's under the label—increasing defense programs and slashing agriculture, veterans, and education programs is not a freeze. If the President and his staff don't know that, they don't know how serious the problem they face is—and that's bad for all of us.

CONCLUSION

During last year's budget debate, our freeze proposal was defeated. But, as the budget process wore on, more and more Senators began to reconsider the freeze. By the end of last session, we had enough support to adopt a resolution requiring the Senate to consider the freeze before the debt limit is increased again.

Mr. President, the adoption of this resolution showed that many Senators have come to the same conclusion that the four of us have: the deficit will not go away by itself; the deficit has serious negative effects on our future; we must put our differences aside to reduce it. This will be neither painless nor simple. Only necessary.

I am confident that, this Congress, we will gain enough additional support to enact the freeze, and thereby take an important first step toward substantial long-term deficit reduction.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 34. A bill to allow the psychiatric or psychological examinations required under chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code, relating to offenders with mental disease or defect to be conducted by psychiatric nurse practitioner or a clinical nurse specialist; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the mental health portions of the Federal Criminal Code in order to ensure that whenever the issue of mental incompetency or mental aberration is raised within our Federal courts, that the services of qualified psychiatric nurse practitioners and psychiatric clinical nurse specialists will be readily available to the court.

My proposal reflects the growing interdisciplinary nature of mental health within our Nation and is highly consistent with the comprehensive recommendations adopted by the American Bar Association last year as proposed by its Standing Committee on Association Standards for Criminal Justice in its Criminal Justice Mental Health Standards.

In essence, our Nation's professional nurses are truly autonomous professionals and, in my judgment, the time has come to expressly recognize their expertise throughout the relevant aspects of our various Federal laws.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 34

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first sentence of subsection (b) of section 4247 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by Public Law 98-473, is amended by—

(1) striking out "or" after "certified psychiatrist" and insert in lieu thereof a comma; and

(2) inserting after "clinical psychologist," the following: "psychiatric nurse practitioner, or clinical nurse specialist,".

By Mr. ROTH (for himself and Mr. EAGLETON):

S. 35. A bill to establish a Commission on More Effective Government, with the declared objective of improving the quality of government in the United States and of restoring public confidence in government at all levels; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

COMMISSION ON MORE EFFECTIVE GOVERNMENT

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am reintroducing today, on behalf of myself and Senator Eagleton, legislation to establish a Citizen's Commission on More Effective Government. This legislation was first introduced by me and Senator EAGLETON in 1981 and it passed the Senate in the last session of Congress. The legislation is modeled after the review commission initiated by Congress under the leadership of President Truman and headed by President Hoover in 1947-49. Like its predecessor body, this Commission's chief objective is to develop recommendations which when put into effect will help improve the effectiveness and efficiency of government.

I am firmly convinced the time is right for a thorough review of the structure and functions of government and I ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the purposes and major provisions of this bill be printed in the RECORD, together with a copy of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill and summary were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 35

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is the policy of the Congress to develop a blueprint for better government in the United States, to set in motion processes by which the Federal Government can more effectively and responsively serve the people for whom it was created and can more rationally meet its present and future challenges, both national and international, and to encourage and justify the full restoration of public confidence in government at all levels.

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

SEC. 2. For the purpose of carrying out the policy set forth in section 1, there is hereby established a commission to be known as the Commission on More Effective Government (in this Act referred to as the "Commission").

IMPLEMENTATION OF POLICY BY COMMISSION

SEC. 3. (a) In carrying out the policy set forth in section 1, the Commission shall consider and study the management, operation, and organization of the executive branch and of the independent regulatory agencies of the Federal Government, including the relationships of such entities to each other, to the other branches of the Federal Government, to their State and local governmental counterparts, and to the private sector. Such study and consideration shall give particular attention to the extent to which such relationships and established patterns of action meet or fail to meet governmental responsibilities and are adequate to meet the challenges of the future. Where appropriate and necessary, the Commission's consideration and study shall include the extent to which the policies implemented by the executive branch and the independent regulatory agencies detract from or enhance governmental management, operation, and organization.

(b) On the basis of its considerations and study under subsection (a), the Commission shall make recommendations, including but not limited to specific proposals for changes in Federal laws, regulations and administrative practices, to promote economy, effectiveness, efficiency, and managerial and political accountability, and to improve services and management in the transaction of the public business. Such recommendations shall include, where appropriate, recommendations for altering the present distribution of functions and activities among the Federal agencies and among the Federal, State, and local governments.

(c) In carrying out its consideration and study under subsection (a), the Commission shall avail itself of relevant information and data gathered by such public and private organizations and individuals as it deems appropriate.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 4. (a) The Commission shall be composed of eighteen members as follows:

(1) Six appointed by the President of the United States; a maximum of three from the executive branch, and the balance, persons who are not Federal officials.

(2) Six appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; a minimum of two and a maximum of three from the House of Representatives, and the balance, persons who are not current Members of the House of Representatives.

(3) Six appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, upon the recommendations of the majority and minority leaders of the Senate; a minimum of two and a maximum of three from the Senate, and the balance, persons who are not current Members of the Senate.

Members of the Commission shall to the maximum extent possible be chosen from among persons who have particular knowledge and expertise in the major areas of the Commission's consideration and study. Of the members appointed by the President, one shall have had experience in government at the State or local level; of the members who are not Federal officials appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, one shall have had governmental experience at the local level; and of the members who are not Federal officials appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, one shall have had governmental experience at the State level. In considering individuals for membership, preference shall be given to persons with a broad knowledge and understanding of the working of the Federal system of the United States of America.

(b)(1) Of the members appointed by the President from persons who are not Federal officials under subsection (a)(1), three shall be from the major political party which is not the party of the President, and at least two shall be persons not engaged in partisan political activity.

(2) Of the members appointed from the House of Representatives under subsection (a)(2), one shall be from the political party which is the majority party in the House and one shall be from the political party which is the minority party in the House. At his discretion, the Speaker may appoint either a second incumbent Representative from the majority party in the House or a former Representative from that same party. Of the remaining three members appointed under such subsection, two shall be persons not engaged in partisan political activity. Of these three remaining members one shall be from the political party which is the minority party in the House. In appointing members under subsection (a)(2) who are from the political party which is the minority party in the House, the Speaker shall obtain the advice and consent of the minority leader of the House.

(3) Of the members appointed from the Senate under subsection (a)(3), one shall be from the political party which is the majority party in the Senate and one shall be from the political party which is the minority party in the Senate. At his discretion, the President pro tempore of the Senate may appoint either a second incumbent Senator from the majority party in the Senate or a former Senator from that same party. Of the remaining three members appointed under such subsection, two shall be persons not engaged in partisan political activity. One of these three remaining members shall be from the political party which is the minority party in the Senate.

(4) For the purposes of this Act, the term "persons not engaged in partisan political activity" shall mean persons who for at least six months prior to appointment as a member of the Commission, have not occupied or sought elected public office, or have not served as an official of a State or national political party.

(c) The President shall select a Chairman from among the Commission members who are not Federal officials at the time of appointment. The selection by the President of the Chairman shall be subject to the approval of a majority vote of the members of the Commission, conducted by secret ballot. The Commission shall elect from among its members a Vice Chairman from the major political party which is not the party of the Chairman. The Commission shall adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary to establish its procedures and to govern the manner of its operations, its organization, and its personnel.

(d) Ten members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum.

(e) Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the manner in which the original appointment was made. Any individual appointed to fill a vacancy in the Commission shall be of the same political party as his predecessor.

(f) An individual who is appointed to the Commission in the status of a Member of Congress or in the status of a person in the executive branch of the Government, and who thereafter ceases to have such status, shall nevertheless continue as a member of the Commission and shall (if he has returned to private life except for his membership on the Commission) be treated as an individual appointed from private life for purposes of compensation under section 5.

COMPENSATION OF COMMISSION MEMBERS

SEC. 5. (a) The members of the Commission who are Members of Congress or who are in the executive branch of the Government shall serve on the Commission without any compensation in addition to that received for their services as Members of Congress or in the executive branch. The members of the Commission from private life shall each be paid compensation at a rate equal to the rate of basic pay in effect for level IV of the Executive Schedule when engaged in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission.

(b) All members of the Commission shall be reimbursed for travel as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the peformance of the duties vested in the Commission.

COMMISSION STAFF

SEC. 6. (a) The Commission shall have power to appoint, terminate, and fix the compensation of such personnel as it deems advisable to assist in the performance of its duties, without regard to the civil service laws and without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code (or of any other law) relating to the number, classification, or compensation of employees. The Commission may also procure, as authorized by section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized by law for agencies in the executive branch but at rates not to exceed the daily equivalent of the maximum annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule. The Chairman and Vice Chairman shall select an executive director for the Commission contingent upon confirmation by the Commission members.

(b) Service of an individual as a member of the Commission (or of an advisory council or committee under section 7) or employment of an individual by the Commission as an attorney or expert in any business or professional field, on a part-time or full-time basis, with or without compensation, shall not be considered as service or employment bringing such individual within the provisions of any Federal law relating to conflicts of interest or otherwise imposing restrictions, requirements, or penalties in relation to the employment of persons, the performance of services, or the payment or receipt of compensation in connection with claims, proceedings, or matters involving the United States. Service as a member of the Commission (or of such an advisory council or committee), or as an employee of the Commission, shall not be considered service in an appointive or elective position in the Government for purposes of section 8344 of title 5, United States Code, or comparable provisions of Federal law.

ADVISORY COUNCILS AND COMMITTEES

SEC. 7. The Commission may establish (without regard to the Federal Advisory Committee Act) such advisory councils and advisory committees as it may deem appropriate to provide specialized assistance in the performance of the duties vested in the Commission by this Act. Members of such advisory councils and committees, while attending meetings of such councils or committees or while otherwise serving at the request of the Commission away from their homes or regular places of business (unless otherwise eligible for travel and subsistence expenses under chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code), may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for individuals in the Government serving without pay.

POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 8. (a) The Commission or any member authorized by the Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out this Act, hold such hearings and sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, have such printing and binding done, enter into such contracts and other arrangements (with or without consideration or bond, to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, and without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5)), make such expenditures, and take such other actions as the Commission or such member may deem advisable. Any member of the Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before the Commission or before such member. The provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the Commission established under this Act.

(b) The Commission is authorized to secure directly from any officer, department, agency, establishment, or instrumentality of the Government such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics as the Commission may require for the purpose of this Act; and each such officer, department, agency, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish, to the extent permitted by law, such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Commission, upon request made by the Chairman or Vice Chairman.

(c) Upon request of the Commission, the head of any Federal agency is authorized to make any of the facilities and services of such agency available to the Commission or to detail any of the personnel of such agency to the Commission, on a reimbursable basis, to assist the Commission in carrying out its duties under this Act, unless the head of such agency determines that urgent, overriding reasons will not permit the agency to make such facilities, services or personnel available to the Commission and so notifies the Chairman in writing.

(d) The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as other departments and agencies of the United States.

(e) No officer or agency of the United States shall require the Commission to submit any report, recommendation, or other matter to any such officer or agency for approval, comment, or review before submitting such report, recommendation, or other matter to the Congress or to the President.

MEETINGS, PUBLIC INVOLVEMENT, REPORTS, EXPIRATION

SEC. 9. (a) The Commission shall first convene no later than six months after the date of enactment of this Act, and shall meet from time to time thereafter, as its members deem appropriate.

(b) Consistent with other provisions of this Act, the Commission shall structure its operations and activities to assure the appropriate and meaningful involvement of the public in its deliberations. In doing so, the Commission shall consider the desirability of holding public hearings, particularly in locations outside of the District of Columbia and of establishing toll-free telephone lines or other mechanisms whereby members of the public can readily contribute suggestions for Commission consideration.

(c) The Commission shall from time to time submit to the Congress and the President such reports as it may deem appropriate with respect to its activities under this Act. One year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall report to the Congress and the President on its agenda and its progress. Twenty-four months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall submit to the Congress and the President its final report with respect to such activities, including all of its findings and recommendations.

(d) Ninety days after the submission to the Congress and the President of its final report under subsection (c), the Commission shall cease to exist, except as provided under section 11(b).

PREPARATION FOR THE COMMISSION

SEC. 10. Upon enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General of the United States, the Director of the Congressional Research Service, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment, and the Chairman of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations shall begin to prepare briefing papers for the Commission. Such briefing papers shall catalog and synthesize any recent reports, analyses, and recommendations of the respective organizations, and shall contain such other information deemed by the head of each such organization to be pertinent to the work of the Commission. The briefing papers shall be completed no later than four months after the date of enactment of this Act.

MONITORING AND FOLLOWUP ON COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

SEC. 11. (a) For a period of four years after the Commission ceases to exist, the Comptroller General of the United States shall monitor the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission, and shall report periodically to the Congress and the President on the actions being taken to implement such recommendations.

(b) For a period of eighteen months after the Commission ceases to exist, a portion of the staff of the Commission shall continue to seek the consideration and implementation of the recommendations of the Commission. During such period, such staff shall be under the supervision of and shall report to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

(c) Upon submission of the Commission's final report to the President under section 9(c), the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, in coordination with the executive agencies, shall take action to (1) formulate the views of the executive agencies on the recommendations of the Commission; (2) to the extent practicable within the limits of their authority and resources, carry out recommendations of the Commission in which they concur; and (3) propose legislation needed to carry out or to provide authority to carry out other recommendations of the Commission in which they concur. At least once every six months, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall report to the Congress and the President on the status of action taken or to be taken as provided herein. A final report on the final disposition of the recommendations shall be submitted within four years after the submission of the Commission's final report under section 9(c).

EXPENSES OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 12. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 to carry out this Act.

SUMMARY—S. 35

On January 5, 1981, Senators Roth and Eagleton introduced S. 10, to create a Commission on More Effective Government. The bill was reported favorably by the Committee on Governmental Affairs on July 9th of that year and passed the Senate on December 7th. The bill was reintroduced as S. 35 and again passed the Senate.

The legislation is modeled after the review commission initiated by the Congress under the leadership of President Truman and headed by former President Hoover in 1947-49. Like its predecessor body, the chief objective of the Commission authorized by S. 35 is to develop recommendations which can improve the effectiveness of government and eliminate many of the structural problems which prevent agencies from managing programs efficiently. When put into effect, effective reforms based on such recommendations will help reverse the dismaying decline in public trust in governmental institutions.

Federal expenditures and activities have expanded enormously over the past two and a half decades, and the relationships between the Federal Government and this nation's citizens, its private sector and its other levels of government have grown increasingly tangled and complex. This legislation proposes that the Commission look in depth at the structure and operation of the Federal Executive Branch and at how these factors, together with the relationships which have developed among units of that branch with each other, with other levels of government and with our private institutions, affect the quality and efficiency of delivery of governmental services.

Based on this review, the Commission is to report within twenty-four months to the Congress and the President its final recommendations for improving governmental effectiveness, accountability and economy in meeting its responsibilities now and in the future. To avoid unnecessary duplication, the Commission is directed to review the large body of relevant information on improving the structure and operation of government already gathered by various public and private institutions and individuals.

Commission membership will include eighteen persons with records of accomplishment in government or private life or both. The group will be a bipartisan one appointed jointly by the Executive Branch and the Congress. The leadership of both Houses of Congress and the President will each appoint six Commissioners.

It has been thirty years since the Legislative and Executive Branches have collegially sponsored an effort to bring this country's best leadership talent and intellectual resources to bear on problems of government. Doing so again is the primary objective of S. 35.

By Mr. ABDNOR:

S. 36. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide an exemption for agricultural vehicles from the requirements of section 28F of such Code (relating to limitation on certain property used for personal purposes); to the Committee on Finance.

PAPERWORK REDUCTION FOR FARMERS AND RANCHERS

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to eliminate needless bureaucratic paperwork for farmers and ranchers required by the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

In the name of fairness and for the good of the country, Congress has sought ways to plug tax loopholes and to increase tax compliance. No one can argue against such laudable objectives and honorable intentions. However, there is a point beyond which reason is exceeded. My legislation would prevent that from occurring.

Among many other provisions, the Deficit Reduction Act attempts to clamp down on tax avoidance which is based upon the deduction of vehicle expenses when such expenses are not truly related to business usage. But the tentative Internal Revenue Service rule to accomplish that purpose simply is not workable for the farm sector. The measure I am introducing would exempt farmers and ranchers from the recordkeeping requirements outlined in the IRS regulations printed in the October 24, 1984, Federal Register, beginning on page 42701.

My motivation is not to extend special treatment to a select group of taxpayers. Nor is it my intention to protect a "loophole" from being closed, or to promote tax evasion. My reasoning is straightforward: Time-consuming logging of mileages, times, dates, purposes of travel is not reasonable for farmers and ranchers.

Farming is a very specialized, highly seasonal occupation, demanding complete and undivided attention during many crucial periods in the food production process. Planting and harvesting are two obvious times when farming operations require absolute concentration, and where this recordkeeping would interfere with work.

Burdening farmers with paperwork is inefficient and, for that matter, would jeopardize the ability of farm families to do their job if arbitrary accounting procedures are forced upon them and disrupt farm management decisions at crucial times. I, for one, think it is inadvisable and inappropriate to try to make farmers into file clerks for the IRS. It's unfair, unnecessary, and it won't work.

The farm sector—our most important and vital industry—has endured 4 long years of recession. This is not the time to heap insult upon injury by forcing yet another regulatory requirement upon beleaguered farmers and ranchers. I urge my colleagues to join me in modifying and correcting this unfair and bureaucratic rule.

By Mr. HATCH (for himself and Mr. THURMOND):

S. 37. A bill to provide civil rights in public schools; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUBLIC SCHOOL CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1985

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in the last two Congresses, I have introduced legislation to provide adequate civil rights for our public school students. Each Congress, this bill has been approved by the Subcommittee on the Constitution. Assistant Attorney General Bradford Reynolds has described well the principle that drives this legislation.

> * * * there is no more important struggle than * * * ensuring for the next generation of students, and generations to come, an enhanced educational environment in our public schools that provides to all those of school-age an equal opportunity to attend the school of their choice, free from racial discrimination.

I enthusiastically echo Mr. Reynolds' statement. The civil rights of our public school students is of such vital importance and the inequities inherent in mandatory busing as a so-called remedy for racial discrimination is of such repungance that this bill is among the most significant steps Congress might take to restore the full civil rights of our students. Educational excellence, not busing to achieve some notion of racial balance, is what our public schools need. In fact, busing—a form of governmental discrimination based on race—interferes often with excellence in education.

This situation is accurately reflected by Mr. David Armor, who commented before the Constitution Subcommittee in May of 1981:

> I think we have to get rid of remedies that in fact are not remedies at all and that simply make the problem worse.

I think the time is right for us to end this form of discrimination that masquerades as a remedy and instead devote our energies to enhanced educational opportunities. Accordingly, I am today introducing a bill to enforce constitutional guarantees that individual rights shall not be abridged on the basis of race, color, or national origin.

Many Senators may express feelings of regret that we must again reconsider this topic. I can understand and empathize with those feelings. After all, this problem, assigning students to public schools on the basis of race, was supposed to be solved in 1954 by the momentous Supreme Court decision of Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483. Again the Senate thought it had prohibited the consideration of race when assigning students to public schools in 1964 when it enacted the Civil Rights Act. Therefore, when we are still striving to convince judicial policymakers decades later that students should be allowed to attend schools without regard for race or color, I can understand why the task would become frustrating. Nonetheless the basic constitutional principle that race should not determine what schools our students may attend must not be abridged.

This principle was clearly enunicated by the venerable Justice John Marshall Harlan in his dissent to the Plessy against Ferguson case. Plessy upheld a Louisiana statute requiring "equal but separate accommodations for the white and colored races" in passenger trains, 163 U.S. 540, 551 (1896). Justice Harlan dissented with the thought that "our Constitution is color-blind," (Id. at 559). These few words captured the essence of our 14th amendment prohibition against deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law and against denial of equal protection of laws.

Harlan's dissent laid the foundation for the Court's ruling in the Brown case 58 years later. In Brown the Court found that—

> The Constitution of the United States, in its present form, forbids, so far as civil and political rights are concerned, discrimination by the General Government or by the States against any citizen because of his race, 347 U.S. at 499.

In other words, race and color were not to play any role whatsoever in decisions relative to school district boundaries and school attendance. Race was not to be used in assessing the rights of "any citizen"; certainly racial assessments were not to benefit one group at the expense of another.

It is ironic that the Brown Court mentioned one of the same phenomenons that social scientists are today citing in their condemnation of busing: the stigma of inferiority associated with the victims of racial separation. The Brown Court explained the significance of this stigma when it said:

> To separate students from others of similar age and qualifications solely because of their race generates a feeling of inferiority as to their status in the community that may affect their hearts and minds in a way unlikely ever to be undone.

I bring up this language because Congress is trying to do today the same thing that Brown tried to do in 1954; Congress is trying to end racial discrimination and make our educational legislation sound. Unfortunately, our current busing policy is actually nurturing racial discrimination and its stigma of inferiority. This was made clear to me by the testimony of the witnesses before the Constitution Subcommittee's hearings on school busing.

Brown was not the only case that established the principle that the 14th amendment prohibited States from taking cognizance of race. The Loving case, 388 U.S. 1 (1967), for instance, struck down a Virginia statute prohibiting interracial marriage. The Court clearly stated that classifying marriage rights on the basis of race was "unsupportable." The Anderson case, 375 U.S. 399 (1964), declared unconstitutional any racial designation of candidates on an election ballot. In Evans, 396 U.S. 435 (1970), the Court clarified that provisions in a will leaving property to a city for a public park which the will expressly stipulated could never be used by blacks could not be honored. Each of these cases understood and carried out the intent of the case that the 14th amendment forbid consideration of racial classifications of any kind in administering societal programs.

Congress has attempted to statutorily implement the Brown decision. The most notable attempt was, of course, the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Title IV of the act contains several provisions designated to make national education policy colorblind. Section 401(b) defined "desegregation" as:

> The assignment of students to public schools and within such school without regard to their race, color, religion, or national origin, but "desegregation" shall not mean the assignment of students to public schools in order to overcome racial balance.

The second part of this section was authored by Congressman Cramer of Florida. He explained clearly that the provision was necessary to prevent de facto segregation, or chance segregation caused by housing patterns and adherence to the neighborhood school concept, from becoming the object of congressionally approved desegregation schemes. Cramer, and the 88th Congress, equated the terms de facto segregation and racial imbalance (110 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD 1508).

The Senate version of the Civil Rights Act added two more amendments to insure that congressional policy would not be misconstrued to countenance any assignment of students to schools on the basis of race (section 407 of the act). The section authorizing the Attorney General to bring school desegregation suits, states that—nothing herein shall empower any official or court of the United States to issue any order seeking to achieve a racial balance in any school by requiring the transportation of pupils or students from one school to another in order to achieve such racial balance. 42 U.S.C. 2000c-6(a).

Moreover section 410 clarified that—nothing in this title shall prohibit classification and assignment for reasons other than race, color, religion, or national origin 42 U.S.C. 2000c-9.

Both Senate amendments were drafted and approved to prevent defacto segregation, as opposed to de jure or legally enforced segregation, from becoming a justification for the extreme remedy of busing, or assigning students to schools on the basis of race.

Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, floor manager for the bill in the Senate, explained that these amendments were intended to make doubly clear that title IV did not authorize the Attorney General to correct racial imbalance and in general—to soothe fears that title IV might be read to empower the Federal Government to order the busing of children around a city in order to achieve a certain racial balance or mix in schools. 110 Cong. Rec. 12714.

Senator Humphrey stated that he was relying on the recent decision in Bell v. School of Gary, 324 F. 2nd. 209 (1963), in stating that Federal officials were not required to correct segregation unless it had been enforced by past laws.

This provision was included in the Civil Rights Act to expressly note that racial discrimination was not to be identified soley through use of numerical or statistical evidence rather than through some demonstration of wrongful intent by some individual or group of individuals. Unfortunately, the courts have disregarded this express language and instead relied upon evidence of racial imbalances within schools as proof of unlawful discrimination. Rather than placing the burden upon those alleging discrimination to demonstrate some indentifiable act of discrimination, the courts have instead allowed discrimination to be adduced by evidence that some ideal racial proportion has not been achieved.

Harmful intent to discriminate was replaced with statistics that showed, for whatever reason, that more of one race than another were in a particular school or classroom. The defendant, therefore, not only had to demonstrate an absence of a corrupt state of mind, but had to show an affirmative commitment to a racially balanced institution. Treating individuals without regard to race was no longer enough, the defendant had to consider race at least to the degree that the court found proper. The problem, of course, is that no defendant could be sure in advance of adjudication if his notion of racial balance would be the same as the court's. Meantime, students had to be classed again according to race.

This in not the intent of the Constitution or Congress. Instead of considering each child in a school district only as a student, Federal courts classify students according to race. When the numerical ratio between the classes is unsatisfactory according to some subjective notion of racial balance, some black students or some white students are legally required to be hauled to a distant school simply because they are black or white. This is precisely the injustice that Brown and the Civil Rights Act intended to terminate. Prior to Brown, some students were legally required to be hauled to a distant school simply because of their race. It is a tragedy that we are still fighting to secure civil rights for our public school students.

Some commentators on this problem will undoubtedly note that the situation today is different than it was before Brown, that assigning students to schools on the basis of race is necessary to eradicate the vestiges of past legal segregation. To that my response is clear; we are not going to put an end to racial discrimination by perpetuating distinctions based on race. School busing is nothing more than assigning students to schools on the basis of race. I repeat, Mr. President, we will never end discrimination by discriminating.

The hearings in the Constitution Subcommittee have substantiated the ill effects of a discriminatory school-busing policy. The subcommittee's hearings have demonstrated that past unconstitutional segregation—racial segregation enforced by law—is not a significant cause of existing racial imbalances in public schools.

Whatever the cause of racial imbalances in public school, the assignment of students to public schools on the basis of race—busing—results only in more segregation by inducing large numbers of families to migrate from the school systems being subjected to busing mandates or to seek alternatives to public school education. For example, according to Constitution Subcommittee witness David Armor, between 1976 and 1980 Los Angeles lost nearly one-half of its students through a combination of demographic decline and racial "flight" from Federal "desegregation" decrees. Busing not only is not the solution, it actually aggravates the problem.

Since assignment of students to public schools on the basis of race cannot be justified as a means of preventing or undoing racial discrimination by school authorities, such assignment is itself an unjustifiable practice of racial discrimination in violation of the 14th amendment.

Mr. President, I might add that there is a very apparent remedy for the kind of unconstitutional segregation prohibited by Brown. If a school authority has legally enforced a policy of racial segregation through school district reorganization, school closings, or other acts of State government, a court could always issue an injunction suspending all implementation of the segregative law or policy. Where such injunctions are not scrupulously obeyed, a court could institute contempt of court proceedings to secure compliance with its order.

My proposed bill will enforce constitutional guarantees that individual rights shall not be abridged on the basis of race, color, or national origin. The first three sections of the bill declare that forced busing has caused a greater separation of the races, instead of improving relations between the races.

Busing has caused more friction, caused more disruption in education, and caused more chaos in community relations than existed before it was instituted. In addition, these sections state the Constitution Subcommittee's findings that busing violates constitutional guarantees against discrimination on the basis of race.

The operative provision of my bill would utilize Congress authority under the 14th amendment and article III, section 1, to withdraw the jurisdiction of lower Federal courts to issue any order requiring the assignment of students to schools on the basis of race or which has the effect of excluding any student from any public school on the basis of race.

Article III of the Constitution vests the judicial power of the United States in "one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time to establish." An uninterrupted chain of Supreme Court holdings have explained that this provision of the Constitution gives Congress "plenary control over the jurisdiction of the Federal courts." Bro. of Railroad Trainmen v. Toledo, P&W RR. Co. 321 U.S. 50, 63 (1944). Just a few examples of Supreme Court explanation of this article will suffice to establish the soundness of this bill's action:

For, the Power which Congress possess to create courts of inferior jurisdiction, necessarily implied the power to limit the jurisdiction of those courts. U.S. v. Hudson, 7 Cranch 32, 33 (1812).

In the doctrine so often ruled in this court, that the judicial power of the United States, although it has its origin in the Constitution, is (except in enumerated instances and applicable exclusively to this court) dependent for its distribution and organization, upon the action of Congress, who possess the sole power of creating tribunals (inferior to the Supreme Court) for the exercise of the judicial power, and of investing them with jurisdiction either limited, concurrent, or exclusive, and of withholding jurisdiction from them in the exact degrees and character which to Congress may seem proper for the public good. Cary v. Curtis, 3 Howard 236 (1845).

The subordinate judicial tribunals of the United States can exercise only such jurisdiction, civil and criminal, as may be authorized by acts of Congress. Kentucky v. Powers, 201 U.S. 1, 24 (1905).

The decision with respect to inferior federal court, as well as the task of defining their jurisdiction, was left to the discretion of Congress. That body was not constitutionally required to create inferior Art. III Courts to hear and decide cases within the judicial power of the United States, including those criminal cases arising under the laws of the United States. Nor, if inferior courts were created, was it required to invest them with all the jurisdiction it was authorized to bestow under Article III . . . Congress plainly understood this, for until 1875, Congress refrained from providing the lower federal courts with general federal question jurisdiction. Until that time the State courts provided the only forum for vindicating many important federal claims. Palmore v. U.S. 411 U.S. 389 (1973).

This summary of the article III powers of Congress could be expanded to include statements by Chief Justice John Marshall, Chief Justice Stone, or Chief Justice Earl Warren and the message would always be the same. Regardless of whether constitutional issues or property issues or Federal question issues are at stake, there is no constitutional right to have a claim adjudicated in Federal courts. See Allen v. McCurry, 101 S. Crt., 411 (1981). Instead Congress may decide to grant State courts, bound as they are by the supremacy clause and subject to Supreme Court review, exclusive original jurisdiction to hear and decide certain kinds of cases. In fact, this is precisely the intent of the "may from time to time ordain and establish" language of the Constitution. To give greater insight into this power of Congress, I will include at the close of this statement the testimony given by Harvard Law Professor Paul Bator at Constitution Subcommittee hearings.

My legislation is also based on section 5 of the 14th amendment. That section specifically grants Congress the power "to enforce by appropriate legislation, the provisions of" the amendment. By specific language, this constitutional provision grants Congress authority to legislate remedies for violations of equal protection.

The section does, however, place Congress in a leading role in the selection of remedies for violations of the 14th amendment. Therefore, it is entirely proper for Congress to determine that assignment of students to public schools on the basis of race is not an appropriate or effective remedy for unconstitutional segregation. The manner in which Congress would choose under this bill to limit this counterproductive remedy, if indeed this could be called a remedy at all, is to withdraw the jurisdiction of lower Federal courts to issue orders that would assign students to schools on the basis of race.

This bill implements Congress article III authority to withdraw the jurisdiction of lower Federal courts to order busing. Those courts may still entertain lawsuits alleging racial discrimination and may use any remedy, including those mentioned in section 3 of the bill, but they may not employ busing. This bill does not, however, limit or affect in the slightest the power of the State courts or the Supreme Court on appeal to use whatever remedies they may deem appropriate. This provision should insure that the policy enunciated by Brown and incorporated into the Civil Rights Act is implemented in Federal courts, this is, race is not to be a factor in school assignments.

In some instances, the Supreme Court already has found egregious constitutional violations and imposed as "a last resort" an order assigning students to schools on the basis of race. See Swann v. Charlotte, 402 U.S. 1 (1971). The bill does not automatically vacate existing busing orders. Instead, it authorizes school board authorities or other individuals subject to such orders to reopen these cases and subject them to a new standard. If the court cannot make five conclusive findings based on clear and convincing evidence, that party will be entitled to relief from the order. The five findings will require the court to reconsider its former rulings in light of the policies of this bill as expressed by the findings sections.

Unless the court can make the findings under the difficult evidentiary burden of "clear and convincing evidence," the order will be vacated. The four findings are: first, the act which caused the order to be instituted intentionally caused, and in the absence of continuance of the order, will continue intentionally to cause, students to be excluded from public schools on the basis of race; in making this finding the court must look for evidence of wrongful intent, not merely a showing that some amorphous notion of racial balance was not achieved; second, the totality of circumstances have not changed; in making this finding the court should determine whether the passage of time and the effect of this act have provided relief from intentional segregation; third, no other remedy, including those in this bill, would halt the intentional segregation and make busing unnecessary; fourth, the economic, social, and educational benefits of the order have clearly outweighed the economic, social, and educational costs of the order; and fifth, the busing required by the order does not consume more than 30 minutes to travel time daily or 10 miles of travel distance daily. The fifth finding required by the court to leave busing in force is similar to the amendment proposed by Senator JOHNSTON and approved by the Senate in the 97th Congress. While it is indeed patterned after the Johnston amendment's attempt to impose reasonable limits on busing, this is more modest in several significant respects: First, this bill does not purport to abridge the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, which will not be subject to the limits of this legislation when considering whatever, remedies for discrimination it deems proper. Second, while the Johnston amendment would have immediately outlawed any busing order not within the time and distance limits, this amendment simply requires a court, in the event that an existing busing order has been challenged in court, to find that the time and distance limits are in effect before permitting the busing to continue. Third, these time and distance limits are part of a larger bill that recommends alternative remedies to busing and focuses the court on other findings in addition to these reasonable time and distance limits.

Mr. President, I would hasten to add that this new standard for reopening cases which have imposed busing would not amount to a balancing of constitutional rights. Constitutional rights, of course, must not be made subject to a balancing test. We are not, however, discussing constitutional violations, but the appropriate remedy for an established violation. Once a violation is found, Congress may provide standards to help the courts find the best remedy. Those standards may include weighing the costs of the remedy against its benefits. A remedy which is no remedy at all but an egregious violation in its own right should not be tolerated. Assigning students to schools on the basis of race is just that—more of a constitutional violation than a constitutional remedy.

Section — of this proposed legislation details this bill's answer to a point raised by University of Virginia Law School Professor Laurens Walker:

Under title 28 of the United States Code, section 1441, defendants in State court actions would have the opportunity to remove school desegregation cases from the State courts to the Federal courts. Hence it might be argued that, as a practical matter, if this legislation were enacted the combination of this general removal stature and the proposed legislation would eliminate the busing remedy throughout our court system.

It is not this bill's intent to eliminate State courts' authority in school busing cases, and section 6 of this bill prevents their circumvention.

Perhaps I can help explain this proposed legislation by succinctly stating what this bill does not do: This bill does not forbid discrimination suits in Federal courts, but does circumscribe a single remedy; this bill does not forbid State courts from ordering busing if they deem that an appropriate remedy; this bill does not permit litigants to avoid State-ordered busing remedies by moving their case to inferior Federal courts where such remedies would be forbidden. Thus, pursuant to principles of federalism, States—through their court systems—would retain discretion to remedy discrimination as they see fit. They would retain discretion even to order busing, which in my opinion would be a mistake. Nonetheless, the State courts are a more proper forum for busing debates and mandates than are the Federal courts. If any court is going to use this extreme remedy, it ought to be a court which is intimately associated with the community to be affected, recognizing, of course, that even State courts are ultimately accountable to the Constitution and the review of the Supreme Court.

This bill, Mr. President, should provide the lasting solution necessary to deliver public schools from the torments of racial discrimination. As long as we attempt to frustrate the clear policy of Brown and the Civil Rights Act by treating individuals under the Constitution with anything other than a colorblind standard, we will continue to experience upheavals such as have rocked many of our cities and States over the past few years. In conclusion, I would like to include a speech delivered by Assistant Attorney General Reynolds on the subject of schoolbusing and the 14th amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this speech and the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 37

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Public School Civil Rights Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the assignment of students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin by inferior Federal courts—

(A) violates constitutional and legal guarantees that individuals shall not be denied equal protection of the law;

(B) violates constitutional and legal guarantees that individual rights shall not be abridged on the basis of race, color, or national origin;

(C) has failed to demonstrate educational benefits commensurate with the disruption caused by such assignment;

(D) has failed to demonstrate social benefits commensurate with the disruption caused by such assignment;

(E) has contributed to a significant deterioration of public schools in the districts subject to such orders regarding assignment by inducing large numbers of families to migrate away from such districts;

(F) has contributed to the deterioration of public education by removing the neighborhood school as the focus of such education;

(G) has disrupted the education of countless schoolchildren who must endure lengthy transportation to and from school each day, and, as a result, must often forego participation in extracurricular activities occurring after school;

(H) has eroded community commitment to public schools and public education;

(I) interferes with the right of parents to make decisions regarding the education of their children;

(J) disrupts racial harmony by characterizing and classifying students on the basis of race or color and assigning them to schools on such basis;

(K) diverts significant amounts of financial resources away from direct improvement of the quality of education;

(L) usurps the responsibilities and traditional functions of State and local authorities to provide an educational system meeting the distinct needs of the community; and

(M) undermines public respect for the Government and its system of administering law and justice;

(2) past unconstitutional segregation, such as racial segregation enforced by law, is not a significant cause of existing racial imbalances in public schools,

(3) since assignment of students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race cannot be justified as a means of preventing or undoing racial discrimination by school authorities, such assignment is itself an unjustifiable practice of racial discrimination by the Government in violation of the fourteenth amendment; and

(4) Whatever the basic cause of racial imbalance in the public schools, assignment of students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin results in more segregation of the races by inducing large numbers of families to migrate away from school systems subject to such assignment or by inducing large numbers of families to seek alternatives to public school education.

SEC. 3. (a) The Congress finds the remedies listed in subsection (b) are available for unconstitutional segregation exclusive of court orders which assign students to public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin, finding that such orders themselves have the effect of excluding students from public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin.

(b) The remedies which the Congress finds are available are—

(1) legal injunctions suspending all implementation of a segregative law or other racially discriminatory Government action;

(2) contempt of court proceedings where such injunctions are not scrupulously obeyed;

(3) programs without coercion or numerical quotas or specific goals based on racial balance that permit students to voluntarily transfer to other schools within the school district where they reside; and

(4) other local initiatives and plans to improve education for all students without regard to race, color, or national origin.

SEC. 4. The Congress, pursuant to its authority and powers granted under article III of the Constitution, and under section 5 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, enacts the provisions of this Act in order to protect public school students against discrimination on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin.

SEC. 5. Section 1343 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by designating the current language as section (a) and adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no inferior court established by Congress shall have jurisdiction to issue any order requiring the assignment or transportation of any student to public elementary or secondary schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin or to issue any order which excludes any student from any public school on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin.

"(2) In the case of court orders entered prior to the date of this Act that require the assignment or transportation of any student to a public elementary or secondary school on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin or which excludes any student from any school on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin, any individual or school board or other school authority subject to such an order shall be entitled to seek relief from such order in any court and unless that court can make conclusive findings based on clear and convincing evidence that—

"(1) the acts that gave rise to the existing court order intentionally and specifically caused, and in the absence of the order would continue intentionally and specifically to cause, students to be assigned to or excluded from public schools on the basis of or with regard to race, color, or national origin; for purposes of this finding, these 'acts that gave rise to the existing court order and intentionally and specifically caused and in the absence of the order would continue intentionally and specifically to cause, students to be assigned to or excluded from public schools on the basis of race, color, or national origin' (including but not limited to school district reorganization, school boundary line changes, school construction, and school closings) shall not include legitimate efforts to employ public education resources to meet public education needs without regard to race, creed, or national origin,

"(2) the totality of circumstances have not changed since issuance of the order to warrant reconsideration of the order,

"(3) no other remedy, including those mentioned herein, would preclude the intentional and specific segregation,

"(4) the economic, social, and educational benefits of the order have clearly outweighed the economic, social, and educational costs of the order, and

"(5) either—

"(a) the total actual daily time consumed in travel by schoolbus for any student does not exceed thirty minutes unless such transportation is to and from a pulic school closest to the student's residence with a grade level identical to that of the student; or

"(b) the total actual round trip distance traveled by school bus for any student does not exceed 10 miles unless the actual round trip distance traveled by schoolbus is to and from the public school closest to the student's residence with a grade level identical to that of the student, then such plaintiffs shall be entitled to relief which is consistent with the provisions of this subsection and the Public School Civil Rights Act of 1981 from such order.".

SEC. 6. Chapter 89 of title 28 of the United States Code (relating to district courts' removal of cases from State courts) is amended by adding after section 1455(c) the following new subsection:

"(d) A civil action in any State court seeking a judgment for any relief described in this Act may not be removed to any district court of the United States.".

STATEMENT OF WILLIAM BRADFORD REYNOLDS

It is a particular pleasure to have this opportunity to share this evening with you. The National Association of Neighborhood Schools has long been an organization that holds the abiding respect of many of us for the courageous and principled position it has staked out and defended in the area of school desegregation. I and a majority of Americans—black and white, brown and red, old and young—applaud you for daring to place our children's education needs ahead of our courts' transportation preferences. Largely through your untiring efforts, neighborhood public schools are today beginning to experience a welcome revival. All I can say is: don't let up now that we are seeing some progress; there is no more important struggle than the one you are fighting to ensure for the next generation of students, and generations to come, an enchanced educational environment in our public schools that provides to all those of school-age an equal opportunity to attend the school of their choice, free from racial discrimination.

This evening I would like to take a few minutes to review the desegregation efforts of this Administration, focusing briefly on the initiatives we have taken, and why; the progess that has been made; and what, as I see it, the future holds.

We can all feel a degree of satisfaction, I think, that the experiment with forced busing as the principal—indeed, in many instances, the sole—remedial tool to desegregate a public school district is largely over. I am not so naive as to believe that court-ordered transportation of young students to distant schools far removed from home, parents, and neighborhood has ended entirely, but I can state with full conviction that often times tragic consequences of this tool of social engineering have been exposed, and, the ranks of its proponents are woefully depleted and in disarray.

I do not need to spend much time explaining to this group why a broad national consensus has gathered in opposition to forced busing. In many respects, forced busing was the prescription for its own destruction. It rested, in the first instance, on a most precarious foundation—that is, the misguided notion that the desegregation command in Brown v. Board of Education required a perfect racial balance in all classrooms throughout the offending school district. Brown, of course, contained no such requirement. Indeed, quite to the contrary, Brown II explicitly underscored that "maximum integration" of schoolrooms is not the principal concern of the law; rather, the Supreme Court stated, "[at] stake [was] the personal interest of the plaintiffs in admission to public schools . . . on a [racially] nondiscriminatory basis." 349 U.S. at 300.

As we all know in the early 1970's the civil rights issue of racial neutrality in student assignments was consumed by the social issue of racial proportionality in the classroom. Blame cannot properly be laid entirely at the doorstep of the Supreme Court. To be sure, it ruled in 1971, in Swann v. Charlotte-Mecklenberg Board of Education, that race-conscious pupil assignments and mandatory student transportation are available remedial tools of school desegration. But nowhere has the Court said—in Swann or elsewhere—that forced busing is constitutionally required. Rather, as made clear in Swann, it is but one of a number of remedial devices, to be used, if at all, only when "practicable," "reasonable," "feasible," "workable," and "realistic." 402 U.S. at 16. And, even at that, the Swann majority cautioned against reading ...to its acceptance of busing as an available desegration remedy any "substantive right [to a] particular degree of racial balance." Id at 24.

Nonetheless, lower federal courts throughout the 1970's largely ignored the Swann admonition. Modest use of a transportation remedy where "practicable" to assist the desegration effort was, regrettably, misread as a judicial license to bus large numbers of children long distances to remote schools to achieve racial proportionality in all the classrooms.

Rather than achieving racial balance, however, this preoccupation with mandatory busing has generally produced racial isolation on a broader scale. In case after case, economically able parents have refused to permit their children to travel unnecessary distances to attend public schools, choosing instead to enroll them in private schools or to move beyond the reach of the desegregation decree. Justice Powell has commented on this phenomenon in the following terms:

"This pursuit of racial balance at any cost . . . is without constitutional or social justification. Out of zeal to remedy one evil, courts may encourage or set the stage for other evils. By acting against one-race schools, courts may produce one-race school systems." [1]

After more than a decade of court-ordered busing, the evidence is overwhelming that the effort to desegregate through wholesale reliance on race-conscious student assignment plans has failed. The damage to public education wrought by mandatory busing is evident in city after city: Boston, Cleveland, Detroit, Wilmington, Memphis, Denver, and Los Angeles are but a few of the larger and thus more celebrated examples. Nor is it difficult to understand why. The flight from urban public schools contributes to the erosion of the municipal tax base which in turn has a direct bearing on the growing inability of many school systems to provide a quality public education to their students—whether black or white. Similarly, the loss of parental support and involvement—which often comes with the abandonment of a neighborhood school policy—has robbed many public school systems of a critical component of successful educational programs.

Tragically, those who suffer the most are the very ones that the proponents of mandatory busing intended to be the greatest beneficiaries—that is, the blacks and other minorities left within the inner city public school systems. It is they who, from most accounts, have little to show educationally as a result of the past decade of court-imposed student assignment plans. Although findings are not absolutely conclusive in this regard, a major study released by the National Institute of Education in May of this year strongly indicates that racial-balance desegregation remedies have been ineffective in providing a better education for minority students. As David J. Armor, a noted desegregation expert, states in the report:

"The very best studies available demonstrate no significant and consistent effects of desegregation on Black achievement. There is virtually no effect whatsoever for math achievement, and for reading achievement the very best that can be said is that only a handful of grade levels from the 19 best available studies show substantial positive effects, while the large majority of grade levels show small and inconsistent effects that average out to about 0."

Small wonder, then, that this Administration committed itself to the pursuit of a different remedial approach to achieve the desegregation ideal announced in Brown—one premised on consensus, not conflict. Our focus turned away from forced transportation and concentrated instead on desegregating dual school systems through an emphasis on voluntary student transfer techniques and expanded educational opportunities designed to attract students to the public school, not drive them away. Our remedial program has as its centerpiece special magnet schools and other curriculum enhancement programs that provide educational incentives to all children in the system. And, as the Constitution demands, the choice of schools is left to each student—with a full range of transfer options—not to some preconceived assignment plan superimposed on the public school system by well-intentioned judges who misperceive racial percentages and classroom proportionality as a measurement of equal opportunity.

It is a bit too early to declare the magnet program a complete desegregation success. There are, however, a number of encouraging indicators and very few discouraging ones. The Justice Department has utilized its new remedial approach—one could call it: "desegregation through reinvigorated education"—in a variety of situations: from a large metropolitan area like Chicago to a small rural school district like Port Arthur, Texas. One of the best (or at least one of the most comprehensive) magnet programs was put in place late last year in Bakersfield, California. As expected, we are finding that magnet schools do indeed attract students, and—when strategically placed and carefully designed—can provide the needed incentive for white and black pupils to attend the same schools by choice, not by coercion.

In fact, a recent Department of Education survey of some 45 magnet programs in 15 school districts provided encouraging confirmation that "urban school districts can desegregate quite comprehensively by relying heavily on magnets. . . ." As that report observes:

"Citizens have been subjected to thirty years of political rhetoric about "forced busing," destruction of "the neighborhood school," and coercive intrusion into local control over education. As the imperative to desegregate takes hold in a community, therefore, residents brace for the worst to happen. The rhetoric leads voters toward the equivalent of a manmade disaster. Against the backdrop of this vision, magnets appear to be urgently desirable. A magnet can be designed to be receptive, hospitable, safe, educative, and desegregatively lawful."

We certainly are finding that to be the case. And, if one needs further evidence of the viability of this alternative remedial approach, consider this my friends: even the NAACP has just recently, in the Cincinnati school desegregation case, embraced the magnet school concept as an acceptable desegregation option.

In short, the Federal courts are, with increasing regularity, turning to the magnet alternative (in lieu of forced busing) to desegregate dual school systems; the most avid proponents of mandatory student assignments are beginning to rely on voluntary transfer measures that utilize educational enhancements as the principal incentive factor; and both Houses of Congress have voiced a strong preference for accomplishing the desegregation objective through means other than forced busing. Against this backdrop, it is just a matter of time—and not much time, at that—before communities will be permitted to return the neighborhood public schools to their neighborhoods, with sufficient flexibility in attendance requirements to ensure that all children in the system, without regard to race, creed or national origin, will be accorded the full range of educational opportunities in a desegrated school environment.

That is essentially the status, as I see it, of the busing question today. Before closing, let me quickly allude to what the future holds. One of the important issues currently being litigated in cases around the country concerns the scope of relief that can be awarded in a desegregation suit. The Supreme Court has spoken on several occasions on the limits of judicial authority in fashioning relief in a school, case.[2] Generally speaking, an intradistrict violation—that is, a violation limited in extent to the boundaries of a single district—requires intradistrict relief. In a recent case, however, that is currently pending in the Supreme Court on a petition for certiorari, Leggett v. Liddell, Nos. 83-1386, 83-1721 and 83-1838, the district court and the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, held the State responsible for all transfer costs resulting from students electing to commute daily from any of 23 suburban school districts into the city, and vice versa—i.e., interdistrict transfers—notwithstanding that the State was found responsible for an intradistrict violation only. The Supreme Court's response bears watching. The Justice Department is arguing in Liddell that the Supreme Court should adhere to its earlier pronouncements in the school desegregation areas and hold that the Federal courts lack the remedial power to order such a result.

One last issue deserves special mention. One of the most troublesome features of school desegregation decrees is that they never seem to come to and end. For reasons that have never been altogether clear, there appears to be a general reluctance among district court judges who have fashioned relief in a school case to acknowledge many years—in some cases decades—later that the terms of the decree have long since been satisfied and that it is time to return the administration of the public schools to the elected officials who sit on the school board. As you know, the term of art that is used to signify the point at which the segregated, or dual, system has been dismantled is "unitariness"—the segregated (or dual) school district has become desegregated (or unitary) in accordance with the court-ordered plan.

I have stated on a number of occasions, and will repeat here, that one of the most important issues of the 1980's in the field of school desegregation is, in my opinion, when, and under what circumstances, a school district under court order is entitled to a judicial declaration of unitariness, thereby releasing it from the court's jurisdiction. That issue is squarely before the district court in Colorado, where the Denver school board in the much-celebrated Keyes desegregation litigation is asking the court, some eight years after implementation of the court-ordered plan, for a declaration of unitariness.

We have joined in the Denver school board's request, urging the court to measure unitariness, not in terms of rigid racial percentages or the degree of racial balance throughout the school system, but rather in terms of the school board's good faith efforts to comply, to the fullest extent practicable, with the desegregation requirements imposed by the decree. If, the school officials have fully and faithfully complied with the terms of a comprehensive desegregation plan, we argue that a declaration of unitariness should follow—even if some schools in the system due to factors such as demographic shifts, beyond the school board's control, may never have attained (or, even if attained, not continued to maintain) the precise racial percentages for student enrollment contemplated in the court-ordered plan.

It is hightime that our Federal courts released their hold on school districts that have been in compliance for some time with comprehensive desegregation decrees. Our public schools far better serve the educational needs of our youth if run by those who are answerable to the electorate for the decisions made than if left under the supervision of the Judiciary beyond the time necessary to cure fully the constitutional violation. There is, I sense, a growing unease among educators that, in the name of desegregation, we have in many instances surrendered to the courts the day-to-day responsibility of operating our public schools—all too often with disappointing results. I therefore anticipate that the unitariness issue will begin to be joined with greater intensity in the months ahead.

I have, I am sure, gone on too long. Let me conclude by returning to my opening remarks. School desegregation is as critical an issue on the civil rights agenda as any we face today. Discrimination on account of race, whether it occurs in the admissions office, the schoolyard, or the classroom is intolerable and must be eradicated in its entirety wherever it occurs. At the same time, however, we cannot lose sight of the fact that the desegregation effort affects in a most crucial way the lives, aspirations and opportunities of our children. It serves no useful purpose to claim a racial-balance victory if in the process we have effectively destroyed—or even seriously hindered—the educational potential of an entire generation of public school students. Regrettably the preoccupation with forced busing has left just such a legacy in too many jurisdictions.

Now, through your efforts and those of many others, the country appears to have altered its course, and returned to the ideals reflected in Brown v. Board of Education, where equal education, not transportation, is the predominant theme, and where the purpose is to afford all public school students, without regard to race, color or ethnic origin, an enhanced educational experience in a desegregated school environment free from unlawful discrimination. Your organization has been instrumental in helping to reshape public attitudes and policies along these lines, and I thank you for allowing me to share this time with you.

S. 38. A bill to make scholarships available to provide psychologists for Indians; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

INDIAN PSYCHOLOGY SCHOLARSHIPS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation, very similar to that enacted into public law last year, which would authorize scholarships for those American Indians who wish to become psychologists.

This provision is almost technical in nature and would ensure that, in the redrafting of the Indian Health and Education Codes, the intent of the Congress which was expressed during the 98th Congress is, in fact, implemented.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 38

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That subsection (a) of section 338G of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254 (r)) is amended by inserting "psychologists," after "pharmacists,".

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 39. A bill to establish the position of Associate Director for Special Populations in the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and in the National Institute on Drug Abuse; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ESTABLISH A NEW POSITION FOR SPECIAL POPULATIONS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would amend the U.S. Public Health Service Act in order to formally establish a position of Associate Director for Special Populations in the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and in the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

During our deliberations on the 1930 Mental Health Systems Act (Public Law 96-398), the Congress of the United States established a position of Associate Director for Minority Concerns within the National Institute of Mental Health. This year, the Senate Appropriations Committee directed this individual to develop a comprehensive report for us highlighting her accomplishments to date and to provide us with legislative recommendations for future action.

At the time that we enacted this particular provision, we also gave serious consideration to establishing similar positions within the other two institutes of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration [ADAMHA]. In fact, such legislation passed the U.S. Senate for both institutes on May 7, 1979. Unfortunately, my proposals for those institutes did not become public law; however, I feel the time has now come to once again renew our efforts in this area. Without question, members of our Nation's minorities have truly unique and pressing concerns in both the Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism areas which must be affirmatively addressed.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 39

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 502 of the Public Health Services Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) The Director shall designate an Associate Director for Special Populations.

"(2) The Secretary, acting through the Associate Director for Special Populations, shall—

"(A) develop and coordinate prevention, treatment, research, and administrative policies and programs to assure increased emphasis on the needs of women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and alcohol abuse and related problems;

"(B) support programs and projects relating to the delivery of services to women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and alcohol abuse and related problems, including demonstration programs and projects;

"(C) develop a plan to increase the representation of women and minorities in service delivery and manpower programs for the prevention and treatment of alcoholism and alcohol abuse and related problems;

"(D) support programs of basic and applied social and behavioral research on the problems of women and minorities relating to alcoholism and alcohol abuse;

"(E) study the effects of discrimination by institutions against alcoholics or alcohol abusers;

"(F) develop systems to assist women and minority individuals who are alcoholics or alcohol abusers in adapting to, and coping with, the effects of discrimination;

"(G) support and develop research, demonstration, and training programs designed to eliminate institutional discrimination against alcoholics and alcohol abusers; and

"(H) provide increased emphasis on the concerns of women and minorities in training programs, service delivery programs, and research activities of the Institute."

(b) Section 503 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) The Director shall designate an Associate Director for Special Populations.

"(2) The Secretary, acting through the Associate Director for Special Populations, shall—

"(A) develop and coordinate prevention, treatment, research, and administrative policies and programs to assure increased emphasis on the needs of women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse and related problems;

"(B) support programs and projects relating to the delivery of services to women and minorities for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse and related problems, including demonstration programs and projects;

"(C) develop a plan to increase the representation of women and minorities in service delivery and manpower programs for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse and related problems;

"(D) support programs of basic and applied social and behavioral research on the problems of women and minorities relating to drug abuse;

"(E) study the effects of discrimination by institutions against drug abusers;

"(F) develop systems to assist women and minority individuals who are drug abusers in adapting to, and coping with, the effects of discrimination;

"(G) support and develop research, demonstration, and training programs designed to eliminate institutional discrimination against drug abusers; and

"(H) provide increased emphasis on the concerns of women and minorities in training programs, service delivery programs, and research activities of the Institute.".

(c) The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act or October 1, 1985, whichever is later.

S. 40. A bill to provide procedures for calling Federal constitutional conventions under article V for the purpose of proposing amendments to the U.S. Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROCEDURES FOR CALLING CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the proposed Constitutional Convention Implementation Act of 1985 is identical to S. 119 approved unanimously by the full Senate Judiciary Committee during the 98th Congress. It would establish clear procedures to be followed in the case of applications for a constitutional amending convention under article V of the Constitution. I would call to the attention of my colleagues Senate Report 98-594 which fully describes the provisions of this proposal.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 41. A bill to amend title 10, United States Code, to provide that the Chief of the Army Nurse Corps be appointed in the regular grade of brigadier general; to the Committee on Armed Services.

REGARDING THE CHIEF OF ARMY NURSE CORPS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend title 10 of the United States Code, in order to provide that the individual who is selected as Chief of the Army Nurse Corps shall, by statute, be appointed in the regular grade of brigadier general.

In my judgment, such a statutory modification would provide this important corps with the type of congressional recognition which it so richly deserves.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 41

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 3069(b) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "If the officer appointed as the Chief holds a lower regular grade, such officer shall be appointed in the regular grade of brigadier general.".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by this Act shall become effective on the first day of the first month following the month in which this Act is enacted.

S. 42. A bill to facilitate the efficient use of barter in managing agricultural commodities and the stocks of the national defense stockpile; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

BARTER PROMOTION ACT OF 1985

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today, with my distinguished colleague, Mr. SYMMS, the Barter Promotion Act of 1985. This legislation is designed to aid the sagging farm economy and bolster national security. It will facilitate the use of barter by simplifying existing legislative and regulatory barriers.

Barter is possible under present legislative authority. As a matter of fact, President Reagan pursued a very successful transaction in 1981 with Jamaica to obtain 400,000 tons of bauxite for 9,143 metric tons of milk products. Some private companies are presently involved in international barter. An informal intergovernmental task force meets regularly to discuss potential barter opportunities and internal mechanics of barter transactions. All in all, however, very little activity in barter is evident and yet I believe barter can and should be an effective additional tool in our agriculture and foreign policy.

A modern barter program was successfully conducted from 1950 to 1969 when commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation [CCC] worth nearly $1.7 billion, were exchanged for strategic materials. The program stagnated when CCC inventories were depleted and national defense stockpile needs were revamped.

The CCC continues to struggle with the problems of surplus farm products. CCC presently owns 359 million bushels of wheat, a vitally needed food in the drought stricken countries of Africa. The Payment-in-Kind [PIK] Program took 20 million acres out of production, yet supplies of surplus commodities remain high. Grain surpluses brought about by record production continue to darken prospects of a stronger market. As of December 1, 1984, the dairy surplus owned by CCC consisted of 296 million pounds of butter, 798 million pounds of cheese, and 1.2 billion pounds of dry milk. The Dairy Price Support Program for 1984 totaled $1.5 billion.

I am constantly amazed at the negative approach of the Federal Government to farm problems. We have the best farmers in the world. There are starving people all over the world. Yet, we tell the farmers not to grow crops; we purchase the surplus commodities for which we then pay storage costs; and then we appropriate nonexistent funds to send food to the hungry people in this world.

We should be using barter as a commonsense approach to help our farmers live up to their potential as well as to provide food to the hungry and to obtain needed strategic materials for our national security.

This legislation would facilitate the use of barter by coordinating the interagency transactions through the Executive Office of the President. It would encourage the utilization of private enterprise to make the necessary trading arrangements and allow multilateral barter while protecting agricultural prices and cash sales; both of which were proven successful practices in the 1960's. The bill also requires a report from the Secretary of Agriculture on the activities of the task force; in particular, the actions taken to promote the barter of domestic commodities for strategic and critical materials needed by the United States. Cooperation between the involved Federal agencies would be enhanced by changes in the interagency accounting methods. It would remove the provision that the CCC must be reimbursed for the Government-owned commodities involved in a barter. Barter is presently the only program requiring this reimbursement.

This legislation, Mr. President, derived from the lessons of the history of modern barter practices, was introduced in the last Congress by my good friend, John Tower. I am pleased to sponsor the Barter Promotion Act of 1985 and encourage my colleagues to take time for a comprehensive study and subsequent enactment of legislation necessary to promote barter as an additional and effective method of foreign agricultural trade.

By Mr. MATTINGLY (for himself, Mr. EVANS, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. ARMSTRONG, and Mr. KASTEN):

S. 43. A bill to provide that each item of any general or special appropriation bill and any bill or joint resolution making supplemental, deficiency, or continuing appropriations that is agreed to by both Houses of the Congress in the same form shall be enrolled as a separate bill or joint resolution for presentation to the President; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SEPARATE ENROLLMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, today I introduce legislation designed to grant line-item veto authority on appropriation bills to the President.

My legislation, with the original cosponsored by Senators EVANS and BIDEN will provide the President with a critically needed tool in the Executive workshop that will be required to aid in conquering the problems posed by the federally crested enormous debt.

Under the provisions of this legislation that has been crafted, the President would have the authority to veto separate, or individual portions of any appropriations bill. This legislation contains a sunset clause mandating the expiration of this new authority in 2 years unless it is specifically renewed by the Congress. Thus, what we propose is no more than a 2-year test program of a budgetary mechanism that has been successfully used by the Chief Executives of 43 States in our Union.

If the President decides to exercise the authority granted to him under this proposal and veto a section of an appropriation bill, Congress still maintains the right to review his action and, by a two-thirds vote of both Houses, reject his veto.

The concept that we envision does not grant any significant new authority to administrative officers of the Congress. Under my proposals, the Gephardt rule, the enrolling clerks of the appropriate House are to enroll the separate sections and paragraphs of an appropriation bill as separate pieces of legislation and transmit these newly enrolled bills to the President for signature or veto. These clerks, however, are bound by the work of the Congress and have no authority to change in any way the legislation that has been agreed to by both Houses.

It is Congress which will continue to control the content of the legislation that is transmitted to the President; it is Congress which will continue to be the sole determinant of the form in which the legislation is passed; and it is the Congress that will continue to retain its constitutional right to override a Presidential veto if it so desires.

As it is with any piece of legislation that we pass, there remain unanswered questions about the impact and effect of line item veto authority being exercised by the President. However, if we are to adopt a position that says that all questions about all effects of legislation passed by this body must be known and quantified prior to passage, then we should adjourn today because clearly, such a standard will be impossible to meet.

My proposal offers a very real opportunity to reduce Federal spending and restrain the growth of the Nation's deficit. Adoption of this legislation, along with other, much needed fiscal and monetary reforms, will create the type of economic environment that will stimulate growth, saving and investment and which will eliminate the rationale that is being bandied about as proof of the need for a tax increase.

We should be prepared to conclusively demonstrate to the American people that it is not our intent to raise taxes and the best way to do that is to show through the adoption of such mechanisms as the line item veto that we are not afraid of new ideas and that we recognize that yesterday's solutions will not help solve today's problems.

Along with the bill that I am introducing today to legislatively grant item veto authority to the President, I am also introducing an amendment to the Constitution granting the same authority. I introduce the latter piece of legislation, Senate Joint Resolution 11, as a basis of discussion for those who believe such a course of action should be examined. I believe, however, that the Senate can best serve the American people by swiftly considering and adopting the administrative changes that have been recommended by me and my colleagues.

Such an approach will provide this essential authority to the President on an expedited basis and will be a concrete demonstration of the Senate's intent to take the tough steps that will be necessary to put our economic house in order.

By Mr. THURMOND (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HELMS, Mr. EAST, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. DENTON, and Mr. TRIBLE):

S. 44. A bill to grant the consent of the Congress of the Southeast Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Compact; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CONGRESSIONAL CONSENT TO THE SOUTHEAST INTERSTATE LOW-LEVEL RADIOACTIVE WASTE MANAGEMENT COMPACT

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in behalf of myself, Senators HOLLINGS, HELMS, EAST, HAWKINS, DENTON, and TRIBLE, I am today reintroducing legislation to give congressional consent to the Southeast Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Compact. Although some progress was made in the 98th Congress with respect to consideration of low-level nuclear waste compact legislation, none of the original compacts submitted to Congress have yet received Congressional approval, largely for reasons that I will describe later. As its title suggests, the primary purpose of this compact is to provide for the management and disposal of the low-level radioactive waste in the southeastern region of the country. The member States are Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia.

The compacting process, in which almost all States have been engaged for the last several years, was essentially initiated by passage of the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980. Signed into law 3 days before Christmas of 1980, Public Law 96-573 established the policy that each State is responsible for disposal of the low-level radioactive commercial waste generated within its borders and that such waste can be most safely and efficiently managed on a regional basis. It also authorized States to enter into interstate compacts to establish and operate regional disposal facilities for such low-level waste. States of course did not need such prior authorization to enter into an interstate compact. Express authorization is not unusual, however, in instances where Congress wishes to encourage States to enter into compacts in a specific area of activity.

The 1980 Policy Act required subsequent approval of the compacts by Congress, a step which would have been required in any event by article I, section 10, clause 3 of the Constitution, which provides that "(n)o State shall, without consent of Congress * * * enter into any Agreement or Compact with any other State * * *." Perhaps the most significant provision of the act was the authority given to congressionally approved compacts to exclude waste generated outside that compact region after January 1, 1986.

Passage of the 1980 Policy Act was a major step toward addressing a problem which had previously received far less attention than the issues of high-level nuclear waste disposal and interim storage of commercial spent fuel. This lack of interest could largely be attributed to the fact that there were three commercial sites open and providing adequate storage space. So long as this was the case, there was little incentive for other States to consider opening additional sites, an action that would likely embroil them in the troublesome issues involved in siting, licensing, constructing and operating new sites.

On the other hand, from the standpoint of a State hosting one of the existing low-level waste disposal sites, this situation was clearly an unacceptable one. It placed three States—South Carolina, Washington, and Nevada—in the position of shouldering the entire responsibility for disposing of waste generated in all 50 States. The fundamental unfairness and inefficiency of this system was clearly brought into light in the summer of 1979 when the Governors of Nevada and Washington temporarily closed those sites, and the Governor of South Carolina announced that the amount of waste accepted at the Barnwell, SC, site would be significantly reduced in the future. By these actions, South Carolina, Washington, and Nevada sent a clear warning signal to other States and to the Federal Government that action needed to be taken. An immediate crisis was averted, however, when the Washington and Nevada sites were reopened in late 1979.

In response to this situation, I offered, and the Senate adopted, an amendment regarding low-level waste disposal to S. 2189, the high-level waste disposal bill which reached the Senate floor in the summer of 1980. My amendment, a precursor to the Low-Level Policy Act, authorized and encouraged States to enter into interstate compacts for the disposal of low-level waste on a regional basis. It also gave compacts entered into pursuant to that provision the authority to exclude waste generated outside the compact area as of the date of congressional approval. Several House Members, including Congressman DERRICK of South Carolina, pursued similar legislation in the House and secured its inclusion in the House nuclear waste bill. In December 1980, when the House and Senate were unable to agree on portions of the bills dealing with high-level waste disposal, the low-level waste disposal provisions were split out of the larger bills and enacted into law.

Most of the States responded promptly to passage of the Low-Level Policy Act, although none have gone so far as to open new low-level waste disposal sites. They have organized themselves into six regional groups: the northeast, southeast, midwest, central, northwest, and Rocky Mountain regions. Several States have so far decided not to join a regional compact but have instead chosen to pursue the course of establishing their own low-level disposal site. Compacts have been negotiated in each of the six regions, and most have been introduced in or ratified by the various State legislatures. Four of the compacts were submitted to the 98th Congress for its approval, although Congress has not assented to any of them.

In the Senate these bills were (and, as reintroduced, will be) referred to the Judiciary Committee which, pursuant to the Senate rules, has jurisdiction over interstate compacts generally. On the House side, the counterpart consent legislation is within the jurisdiction of the Energy and Commerce Committee and the Interior Committee.

Mr. President, in the last Congress the Senate Judiciary Committee held four hearings on these compacts. As chairman, I placed the compacts on the committee agenda for action last summer. However, strong opposition expressed by several committee members and the threat of an extended filibuster on the compacts prevented the committee from reporting consent legislation to the Senate.

Throughout the 98th Congress, efforts were made to resolve contentious issues which have thus far prevented congressional consent to these several regional compacts. Foremost among the issues in dispute has been the question of post-1985 access to the then existing disposal sites for waste generators located outside the compact regions which contain those operating sites. Regrettably, this issue has risen to the forefront because of the tardy actions of State officials outside the sited regions in addressing the responsibilities clearly reserved to them under the 1980 Policy Act—namely those of making arrangements, on their own or in cooperation with surrounding States, for the safe disposal of low-level radioactive waste generated within their respective State borders. Having failed to develop alternative disposal plans and sites in a timely manner, and faced with the prospect that congressional consent to the compacts of sited regions would give those regions the power to exclude out-of-region waste beginning in 1986, these States have prevailed on their congressional Representatives to block action on the compacts. This political situation, coupled with questions belatedly raised by the Justice Department with respect to the several compact consent bills, combined to prevent favorable action on the legislation by the Senate Judiciary Committee and by Congress.

Mr. President, it is of vital importance that the 99th Congress promptly consider and consent to these compacts. Approval of the compacts would spur the States to go forward with the actual process of siting, constructing, and licensing new sites for their respective regions. Development of a regional system of disposal sites is the only way in which the burden of low-level waste disposal will be equitably divided. For far too long, Washington, Nevada, and South Carolina have shouldered the responsibility for disposing of waste generated by the entire Nation. I cannot emphasize too strongly the depth of feeling in my State that the status quo is not acceptable, and I am prepared to support any reasonable actions which South Carolina officials decide are necessary to protect the health and safety of the people of our State, in the event congressional consent to the compacts, including the agreement negotiated by States in the southeastern region, is not forthcoming this year. The compacting process, which I helped to initiate in 1980, offers the best means of resolving the institutional and political issues pertaining to disposal of low-level radioactive waste. As chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I shall make every effort to bring the compact consent legislation before the Senate as soon as possible. Already, I have written to Senators encouraging them to reintroduce compact consent legislation for the region in which their State is represented (if their State has elected to enter into an interstate compact). I encourage those regions which did not submit their compacts previously to promptly bring them before Congress. Most importantly, I call on all State officials who have been involved in this process to press forward with renewed vigor in their negotiations to resolve, in an equitable and reasonable manner, the several compact-related issues which remain in dispute, including the post-1985 access issue.

Fundamentally, the matter of handling low-level nuclear waste is a State issue and responsibility, as underscored by the 1980 Low-Level Nuclear Waste Policy Act. It is far preferable for the States to work out an acceptable solution to these issues, and for Congress to then grant its consent to an agreement (or agreements) negotiated among the States, rather than Congress attempting to impose its will on the States (or the burden of low-level nuclear waste disposal otherwise being abrogated to the Federal Government). Mr. President, with hard work and a willingness on the part of all concerned parties to make reasonable accommodations, this issue can be resolved satisfactorily this year. I shall certainly work toward this objective, and I urge others to cooperate in this most important effort.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, once again I am pleased to join my distinguished colleagues in sponsoring this essential piece of legislation.

It is very unfortunate that this legislation did not pass last year. By forming compacts, South Carolina and many other States have kept their end of the bargain set forth by the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980. They have acted to take care of their own low-level nuclear waste. Now it is time for Congress to keep its part of that 1980 bargain. It is time for Congress to give consent to the compacts before us, including the Southeast Compact, and thus activate the provision that says that no region with an approved compact need take waste from outside that region after January 1, 1986. That was the bargain Congress enacted into law in 1980: any region that responsibly handles its own nuclear waste no longer has to take waste from outsiders.

But during the last session of Congress, some Members from States without their own compacts blocked congressional consent. These States have had 4 years to find a way to take care of their own waste. But they have delayed, and now want South Carolina to keep taking their garbage. They want Congress to break the 1980 bargain that was made with the people of my State and with the people of those other States that have acted responsibly.

This behavior is totally unacceptable to me and to the citizens of South Carolina. For years, we have been the "good neighbors" who take other people's waste. In recent years, that has meant taking over 40 percent of the Nation's low-level waste. This has got to stop.

Mr. President, I tell my colleagues very candidly that South Carolina is quite prepared to shut down our low-level nuclear burial ground if this compact is blocked. South Carolina has shut down the site before, in the late 1970's, and if necessary will do it again. South Carolina officials, especially our distinguished Governor, have been very patient over the years. But our patience is rapidly coming to an end.

There is also an important irony here that should be noted by every Member of this body. The burial ground located in Barnwell County, SC, is limited in size and filling rapidly. Even if our compact is approved and we take only southeastern waste in the future, the entire burial site will be filled by the end of this decade. If other States succeed in forcing South Carolina to continue taking their waste as well, the site will fill much more quickly. In the end, no one in the Eastern United States will have a place to put this dangerous material. Any State that thinks it simply can continue to pour all of this waste into South Carolina is deluding itself. No matter what happens to the compacts this year, each region inevitably will need to bite the bullet and establish its own disposal site. Every State should understand that.

Mr. President, all of us want to avoid a major confrontation of this matter. The way to do that is for each State and for the Congress to live up to their responsibilities under the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act. I ask my colleagues, particularly those from the Northeast, to work with us for the ratification of the pending compacts, including the Southeast Compact. Time on this issue is running very short.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 50. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that mental health specialist services shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

MEDICARE COVERAGE OF MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to ensure that the services of mental health specialists will be readily available.

The bill which I am introducing today would ensure that each of our Nation's mental health professionals, whether they be psychologists, clinical social workers, psychiatric nurse practitioners, clinical specialists, or psychiatrists, will be recognized as autonomous providers under both the Medicare and Medicaid Programs. My proposal would also ensure that their services shall be a required benefit under State Medicaid plans.

Mr. President, in my judgment, it is very much in our national interest to increase the availability of mental health services under each of our Federal programs.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 50

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (H);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (I); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(J) mental health specialist services;".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Mental Health Specialist Services

"(ee)(1) The term 'mental health specialist services' means services performed by a mental health specialist (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the mental health specialist is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not the mental health specialist is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2)(A) The term 'mental health specialist' means an individual who is a psychologist (as defined in subparagraph (B)), a clinical social worker (as defined in subparagraph (C)), a psychiatric nurse practitioner or clinical specialist (as defined in subparagraph (D)), or a psychiatrist (as defined in subparagraph (E)).

"(B) The term 'psychologist' means an individual who—

"(i) is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which he so practices,

"(ii) possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or for those individuals who were licensed or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possess a master's degree in psychology and are listed in a national register of mental health service providers in psychology which the Secretary deems appropriate, and

"(iii) possesses two years of supervised experience in health service, at least one year of which is postdegree.

"(C) The term 'clinical social worker' means an individual who—

"(i) possesses a master's or doctor's degree in social work,

"(ii) after obtaining such degree has performed at least two years of supervised clinical social work, and

"(iii) is licensed or certified as such in the State in which he practices, or if such State does not license or certify clinical social workers, is listed in a national register of social workers who, by education and experience, qualify as health care providers in clinical social work.

"(D) The term 'psychiatric nurse practioner or clinical specialist' means an individual who—

"(i) is licensed to practice nursing by the State in which the individual practices nursing,

"(ii) possesses a master's degree or higher degree in psychiatric nursing or a related field from an accredited educational institution, and

"(iii) is certified as a psychiatric nurse by a duly recognized national professional nurse organization.

"(E) The term 'psychiatrist' means a physician who—

"(i) is described in clause (1) of section 1861(r), and

"(ii) is board certified by the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology or has successfully completed a minimum of three years of approved graduate medical training in psychiatry.".

(c) Section 1833(c) of such Act is amended by striking out all that follows "purposes of subsections (a) and (b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "no more than $1,000".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) mental health specialist services (as defined in section 1861(ee)); and".

(b) Section 1902(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)";

(2) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)"; and

(3) by striking out "paragraphs numbered (1) through (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs numbered (1) through (18)".

SEC. 3. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) Except as provided under paragraph (2), the amendments made by section 2 shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by section 2, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

ENVIRONMENTAL LEGISLATION

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, I am taking the earliest possible opportunity to introduce several bills for consideration by the Environment and Public Works Committee and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD. These bills include the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985, the Acid Rain Control Act of 1985, the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, and Federal-aid highway legislation. Senator DURENBERGER is also today introducing a bill to amend the Safe Drinking Water Act.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works completed action on all of these issues in the 98th Congress; none was taken up by the Senate. Failure to act on any of three of these issues—highways, Superfund, or clean water—means Federal funds will not be available for those programs. Failure to act on any one of the five means losing ground to environmental contamination, or infrastructure decay, or both.

This early introduction is intended to signal that the committee will take up these issues early in the 99th Congress and, I believe, have bills ready for Senate action on most, if not all, no later than this spring.

I would like now to discuss briefly each of the bills I have mentioned:

FEDERAL-AID HIGHWAY LEGISLATION

Mr. President, the Federal-aid highway legislation being introduced today represents unfinished business from the 98th Congress. It is my hope, however, that this critically needed legislation will be promptly acted upon by the 99th Congress.

With the start of the new year and the new Congress, Senator SYMMS and I are taking the earliest opportunity to seek approval of an interstate cost estimate [ICE] and interstate substitute cost estimate [ISCE]. Passage is vital and will result in immediate transportation benefits nationwide as $7 billion in interstate construction and interstate substitute funds are freed and released to the States.

Last year, we were able to win only an interim 6-month ICE-ISCE approval, instead of the customary, and far more appropriate, 2-year approval. The highway trust fund is intended as a stable, long-term funding source, one which States can steadily rely on as they go about the necessary multiyear planning for major transportation projects. The nickel-a-gallon gasoline increase in 1983 was to provide the additional funding needed for large-scale road rehabilitation and completion of the Interstate Highway System.

Instead, today we have a severely disrupted highway program—delayed contracts, unrealized jobs, unmet transportation needs, and unavailable funds. This is all taking place despite the accumulation in the highway trust fund of $7 billion in tax moneys collected from higway users for the construction and repair of our Nation's roads.

I will not review the many attempts made last year to win congressional approval of an ICE and ISCE. The two bills being introduced today are similar to previous initiatives:

First, Senate Joint Resolution 312—the so-called clean ICE and ISCE, and Second, S. 3024 which passed the Senate last October. Let me say that these are two options. Indeed, there may be other alternatives, but I believe these measures provide a useful starting point for serious discussion.

My preference is for the immediate approval of a clean bill containing the 18-month ICE and ISCE approval and a provision which would permit administrative release of these funds in the future. However, I recognize that others favor additional items. At this time though, the primary reason for highway legislation is approval of the two estimates with the subsequent release of $7 billion in funds already authorized and urgently needed by the States. Any policy changes, new authorizations, or other controversial issues will, I fear, once again hinder efforts to pass this legislation.

I am encouraged by the growing and widespread support for a clean bill. A month ago the American Association of Transportation and Highway Officials passed a resolution urging enactment of legislation that would:

First. Approve an ICE and ISCE that will allow funding for these programs to be released immediately, and which will not compromise the integrity of the Federal highway trust fund.

Second. Permit the Federal Highway Administration to develop in cooperation with the States all future cost estimates unless Congress has acted prior to the expiration of the previous cost estimate.

Third. Recognize that, in the interest of meeting the immediate need to pass an ICE and ISCE, projects identified in H.R. 5504 and S. 3024 of the 98th Congress should be dropped from consideration, and no new issues should be added.

The National League of Cities has also recently adopted a resolution calling for prompt approval of an ICE and ISCE, along with the administrative release provision. The Institute of Transportation Engineers has taken similar action. Mr. President, I would like to ask that copies of all three resolutions appear in their entirety in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AASHTO RESOLUTION REGARDING THE ICE-ISCE SITUATION

1. Whereas Congress has established a national goal of completion of the National System of Defense and Interstate Highways by 1990; and

2. Whereas Congress in the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (STAA) increased the federal motor fuel tax from 4¢ to 9¢ per gallon to insure adequate funding for completion of the National System of Defense and Interstate Highways, Interstate transfer projects, and the 85% Minimum Allocation program, among other purposes; and

3. Whereas Congress has authorized funding for completion of the National System of Defense and Interstate Highways; and

4. Whereas the Federal Highway Administration has been unable to distribute to the states the authorized funding for construction of the National System of Defense and Interstate Highways, funding for Interstate transfer projects and funds under the 85% Minimum Allocation program, due to the lack of approval of an Interstate Cost Estimate (ICE) and Interstate Substitute Cost Estimate (ISCE); and

5. Whereas this lack of approval of an Interstate Cost Estimate and Interstate Substitute Cost Estimate has resulted in $7 billion previously approved for Interstate construction being frozen and unavailable for use even while states are ready to build remaining critical gaps in the Interstate System and approved Interstate substitute projects, and utilize funding under the 85% Minimum Allocation program to meet other critical highway needs; and

6. Whereas the continued freezing of this $7 billion will delay needed projects, disrupt state programs and delay the creation of some 200,000 jobs and other economic benefits promised by the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982, and results in the unnecessary prolongation of highway safety hazards and traffic congestion for thousands of Americans; and

7. Whereas a survey of 43 states just completed by the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials (AASHTO) has identified 219 highway projects that would have been placed under contract by the states before February 1, 1985 if an approved ICE and ISCE had been available before the 98th Congress adjourned, the total value of these delayed contracts being in excess of $1,214.5 million; and

8. Whereas the AASHTO survey of 43 states also revealed the dramatic impact further delay in approving the ICE and ISCE will have on the states on a month-by-month basis in 1985, resulting in a growing breach of trust with the highway users who are daily paying revenues into the federal Highway Trust Fund that are now essentially impounded by the lack of an approved ICE and ISCE:

Now therefore be it resolved that the member departments of the American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials call for immediate Congressional action in the 99th Congress in this critical situation, to enact legislation that will:

(1) Approve an ICE and ISCE that will allow funding for these programs to be released immediately, and which will not compromise the integrity of the federal Highway Trust Fund.

(2) Permit the Federal Highway Administration to develop in cooperation with the states all future cost estimates unless Congress has acted prior to the expiration of the previous cost estimate.

(3) Recognize that, in the interest of meeting the immediate need to pass an ICE and ISCE, projects identified in H.R. 5504 and S. 3024 of the 98th Congress should be dropped from consideration, and no issues should be added.

Be it further resolved, that copies of the Resolution be sent to the appropriate Committees of Congress, the Secretary of Transportation of the United States and other interested parties.

PROPOSED RESOLUTION NO. 24—INTERSTATE CONSTRUCTION ESTIMATE AND INTERSTATE SUBSTITUTION COST ESTIMATES

Whereas, Congress has established a national goal of completion of the national system of Defense and Interstate Highways by 1990; and

Whereas, Congress, in the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982, increased the federal motor fuel tax from 4 cents per gallon to 9 cents per gallon to insure adequate funding for completion of the Interstate highway system; and

Whereas, The Federal Highway Administration has been unable to distribute the authorized funding for construction of Interstate highways because of the failure of Congress to approve the Interstate Cost Estimate and Interstate Substitution Cost Estimate; and

Whereas, This failure of Congress has caused $7.2 billion previously approved for Interstate construction and substitute highway and transit construction to be unavailable for obligation; and

Whereas, Non-expenditure of this $7 billion will delay needed projects, increase the cost of highway construction due to inflation, disrupt state programs, delay the creation of some 200,000 jobs and other economic benefits projected under the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982, and adversely impact highway safety.

Now therefore be it resolved that the National League of Cities calls upon Congress to (1) expeditiously approve the Interstate Cost Estimate and Interstate Substitution Cost Estimate without additions or amendments to it and (2) enact legislation to permit the Federal Highway Administration to develop all future cost estimates and administratively apportion the funds unless Congress acts to disapprove the estimates by a date certain.

INSTITUTE OF TRANSPORTATION ENGINEERS,
Washington, DC, December 17, 1984.

Hon. ROBERT STAFFORD,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR STAFFORD: At the 54th Annual Meeting of the Institute of Transportation Engineers in San Francisco, the membership assembled passed the attached resolution concerning the Interstate Cost Estimate (ICE). This reiterates the Institute's concern over the delay in passing an ICE, expressed repeatedly during the past year in oral and written testimony to Congress.

The Institute is the scientific and professional society of those responsible for planning, designing, implementing, and managing the highway and public transportation systems of the world. We have 7,000 members in 70 countries, with approximately 6,000 in the United States. The Institute represents professionals at all levels of government, consultants, and industry.

In addition to urging the passing of ICE, the membership also took note of the significant increase in the number of individual specific local projects included as "line items" included in recent proposed legislation with funding to be provided from the Highway Trust Fund. As stated in the resolution, the funding priority for such projects should continue to be determined by transportation professionals working with state and local officials in accordance with identified needs and expected project benefits.

The Institute respectfully requests that immediate steps be taken to allow for passage of an Interstate Cost Estimate unencumbered by funding for specific projects early in the next Congress.

Sincerely,

MELVIN B. MEYER,
President.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, Congressional delay in approving an Interstate Cost Estimate (ICE) covering the remainder of fiscal year 1984 and all of 1985 has delayed distribution of funds for Interstate construction, Interstate transfer highway and transit substitute projects, and the minimum highway allocations to states, and

Whereas, highway funding legislation pending before Congress contains a significant increase in the number of individual specific local projects included as "line items" for funding out of the Highway Trust Fund, and

Whereas, these circumstances are delaying the needed transportation improvement projects and could ultimately lead to a program driven by political pressures,

Now therefore be it resolved, that the membership assembled at the 54th annual meeting of the Institute of Transportation Engineers urges immediate passage by Congress of the interstate cost estimate, and be it further

Resolved, that funding for individual local projects not be mandated in national legislation, but rather be determined by transportation professionals working with State and local officials to determine the priority of improvements in accordance with identified needs and expected project benefits.

RESOLUTION ON INTERSTATE COST ESTIMATE

Whereas, the United States Congress failed to pass the Interstate Cost Estimate, and

Whereas, this prevents the Federal Highway Administration from allocating Federal Interstate funds to the respective states, and

Whereas, this causes an undue hardship on the respective states—and especially Minnesota—by delaying completion of the Interstate system;

Now therefore, be it resolved that Minnesota Good Roads, Inc. urges the Minnesota Congressional delegation to make passage of an Interstate Cost Estimate its highest priority when Congress convenes in January, 1985.

Be it further resolved that copies of this Resolution be distributed to the Minnesota Congressional delegation and to the Chairmen of the House and Senate Public Works Committees.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, Last year, it became all too apparent that the ICE and ISCE approvals were going to be held hostage for other items. Even with increased funding for the Federal-Aid Highway Program, highway and bridge needs among the States and localities far outweigh available funds. Historically, this program has functioned well because of the tradition of a Federal-State partnership, with the priority of specific projects being set by State and local decisionmakers who are most familiar with their areas' transportation needs. I strongly believe that the program should be continued on that basis and that issues apart from the essential ones should wait until major, reauthorizing legislation is considered in 1986.

I want to thank Senator SYMMS, the distinguished Transportation Subcommittee chairman, and Senator BENTSEN, who served so ably as ranking minority member of the subcommittee and with the 99th Congress will become the ranking minority committee member.

Extensive hearings were held last year and the issues have been discussed at length. Now is the time for action to approve the interstate estimates and to assure the release of funds to the States without further delay.

SUPERFUND IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1985

I am also introducing the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985. It is essentially a combination of Superfund amendments reported from the committee during the last Congress by a vote of 17 to 1 with some other relatively minor Superfund amendments adopted by the Senate last year by a vote of 93 to 0.

There is one change, however. Because there was some controversy regarding the victims assistance provisions of last year's committee bill, it is possible that a modified version will be advanced during this year's committee consideration. Therefore, with the assent of the sponsor of those provisions, Senator MITCHELL, the bill contains only a blank where that language was found.

In addition to the Superfund Improvement Act, I am proposing two amendments to it. The first proposes a taxing scheme for raising the $7.5 billion, 5-year extension proposed by the committee last year. I am introducing this amendment to assure that if the need for floor action on extremely short notice arises, there will be a taxing scheme available to the Senate which has been widely circulated and examined.

The second amendment I am offering would establish a private right of action for the victims of hazardous substances released into the environment. I expect that there will be considerable debate prior to the committee or Senate votes on this proposal and am introducing it now so that there will be ample opportunity for the serious consideration it deserves.

To assure availability of these proposals, they are printed in the RECORD under "Amendments Submitted".

CLEAN WATER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill to reauthorize and amend the Clean Water Act. The bill would make needed improvements in the Nation's Water Pollution Control Program and assure that we can continue to build upon the progress achieved over the last 12 years by the Clean Water Act.

My colleagues will recall that we came very close last year to reauthorizing major portions of the Clean Water Act. Thanks in large part to the tireless efforts of my friend and colleague Senator CHAFEE, the Committee on Environment and Public Works completed work on the basic reauthorization bill, S. 431, in July of 1983. Shortly thereafter, the committee reported S. 2006, a bill designed to combat nonpoint source or runoff pollution. During the following year, the committee developed a small number of consensus amendments that we intended to offer on the floor to correct certain deficiencies in S. 431.

As it turned out, we were unable to bring these bills to a vote on the floor. Had we been able to do so, I am confident that the bills and the committee amendments would have passed. The bill I am introducing today simply combines the language of S. 431 and S. 2006, with modifications that would have been made by the package of committee amendments.

Mr. President, this bill also addresses important issues related to the reauthorization of the Sewage Treatment Plant Construction Grants Program. Last year's bill did not reauthorize this program because its present authorization expires at the end of this fiscal year.

The bill I am introducing today would reauthorize the Construction Grants Program for another 5 years at its present funding level of $2.4 billion. I believe that sustained Federal support at this level is essential to maintain the water quality gains of the past decade in the face of anticipated increases in sewage flows.

I anticipate that the Congress also will want to reevaluate the formula for allotment of appropriated funds to the States. The bill makes no specific proposal for a new allotment formula; it leaves the issue open.

THE ACID RAIN CONTROL ACT OF 1985

Finally, I am introducing the Acid Rain Control Act of 1985 on behalf of myself and several other members of the Committee on Environment and Public Works. The bill is quite straightforward and should be familiar to those who have followed the acid rain debate. It consists of two sections from the Clean Air Act reauthorization approved by the Committee on Environment and Public Works during the 98th Congress.

The first section requires that emissions of sulfur dioxide in a 31-State region of the Eastern United States be reduced. over a 10-year period by 10 million tons. The second section is composed of several amendments to section 126 of the Clean Air Act, which deals with the abatement of interstate air pollution. Both of these provisions are fundamentally the same as proposals which have circulated since 1980 and should contain no surprises. Having said that, however, I would like to make a personal observation regarding this bill.

Since becoming chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works in 1981, I have consistently expressed the view that acid rain should be viewed not as an isolated issue, but as a single manifestation of the problems created by air pollution in general. Even though that has been my personal view, it was apparent that the public sentiment was to couch the debate in terms of "acid rain," with attention focusing on dead or dying lakes in New England, the Adirondacks, Canada, and the Upper Midwest. In that context, the tonnage-reduction approach contained in the committee bill and other proposals, including one of my own, perhaps made sense.

But over the past 5 years our knowledge base has increased substantially.

In 1979, I offered a floor amendment to the so-called oil back out bill. That amendment was to prevent aggravation of the acid rain problem which might result from the coal conversions contained in President Carter's proposal. I regret to say that my amendment failed. That was at least in part because at that time the only demonstrated damage that my colleagues and I could cite was to a few lakes and streams. Even that was disputed by opponents of acid rain control.

But since 1979, we have learned a great deal more regarding the damage done by acid rain. There is no longer any credible dispute over whether lakes and streams are being killed. They are, and in large numbers. Moreover, it is now becoming increasingly clear that forests are almost certainly being damaged as well, probably throughout the Eastern United States, not just in its northeastern reaches. Most distressing is the rapidly accumulating evidence that current levels of acidic compounds are, in fact, resulting in adverse health effects. For the use of my colleagues and others I am attaching a summary of the current state of knowledge of the impacts of airborne acidity and its impacts on human health, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed. This table summarizes a conference held on November 15 and 16, 1984 at the National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences at the Research Triangle Park in North Carolina.

I believe the conference confirmed what I have long believed: Acid rain poses a threat not only to the lakes, streams, crops, and forests of the United States, but to our people as well, especially sensitive groups such as the young, elderly, and those with lung diseases. Evidence of this is accumulating not only in the United States, but in other countries as well.

In the context of, as critics would say, "a few fish" a tonnage reduction approach to acid rain control might make sense. But in a broader context—when we are discussing not just a few States, but the entire continent—such a limited approach should be reexamined. That is what I have been doing for the past several months and hope to continue during January. Some persons are asking, with increasing legitimacy, if we shouldn't shift our focus from the goal of reducing emissions by 8 million or 10 million or 12 million tons, to a goal of doing our best, regardless of the total reduction which that ultimately yields.

Those questions are being asked not only because of the steadily mounting evidence, but because of the increasingly distinct possibility that some provisions of the Clean Air Act are inadequate to deal with the problem at hand. For example, when the law was enacted, we required that air pollution be reduced to levels which were not a threat to human health. But instead of reducing air pollution, companies built huge smoke stacks, spreading the pollution over ever larger areas.

Confronted with this evasion of the law's purpose—which was to reduce air pollution, not spread it—Congress enacted amendments in 1977. They required that polluters be given credit only for stacks built as high as good engineering practice demanded. It is only today, 7 years after enactment and then only after a court order, that this provision is being implemented. But even now, there are stories in the press that the law's requirement will be avoided yet again by allowing companies to bubble their pollution, thus resulting in only small reductions or perhaps none at all.

In the face of this, some are asking whether one possible approach is to amend the Clean Air Act to deal with tall stacks and acid rain in a simple and straightforward way. Perhaps the proper solution is not to mandate a tonnage reduction, but to mandate an emission limit, say, of 0.80 pounds per million Btu.

And perhaps we need to require more than the use of computer models or bubble calculations for sulphur dioxide emissions to determine our policy toward tall stacks.

Frankly, I am unsure whether these are good ideas or bad ideas or somewhere in between. But what I am convinced of is that we must ask ourselves whether the proper solution to the acid rain problem is not to demand the achievement of a target, but to demand best efforts.

During the month of January I hope to answer this question to my own satisfaction. Depending on my conclusions, I may introduce another acid rain control bill and, to that end, would appreciate any suggestions which other Members might have. In the meantime, I am satisfied that whether a reduction of 10 million tons of sulphur dioxide is the best approach, we should certainly accept no less. This bill will accomplish that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table and the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be referred to as the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985.

TITLE I

INDIAN TRIBES

SEC. 101. (a) Section 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended.

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (31), striking the period at the end of paragraph (32), and adding a new paragraph as follows:

"(33) 'Indian tribe' means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community, including any Alaska Native village but not including any Alaska Native regional or village corporation, which is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians; and";

(2) in paragraph (16) by striking "or" the last time it appears and by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", any Indian tribe, or, if such resources are subject to a trust restriction on alienation, any member of an Indian tribe".

(b) Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In the case of remedial action to be taken on land or water held by an Indian tribe, held by the United States in trust for Indians, held by a member of an Indian tribe (if such land or water is subject to a trust restriction on alienation), or otherwise within the borders of an Indian reservation, the requirements of this paragraph for assurances regarding future maintenance and cost-sharing shall not apply, and the President shall provide the assurance required by this paragraph regarding the availability of a hazardous waste disposal facility.".

(c) Section 104(d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting "or Indian tribe" after the phrase "political subdivision thereof" both times that phrase occurs, and by inserting "or Indian tribe" after the phrase "political subdivision" both times that phrase occurs.

(d) Section 107 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by inserting "or an Indian tribe" after "State";

(2) In subsection (f) by inserting after "State" the third time that word appears the following: "and to any Indian tribe for natural resources belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to such tribe, or held in trust for the benefit of such tribe, or belonging to a member of such tribe if such resources are subject to a trust restriction on alienation:"; by inserting "or Indian tribe" after "State" the fourth time that word appears; by adding before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: ", so long as, in the case of damages to an Indian tribe occurring pursuant to a Federal permit or license, the issuance of that permit or license was not inconsistent with the fiduciary duty of the United States with respect to such Indian tribe"; and by inserting "or the Indian tribe" after "State government";

(3) in subsection (i) by inserting "or Indian tribe" after "State" the first time it appears; and

(4) in subsection (j) by inserting "or Indian tribe" after "State" the first time it appears.

(e) Section 111 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) in subsection (b) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", or by any Indian tribe or by the United States acting on behalf of any Indian tribe for natural resources belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to such tribe, or held in trust for the benefit of such tribe, or belonging to a member of such tribe if such resources are subject to a trust restriction on alienation";

(2) in subsection (c)(2) by inserting "or Indian tribe" after "State";

(3) in subsection (f) by inserting "or Indian tribe" after "State"; and

(4) in subsection (i) by inserting after "State," the following: "and by the governing body of any Indian tribe having sustained damage to natural resources belonging to, managed by, controlled by, or appertaining to such tribe, or held in trust for the benefit of such tribe, or belonging to a member of such tribe if such resources are subject to a trust restriction on alienation,".

(f) Section 112(d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (as rewritten by this Act) is amended by adding before the period at the end of the proviso the following: ", nor against an Indian tribe until the United States, in its capacity as trustee for the tribe, gives written notice to the governing body of the tribe that it will not present a claim or commence an action on behalf of the tribe or fails to present a claim or commence an action within the time limitations specified in this subsection".

(g) Title I of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"INDIAN TRIBES

"SEC. 116. The governing body of an Indian tribe shall be afforded substantially the same treatment as a State with respect to the provisions of section 103(a) (regarding notification of releases), section 104(c)(2) (regarding consultation on remedial actions), section 104(e) (regarding access to information), section 104(i) (regarding cooperation in establishing and maintaining national registries), and section 105 (regarding roles and responsibilities under the national contingency plan and submittal of priorities for remedial action, but not including the provision regarding the inclusion of at least one facility per State on the national priority list).".

COMMUNITY RELOCATION

SEC. 102. (a) The second sentence of paragraph (23) of section 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting after "not otherwise provided for," the phrase "costs of permanent relocation of residents where it is determined that such permanent relocation is cost effective or may be necessary to protect health or welfare," and by striking out the semicolon at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a period and the following: "In the case of a business located in an area of evacuation or relocation, the term may also include the payment of those installments of principal and interest on business debt which accrue between the date of evacuation or temporary relocation and thirty days following the date the permanent relocation is actually accomplished or, if permanent relocation is formally rejected as the appropriate response, the date on which evacuation or temporary relocation ceases. In the case of an individual unemployed as a result of such evacuation or relocation, it may also include the provision of assistance identical to that authorized by sections 407, 408, and 409 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974: Provided, That the costs of such assistance shall be paid from the Trust Fund;".

(b) Section 104(c)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting before "authorized by subsection (b) of this section," the phrase "for permanent relocation or".

ALTERNATIVE WATER SUPPLIES

SEC. 103. Section 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, is amended by striking the period at the end of paragraph (30) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and by adding after new paragraph (33) the following new paragraph:

"(34) 'alternative water supplies' includes, but is not limited to, drinking water and household water supplies.".

STATE CREDIT

SEC. 104. (a) Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by striking "The President shall grant the State a credit against the share" and all that follows down through the end of such section 104(c)(3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "In determining the portion of the costs referred to in this section which is required to be paid by a participating State, the President shall grant the State a credit for amounts expended or obligated by such State or by a political subdivision thereof after January 1, 1978, and before December 11, 1980, for any response action costs which are covered by section 111(a) (1) or (2) and which were incurred at a facility or release listed pursuant to section 105(8). Such credit shall have the effect of reducing the amount which the State would otherwise be required to pay in connection with assistance under this section.".

(b)(1) Section 104(d)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following new sentence: "For the purposes of the last sentence of subsection (c)(3) of this section, the President may enter into a contract or cooperative agreement with a State under this paragraph under which such State will take response actions in connection with releases listed pursuant to section 105(8)(B), using non-Federal funds for such response actions, in advance of and without any obligation by the President of amounts from the Fund for such response actions.".

(2) Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is further amended by adding the following sentence: "The President shall grant the State a credit against the share of costs for which it is responsible under this paragraph for any reasonable, documented, direct out of pocket non-Federal funds expended or obligated by the State under a contract or cooperative agreement under the last sentence of subsection (d)(1).".

FUNDING OF REMEDIAL ACTION AT FACILITY OWNED BY A STATE OR POLITICAL SUBDIVISION BUT OPERATED PRIVATELY

SEC. 105. Section 104(c)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) by amending section 104(c)(3)(C)(ii) to read as follows:

"(ii) 50 per centum (or such greater amount as the President may determine appropriate, taking into account the degree of responsibility of the State or political subdivision for the release) of the capital, future operation, and future maintenance costs of the response action relating to a release at a facility, primarily used for treatment, storage, or disposal, that was owned and operated by the State or a political subdivision thereof at the time of any disposal of hazardous substances in such facility. For the purpose of subparagraph (c)(ii) of this paragraph, the term 'facility' does not include navigable waters or the beds underlying those waters."; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "In the case of any State which has paid, at any time after the date of the enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985, in excess of 10 percent of the costs of remedial action at a facility owned but not operated by such State or by a political subdivision thereof, the President shall use money in the Fund to provide reimbursement to such State for the amount of such excess.".

SELECTION OF REMEDIAL ACTIONS

SEC. 106. Section 104(c)(4) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(4)(A) The President shall select appropriate remedial actions determined to be necessary to carry out this section which, to the extent practicable, are in accordance with the national contingency plan and which provide for cost-effective response. In evaluating the cost-effectiveness of proposed alternative remedial actions, the President shall take into account the total short- and long-term costs of such actions, including the costs of operation and maintenance for the entire period during which such activities will be required.

"(B) Remedial actions in which treatment which significantly reduces the volume, toxicity or mobility of the hazardous substances is a principal element, are to be preferred over remedial actions not involving such treatment. The offsite transport and disposal of hazardous substances or contaminated materials without such treatment should be the least favored alternative remedial action, where practicable treatment technologies are available.

"(C) Remedial actions selected under this paragraph or otherwise required or agreed to by the President under this Act shall attain a degree of cleanup of hazardous substances, pollutants and contaminants from the environment and of control of further release at a minimum which assures protection of human health and the environment. Such remedial actions shall be relevant and appropriate under the circumstances presented by the release or threatened release of such substance, pollutant, or contaminant.

"(D) No permit shall be required under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act for the portion of any removal or remedial action conducted pursuant to this Act entirely onsite: Provided, That any onsite treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous substances, pollutants or contaminants shall comply with the requirements of subparagraph (C).

"(E) Subject to the requirements of this paragraph, the President shall select the appropriate remedial action which provides a balance between the need for protection of public health and welfare and the environment at the facility under consideration, and the availability of amounts from the Fund to respond to other sites which present or may present a threat to public health or welfare or the environment, taking into consideration the relative immediacy of such threats.".

STATE AND FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

SEC. 107. Section 104(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following new paragraphs:

"(5) For the purposes of paragraph (3) of this subsection, in the case of ground or surface water contamination, completed remedial action includes the completion of treatment or other measures, whether taken onsite or offsite, necessary to restore ground and surface water quality to a level that assures protection of human health and the environment. With respect to such measures, the operation of such measures for a period up to five years after the construction or installation and commencement of operation shall be considered remedial action. Activities required to maintain the effectiveness of such measures following such period or the completion of remedial action, whichever is earlier, shall be considered operation or maintenance.

(7) "During any period after the availability of funds received by the Trust Fund under sections 4611 and 4661 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or section 221(b)(2) of this Act, the Federal share of the payment of costs for operation and maintenance pursuant to paragraph (3)(C)(i) or paragraph (5) of this subsection shall be from funds received by the Trust Fund under section 221(b)(1)(B).".

SITING OF HAZARDOUS WASTE FACILITIES

SEC. 108. Section 104(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(7) Effective four years after the date of enactment of this paragraph, the President shall not provide any remedial actions pursuant to this section unless the State in which the release occurs first enters into a contract or cooperative agreement with the President providing assurances deemed adequate by the President that the State will assure the availability of hazardous waste treatment or disposal facilities acceptable to the President and in compliance with the requirements of subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act with adequate capacity for the destruction, treatment, or secure disposition of all hazardous wastes that are reasonably expected to be generated within the State during the 20-year period following the date of such contract or cooperative agreement and to be disposed of, treated, or destroyed."

COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS

SEC. 109. Section 104(d)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by striking all of the existing paragraph (other than that added by this Act) and substituting the following:

(d)(1) Where the President determines that a State or political subdivision has the capability to carry out any or all of the actions authorized in this section, the President may, in his discretion, enter into a contract or cooperative agreement and combine any existing cooperative agreements with such State or political subdivision to take such actions in accordance with criteria and priorities established pursuant to Section 105(8) of this title and to be reimbursed from the Fund for the reasonable response costs and related activities associated with the overall implementation, coordination, enforcement, training, community relations, site inventory and assessment efforts, and administration of remedial activities authorized by this Act. Any contract made hereunder shall be subject to the cost-sharing provisions of subsection (c) of this section."

HEALTH-RELATED AUTHORITIES

SEC. 118. (a) Section 104(i) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(i)", by redesignating paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) as subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), (D), and (E), and by adding the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall provide consultations upon request on health issues relating to exposure to hazardous or toxic substance, on the basis of available information, to the Environmental Protection Agency, State officials, and local officials. Such consultations to individuals may be provided by States under cooperative agreements established under this Act.

"(3)(A) The Administrator shall perform a health assessment for each release, threatened release or facility on the National Priority List established under section 105. Such health assessment shall be completed not later than two years after the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985 for each release, threatened release or facility proposed for inclusion on such list prior to such date of enactment or not later than one year after the date of proposal for inclusion on such list for each release, threatened release or facility proposed for inclusion on such list after such date of enactment. The Administrator shall also perform a health assessment for each facility for which one is required under section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act and, upon request of the Administrator of the Environmental Protection agency or a State, for each facility subject to this act or subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, where there is sufficient data as to what hazardous substances are present in such facility.

"(B) The Administrator may perform health assessments for releases on facilities where individual persons or licensed physicians provide information that individuals have been exposed to a hazardous substance, for which the probable source of such exposure is a release. In addition to other methods (formal or informal) of providing such information, such individual persons or licensed physicians may submit a petition to the Administrator providing such information and requesting a health assessment. If such a petition is submitted and the Administrator does not initiate a health assessment, the Administrator shall provide a written explanation of why a health assessment is not appropriate.

"(C) In determining sites at which to conduct health assessments under this paragraph, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall give priority to those facilities or sites at which there is documented evidence of release of hazardous substances, at which the potential risk to human health appears highest, and for which in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency existing health assessment data is inadequate to assess the potential risk to human health as provided in subparagraph (E).

"(D) Any State or political subdivision carrying out an assessment shall report the results of the assessment to the Administrator of such Agency, and shall include recommendations with respect to further activities which need to be carried out under this section. The Administrator of such Agency shall include the same recommendation in a report on the results of any assessment carried out directly by the Agency, and shall issue periodic reports which include the results of all the assessments carried out under this paragraph.

"(E) For the purposes of this subsection and section 111(c)(4), the term 'health assessments' shall include preliminary assessments of the potential risk to human health posed by individual sites and facilities, based on such factors as the nature and extent of contamination, the existence of potential for pathways of human exposure (including ground or surface water contamination, air emissions, and food chain contamination), the size and potential susceptibility of the community within the likely pathways of exposure, the comparison of expected human exposure levels to the short-term and long-term health effects associated with identified contaminants and any available recommended exposure or tolerance limits for such contaminants, and the comparison of existing morbidity and mortality data on diseases that may be associated with the observed levels of exposure. The assessment shall include an evaluation of the risks to the potentially affected population from all sources of such contaminants, including known point or nonpoint sources other than the site or facility in question. A purpose of such preliminary assessments shall be to help determine whether full-scale health or epidemiological studies and medical evaluations of exposed populations shall be undertaken.

"(F) At the completion of each health assessment the Administrator shall provide the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and each affected State with the results of such assessment, together with any recommendations for further action under this subsection or otherwise under this Act.

"(G) In any case in which a health assessment performed under this paragraph (including one required by section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act) discloses the exposure of a population to the release of a hazardous substance, the costs of such health assessment may be recovered as a cost of response under section 107 of this Act from persons causing or contributing to such release of such hazardous substance or, in the case of multiple releases contributing to such exposure, to all such releases.

"(4) Whenever, in the judgment of the Administrator, it is appropriate on the basis of the results of a health assessment, the Administrator shall conduct a pilot study of health effects for selected groups of exposed individuals, in order to determine the desirability of conducting full scale epidemiological or other health studies of the entire exposed population. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator it is appropriate on the basis of the results of such pilot study, the Administrator shall conduct such full scale epidemiological or other health studies as may be necessary to determine the health effects for the population exposed to hazardous substances in a release or suspected release.

"(5) In any case in which the results of a health assessment indicate a potential significant risk to human health, the Administrator shall consider whether the establishment of a registry of exposed persons would contribute to accomplishing the purposes of this subsection, taking into account circumstances bearing on the usefulness of such a registry, including the seriousness or unique character of identified diseases or the likelihood of population migration from the affected area.

"(6) The Administrator shall conduct a study, and report to the Congress within two years after the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985, on the usefulness, costs, and potential implications of medical surveillance programs as a part of the health studies authorized by this section. Such study shall include, at a minimum, programs which identify diseases for which an exposed population is at excess risk, provide periodic medical testing to screen for such diseases in subgroups of the exposed population at highest risk, and provide for a mechanism to refer for treatment individuals who are diagnosed as having such diseases.

"(7) If a health assessment or other study carried out under this subsection contains a finding that the exposure concerned presents a significant risk to human health, the President shall take such steps as may be necessary to reduce such exposure and eliminate or substantially mitigate the significant risk to human health. Such steps may include the use of any authority under this Act, including, but not limited to—

"(1) provision of alternative water supplies, and

"(2) permanent or temporary relocation of individuals.

"(8) In any case which is the subject of a petition, a health assessment or study, or a research program under this subsection, nothing in this subsection shall be construed to delay or otherwise affect or impair the authority of the President or the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to exercise any authority vested in the President or such Administrator under any other provision of law (including, but not limited to, the imminent hazard authority of section 7003 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act) or the response and abatement authorities of this Act.

"(9)(A) The Administrator shall, within six months after the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985, prepare a list of at least one hundred hazardous substances which the Administrator, in his sole discretion, determines are those posing the most significant potential threat to human health due to their common presence at the location of responses under section 104 or at facilities on the National Priority List or in releases to which a response under section 104 is under consideration. Within twenty-four months after enactment, the Administrator shall prepare a list of an additional one hundred or more such hazardous substances. The Administrator shall not less often than once every year thereafter add to such list other substances which are frequently so found or otherwise pose a potentially significant threat to human health by reason of their physical, chemical, or biological nature.

"(B) For each such hazardous substance listed pursuant to subparagraph (A), the Administrator shall assess whether adequate information on the health effects of such substance is available. For any such substance for which adequate information is not available (or under development), the Administrator shall assure the initiation of a program of research designed to determine the health effects (and techniques for development of methods to determine such health effects) of such substance. Where feasible, such program shall seek to develop methods to determine the health effects of such substance in combination with other substances with which it is commonly found. Such program shall include, but not be limited to—

"(i) laboratory and other studies to determine short, intermediate, and long-term health effects;

"(ii) laboratory and other studies to determine organ-specific, site-specific, and system-specific acute and chronic toxicity;

"(iii) laboratory and other studies to determine the manner in which such substances are metabolized or to otherwise develop an understanding of the biokinetics of such substances; and

"(iv) where there is a possibility of obtaining human data, the collection of such information.

"(C) In assessing the need to perform laboratory and other studies, as required by subparagraph (B), the Administrator shall consider—

"(i) the availability and quality of existing test data concerning the substance on the suspected health effect in question;

"(ii) the extent to which testing already in progress will, in a timely fashion, provide data that will be adequate to support the preparation of toxicological profiles as required by subparagraph (F) of this paragraph; and

"(iii) such other scientific and technical factors as the Administrator may determine are necessary for the effective implementation of this subsection.

"(D) In the development and implementation of any research program under this paragraph, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall coordinate such research program implemented under this paragraph with programs of toxicological testing established under the Toxic Substances Control Act and the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act. The purpose of such coordination shall be to avoid duplication of effort and to assure that the hazardous substances listed pursuant to this subsection are tested thoroughly at the earliest practicable date. Where appropriate in the discretion of the Administrator and consistent with such purpose, a research program under this paragraph may be carried out using such programs of toxicological testing.

"(E) It is the sense of the Congress that the costs of research programs under this paragraph be borne by the manufacturers of the hazardous substance in question, as required in programs of toxicological testing under the Toxic Substances Control Act. Where this is not practical, the costs of such research programs should be borne by parties responsible for the release of the hazardous substance in question. To carry out such intention, the costs of conducting such a research program under this paragraph shall be deemed a cost of response for the purposes of recovery under section 107 of such costs from a party responsible for a release of such hazardous substance.

"(F) Based on all available information, including data developed and collected on the health effects of hazardous substances under this paragraph, the Administrator shall prepare toxicological profiles sufficient to establish the likely effect on human health of each of the substances listed pursuant to subparagraph (A). Such profiles shall be revised and republished as necessary, but no less often than once every five years. Such profiles shall be provided to the States and made available to other interested parties.

"(10) All studies and results of research conducted under this subsection (other than health assessments) shall be reported or adopted only after appropriate peer review. Such peer review shall be conducted by panels consisting of no less than three nor more than seven members, who shall be disinterested scientific experts selected for such purpose by the Administrator on the basis of their reputation for scientific objectivity and the lack of institutional ties with any person involved in the conduct of the study or research under review. Support services for such panels shall be provided by the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry.

"(11) In the implementation of this subsection and other health-related authorities of this Act, the Administrator is authorized to establish a program for the education of physicians and other health professionals on methods of diagnosis and treatment of injury or disease related to exposure to toxic substances, through such means as the Administrator deems appropriate. Not later than one year after the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act 1985, the Administrator shall report to the Congress on the implementation of this paragraph.

"(12) For the purpose of implementing this subsection and other health-related authorities of this Act, the President shall provide adequate personnel to the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry, which shall be no fewer than one hundred full time equivalent employees.

"(13) The activities described in this subsection and section 111(c)(4) shall be carried out by the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by paragraph (1), either directly, or through cooperative agreements with States (or political subdivisions thereof) in the case of States (or political subdivisions) which the Administrator of such Agency determines are capable of carrying out such activities. Such activities shall include the provision of consultations on health information, and the conduct of health assessments, including those required under section 3005(j) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act, health studies and registries.".

(b) Section 111(c)(4) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended—

(1) by inserting "in accordance with subsection (n) of this section and section 104(i)," after "(4)"; and

(2) by striking "epidemiologic studies" and inserting in lieu thereof "epidemiologic and laboratory studies and health assessments".

(c) Section 111 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(n) For fiscal year 1985, not less than $18,000,000 and, for each fiscal year thereafter, not less than five per centum of all sums appropriated from the Trust Fund or $50,000,000, whichever is less, shall be directly available to the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry and used for the purpose of carrying out activities described in subsection (c)(4) and section 104(i), including any such activities related to hazardous waste stored, treated, or disposed of at a facility having a permit under section 3025 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act. Any funds so made available which are not obligated by the beginning of the fourth quarter of the fiscal year in which made available shall be made available in the Trust Fund for other purposes.".

(d) Section 3005 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(j) EXPOSURE INFORMATION AND HEALTH ASSESSMENTS.—(1) Beginning on the date nine months after the enactment of the Solid Waste Disposal Act Amendments of 1984, each completed application for a permit under subsection (c) for a landfill or surface impoundment shall be accompanied by information reasonably ascertainable by the owner or operator on the potential for the public to be exposed to hazardous wastes or hazardous constituents through releases related to the unit. At a minimum, such information must address—

"(A) reasonably foreseeable potential releases from both normal operations and accidents at the unit, including releases associated with transportation to or from the unit;

"(B) the potential pathways of human exposure to hazardous wastes or constituents resulting from the releases described under subparagraph (A); and

"(C) the potential magnitude and nature of the human exposure resulting from such releases.

The owner or operator of a landfill or surface impoundment for which a completed application for a permit under subsection (c) has been submitted prior to such date shall submit the information required by this paragraph to the Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) no later than the date nine months after such date of enactment.

"(2) The Administrator (or the State, in the case of a State with an authorized program) shall make the information required by paragraph (1), together with other relevant information, available to the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry established by section 104(i) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980. Whenever in the judgment of the Administrator of such Agency, the Administrator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program), a landfill or a surface impoundment poses a substantial potential risk to human health, due to the existence of releases of hazardous constituents, the magnitude of contamination with hazardous constituents which may be the result of a release, or the magnitude of the population exposed to such release or contamination, the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry shall conduct a health assessment in connection with such facility in accordance with section 104(i)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 and take other appropriate action with respect to such risks as authorized by section 104(b) and (i) of such Act.

"(3) Any member of the public may submit evidence of releases of or exposure to hazardous constituents from such a facility, or as to the risks or health effects associated with such releases or exposure, to the Administrator of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Diseases Registry, the Administator, or the State (in the case of a State with an authorized program).".

(e) Section 104(i)(1) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by—

(1) striking "the Surgeon General of the United States" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Secretary of Health and Human Services";

(2) inserting in the second sentence thereof after "of said Agency" the following: "(hereinafter in this subsection referred to as 'the Administrator')";

(3) striking "chromosomal testing" in subparagraph (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "appropriate testing".

PUBLIC PARTICIPATION

SEC. 111. Section 104 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j) Before selection of appropriate remedial action to be undertaken by the United States or a State or before entering into a covenant not to sue or to forebear from suit or otherwise settle or dispose of a claim arising under this Act, notice of such proposed action and an opportunity for a public meeting in the affected area, as well as a reasonable opportunity to comment, shall be afforded to the public prior to final adoption or entry. Notice shall be accompanied by a discussion and analysis sufficient to provide a reasonable explanation of the proposal and alternative proposals considered.".

LOVE CANAL PROPERTY ACQUISITION

SEC. . Section 104 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding a new subsection as follows:

"(k) In determining priorities among releases and threatened releases under the National Contingency Plan and in carrying out remedial action under this section, the Administrator shall establish a high priority for the acquisition of all properties (including nonowner occupied residential, commercial, public, religious, and vacant properties) in the area in which, before May 22, 1980, the President determined an emergency to exist because of the release of hazardous substances and in which owner occupied residences have been acquired pursuant to such determination.".

NATIONAL CONTINGENCY PLAN—HAZARD RANKING SYSTEM

SEC. 112. Section 105 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting "(a)" immediately following "105." and by adding the following at the end thereof:

"(b) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985, the President shall revise the National Contingency Plan to reflect the requirements of such amendments. The portion of such Plan known as 'the National Hazardous Substance Response Plan' shall be revised to provide procedures and standards for remedial actions undertaken pursuant to this Act which are consistent with amendments made by the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985 relating to the selection of remedial action.

"(c) Not later than twelve months after the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985 and after publication of notice and opportunity for submission of comments in accordance with section 553 of title 5, United States Code, the President shall by rule promulgate amendments to the hazard ranking system in effect on September 1, 1984. Such amendments shall assure, to the maximum extent feasible, that the hazard ranking system accurately assesses the relative degree of risk to human health and the environment posed by sites and facilities subject to review. The President shall establish an effective date for the amended hazard ranking system which is not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985 and such amended hazard ranking system shall be applied to any site or facility to be newly listed on the National Priority List after the effective date established by the President. Until such effective date of the regulations, the hazard ranking system in effect on September 1, 1984, shall continue in full force and effect.".

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT LIABILITY

SEC. 113. Section 107(d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act to 1980 is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(d)" and adding the following new language:

"(2) No State or local government shall be liable under this title for costs or damages as a result of nonnegligent actions taken in response to an emergency created by the release of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant generated by or from a facility owned by another person.".

CONTRACTOR INDEMNIFICATION

SEC. 114. Section 107(e) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph and redesignating the succeeding paragraph accordingly:

"(2) The Administrator may, in contracting or arranging for response action to be undertaken under this Act, agree to hold harmless and indemnify a contracting party against claims, including the expenses of litigation or settlement, by third persons for death, bodily injury or loss of or damage to property arising out of performance of a cleanup agreement to the extent that such claim does not arise out of the negligence of the contracting party.".

DIRECT ACTION

SEC. 115. (a) Section 108 (c) and (d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) In any case where the owner or operator is in bankruptcy, reorganization, or arrangement pursuant to the Federal Bankruptcy Code or where with reasonable diligence jurisdiction in the Federal Courts cannot be obtained over an owner or operator likely to be solvent at the time of judgment, any claim authorized by section 107 and 111 may be asserted directly against the guarantor providing evidence of financial responsibility. In the case of any action pursuant to this subsection, such guarantor shall be entitled to invoke all rights and defenses which would have been available to the owner or operator if any action had been brought against the owner or operator by the claimant and which would have been available to the guarantor if an action had been brought against the guarantor by the owner or operator.

"(d) The total liability under this Act of any guarantor shall be limited to the aggregate amount which the guarantor has provided as evidence of financial responsibility to the owner or operator under this Act: Provided, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed to limit any other State or Federal statutory, contractual or common law liability of a guarantor to its owner or operator including, but not limited to, the liability of such guarantor for bad faith either in negotiating or in failing to negotiate the settlement of any claim: Provided further, That nothing in this subsection shall be construed, interpreted or applied to diminish the liability of any person under section 107 or 111 of this Act or other applicable law.".

(b) Section 108(b)(2) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by adding the following: "Financial responsibility may be established by any one, or any combination, of the following: insurance, guarantee, surety bond, letter of credit, or qualification as a self-insurer. In promulgating requirements under this section, the President is authorized to specify policy or other contractual terms, conditions, or defenses which are necessary or are unacceptable in establishing such evidence of financial responsibility in order to effectuate the purposes of this Act.".

VICTIM ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

SEC. 116. * * *.

FUND USE OUTSIDE FEDERAL PROPERTY BOUNDARIES

SEC. 117. Section 111(e)(3) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting before the period a colon and the following: "Provided, That money in the Fund shall be available for the provision of alternative water supplies (including the reimbursement of costs incurred by a municipality) in any case involving groundwater contamination outside the boundaries of a federally owned facility in which the federally owned facility is not the only potentially responsible party.".

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

SEC. 118. Section 112(d) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) No claim may be presented, nor may any action be commenced, under this title—

"(1) for the costs of response, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of completion of the response action;

"(2) for damages under subparagraph (C) of section 107(a), unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date on which final regulations are promulgated under section 301(c) or within three years after the date of the discovery of the loss and its connection with the release in question or the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later; or

"(3) for any other damages, unless that claim is presented or action commenced within three years after the date of the discovery of the loss and its connection with the release in question or the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later: Provided, however, That the time limitations contained in this paragraph shall not begin to run against a minor until he reaches eighteen years of age or a legal representative is duly appointed for him, nor against an incompetent person until his incompetency ends or a legal representative is duly appointed for him. No claim may be presented or action be commenced under this paragraph for any damages if, prior to the date of enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985, the statute of limitations which would otherwise apply under this paragraph has expired.".

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 119. Section 113(a) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 113. (a)(1) Review of any regulation promulgated under this Act may be had upon application by any interested person in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States for the District of Columbia or in any United States Court of Appeals for a circuit in which the applicant resides or transacts business which is directly affected by such regulation. Any such application shall be made within one hundred and twenty days from the date of promulgation of such regulation, or after such date only if such application is based solely on grounds which arose after such one hundred and twentieth day. Any matter with respect to which review could have been obtained under this subsection shall not be subject to judicial review in any civil or criminal proceeding for enforcement or to obtain damages or recovery of response costs.

"(2)(A) If applications for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of the first such application more than thirty days before receiving written notice of the filing of the second application, then the record shall be filed in that court in which the first application was filed. If applications for review of the same agency action have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of one or more applications within thirty days or less after receiving written notice of the filing of the first application, then the Administrator shall promptly advise in writing the Administrative Office of the United States Courts that applications have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals, and shall identify each court for which he has written notice that such applications have been filed within thirty days or less of receiving written notice of the filing of the first such application. Pursuant to a system of random selection devised for this purpose, and within three business days after receiving such notice from the Administrator, the Administrative Office thereupon shall select the court in which the record shall be filed from among those identified by the Administrator. Upon notification of such selection, the Administrator shall promptly file the record in such court. For the purpose of review of agency action which has previously been remanded to the Administrator, the record shall be filed in the United States Court of Appeals which remanded such action.

"(B) Where applications have been filed in two or more United States Courts of Appeals with respect to the same agency action and the record has been filed in one of such courts pursuant to subparagraph (A), the other courts in which such applications have been filed shall promptly transfer such applications to the United States Court of Appeals in which the record has been filed. Pending selection of a court pursuant to subparagraph (A), any court in which an application has been filed may postpone the effective date of the agency action until fifteen days after the Administrative Office has selected the court in which the record shall be filed.

"(C) Any court in which an application with respect to any agency action has been filed, including any court selected pursuant to subparagraph (A), may transfer such application to any other United States Court of Appeals for the convenience of the parties or otherwise in the interest of justice.".

CLARIFICATION OF PREEMPTION LANGUAGE

SEC. 120. Section 114(c) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following: "Nothing in this section shall preclude any State from requiring any person to contribute to a fund to pay (1) the costs of the non-Federal share or other State responsibilities under section 104(c)(3), or (2) the direct and indirect costs of response actions at facilities or locations where the President has not responsed under this Act or in addition to response actions taken under this Act, or, (3) any other management, enforcement, or administration activities related to response actions or other cleanup of hazardous substances or hazardous wastes.".

FEDERAL FACILITIES

SEC. 121. Section 115 of the Comprehensive Environmental, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That with respect to a Federal facility or activity for which such duties or powers are delegated to an officer, employee or representative of the department, agency or instrumentality which owns or operates such facility or conducts such activity, the concurrence of the Administrator (and the responsible State official where a cooperative agreement has been entered into) shall be required for the selection of appropriate remedial action and the administrative order authorities of section 106(a) are hereby delegated to the Administrator".

ADMINISTRATIVE CONFERENCE RECOMMENDATION

SEC. 122. The Congress finds that Recommendation 84-4 of the Administrative Conference of the United States (Adopted June 29, 1984) is generally consistent with the goals and purposes of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1982, and that the Administrator should consider such Recommendation and implement it to the extent that the Administrator determines that such implementation will expedite the cleanup of hazardous substances which have been released into the environment.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 123. (a) Section 221 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended by striking "as provided in this section" in subsection (a); striking paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (b); and by striking subsection (c).

(b) Section 303 of the Comprehensive Environmental Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 303. (a) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Emergency Response Fund for fiscal year—

"(A) 1981, $44,000,000,
"(B) 1982, $44,000,000,
"(C) 1983, $44,000,000,
"(D) 1984, $44,000,000,
"(E) 1985, $44,000,000,
"(F) 1986, $206,000,000,
"(G) 1987, $206,000,000,
"(H) 1988, $206,000,000,
"(I) 1989, $206,000,000, and
"(J) 1990, $206,000,000.

plus for each fiscal year an amount equal to so much of the aggregate amount authorized to be appropriated under subparagraphs (A) through (I) as has not been appropriated before the beginning of the fiscal year involved".

"(b) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—There shall be transferred to the Response Trust Fund—

"(1) one-half of the unobligated balance remaining before the date of the enactment of this Act under the Fund in section 311 of the Clean Water Act, and

"(2) the amounts appropriated under section 504(b) of the Clean Water Act during any fiscal year.

"(c) EXPENDITURES FROM RESPONSE TRUST FUND.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Amounts in the Response Trust Fund shall be available in connection with releases or threats of releases of hazardous substances into the environment only for purposes of making expenditures which are described in section 111 (other than subsection (j) thereof) of this Act, as in effect on the date of the enactment of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985, including—

"(A) response costs,

"(B) claims asserted and compensable but unsatisfied under section 311 of the Clean Water Act,

"(C) claims for injury to, or destruction or loss of, natural resources, and

"(D) related costs described in section 111(c) of this Act.

"(2) LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES.—At least 85 percent of the amounts appropriated to the Response Trust Fund shall be reserved—

"(A) for the purposes specified in paragraphs (1), (2), and (4) of section 111(a) of this Act, and

"(B) for the repayment of advances made under section 223(c), other than advances subject to the limitation of section 223(c)(2)(C)."

S. 52

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the Acid Rain Control Act of 1985.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORT AND ACID PRECURSOR REDUCTION

SEC. 1. Title I of the Clean Air Act is amended by adding the following new part:

"PART E—INTERSTATE TRANSPORT AND ACID PRECURSOR REDUCTION

"FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

"SEC. 180. (a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) the long-range transport of pollutants and their transformation products is an interstate and international problem;

"(2) current levels of emissions of air pollutants from existing sources as well as increased emissions from new and existing sources threaten public health and welfare and the environment in States and countries other than those in which emitted;

"(3) reduction of total regional atmospheric loading of pollutants such as sulfur oxides and nitrogen oxides will enhance protection of public health and welfare and the environment;

"(4) more effective regulation of the interstate transport of air pollutants is needed in order to protect the health and welfare of the citizens of downwind States and the economic growth opportunities of downwind States; and

"(5) in particular,

"(A) the deposition of acid compounds from the atmosphere is causing and contributing to widespread long-term ecosystem degradation;

"(B) the principal source of the acid compounds in the atmosphere, and their precursors, is the combustion of fossil fuels;

"(C) the problem of acid deposition is of national and international significance and cannot be addressed adequately without Federal intervention;

"(D) control strategies and technology for precursors to acid deposition exist now that are economically feasible; and

"(E) current and future generations of Americans will be more adversely affected by delayed action, so that efforts to remedy the problem should commence now.

"(b) The purposes of this part are to—

"(1) protect public health and welfare and the environment from any actual or potential adverse effect caused by ambient concentrations or deposition of air pollutants, including the products of atmospheric transformation of pollutants; and

"(2) preserve the rights and responsibilities of States to protect the public health and welfare and the environment of their citizens from air pollution originating in other States.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF REGION

"SEC. 181. There is hereby established a long-range transport corridor, hereafter referred to as the "acid deposition impact region," consisting of the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia.

"RESEARCH AND SPECIAL STUDIES

"SEC. 182. (a) The Administrator shall conduct a study of air pollution problems associated with the long-range transport of pollutants in the portions of the continental United States not included in section 181. Not later than two years after the enactment of this section, the Administrator shall report to the Congress the results of such study.

"(b)(1) The Acid Precipitation Task Force established under title VII of the Energy Security Act (Public Law 96-294) shall submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives, two comprehensive reports, one by December 31, 1985, and one by December 31, 1987, which shall present the findings of the research conducted under section 704(b) of such Act, including recommendations, based upon existing scientific knowledge, for reducing acid deposition and its effects.

"(2) In addition to any other funds authorized to be appropriated for the Acid Precipitation Task Force for the purposes of carrying out the activities required by section 704 of title VII of the Energy Security Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 in each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989.

"(c) The Task Force established by title VII of the Energy Security Act shall also conduct and support research on advanced flue-gas cleaning and precombustion fuel treatment technologies and inherently low-emission combustion processes (including atmospheric and pressurized fluidized bed combustion).

"(d)(1) Not later than six months after enactment of this section there shall be established an Acid Precipitation Scientific Review Board with not more than 15 members who shall be appointed by the National Academy of Sciences.

"(2) The Board shall examine and consider all available information regarding the causes, extent and potential environmental impacts of acid deposition, including a review of all the activities being performed by the Acid Precipitation Task Force under section 704(b) of the Energy Security Act.

"(3) The Board shall submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives at least two comprehensive reports, one not later than June 30, 1986, and one not later than June 30, 1988, on the results of its examination undertaken in accordance with paragraph (2), including a review of the report(s) submitted to the Committees of Congress by the Task Force as required by subsection (b)(1) of this section, together with the Board's own recommendations for reducing acid deposition and its effects.

"(4) There are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1985 through 1988, for the purposes of carrying out the activities required by this subsection.

"(e)(1) Promptly after the date established by section 185, the Administrator shall submit to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives a report describing the emission limitation and other enforceable measures adopted by the States and approved by the Administrator under section 184(b) or in effect under section 185, for all States in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181.

"(2) The Office of Technology Assessment shall analyze the environmental benefits to be gained through the implementation of the control requirements described by the Administrator in accordance with paragraph (1) of this subsection, the costs of implementing such control requirements, and any potential effects on coal production or markets of implementing such control requirements, on both an aggregate regional and a State-by-State basis. The Office of Technology Assessment shall report its findings to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives no later than six months after the submission of the report required in paragraph (1).

"(f) Upon receipt of the reports required by subsections (b)(1), (d), (e)(1), and (e)(2), the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives shall conduct hearings on the matters contained in such reports and take such other action as each such committee deems appropriate.

"(g) The Administrator shall develop an inventory of sources of oxides of nitrogen in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181 and in each State thereof. Not later than four years after enactment of this part the Administrator shall report to the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the United States Senate and the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the United States House of Representatives on (1) the inventory of sources of oxides of nitrogen developed under this subsection, (2) control technology and methods for new and existing sources for oxides of nitrogen, and (3) any recommendations for requirements to reduce existing emissions or control new emissions of oxides of nitrogen to reduce acid deposition.

"(h) The Administrator and the Secretary of the Treasury shall jointly conduct a study of the potential for a system of fees on the generation of electrical energy in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181, to be used to finance the reductions in emissions required by this part, including the equitable distribution of the funds resulting from such fees. A report of such study shall be submittal to the Congress not later than six months after submittal of the report required by subsection (e)(1) of this section.

"(i)(1) The Administrator is authorized to conduct or make grants to any State or interstate agency for the purposes of conducting the development, refinement and practical demonstration of new, improved, or innovative methods of neutralizing or restoring the buffering capacity of acid altered bodies of water that no longer can support game fish species; and methods of removing from bodies of water toxic metals or other toxic substances mobilized by acid deposition, and to include in such grants such amounts as necessary for the purpose of reports, plans and specifications in connection therewith.

"(2) Grants under this subsection shall not be made for any project in an amount exceeding 75 per centum of the costs thereof as determined by the Administrator.

"(3) Grants under this subsection shall not be made for any project that involves bodies of water that did not contain game fish as established by State law prior to 1970.

"(4) For the purposes of this subsection there are hereby authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987.

"ACID PRECURSOR CONTROLS

"SEC. 183. (a) There shall be achieved a reduction in annual emissions of sulfur dioxide in the acid deposition impact region established under section 181 of this Act of ten million tons from the total actual annual level of such emissions between January 1, 1980, and December 31, 1980. Such reduction shall be achieved pursuant to a phased reduction and completed no later than January 1, 1994.

"(b)(1) Emissions of sulfur dioxide from major stationary sources which did not begin operation before January 1, 1981, or which have increased emissions since January 1, 1981 (to the extent of such increase), calculated on an annual basis, shall be added to the amount of sulfur dioxide which the State in which such sources are located is required to reduce not later than January 1, 1994, under 184(a).

"(2)(A) Such emissions shall not be so added in any State which during 1980 had no major stationary source which was a utility boiler which had an actual annual average emission rate greater than 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input.

"(B) Increases in emissions of sulfur dioxide from utility boilers which are coal capable as defined under section 301(a) of the Fuel Use Act and which convert to the use of coal as a primary fuel shall be so added only to the extent such emissions from a particular source exceed 1.5 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input on an annual average.

"(c) Other than as provided in subsection (b)(2)(B), no major stationary source in such region which began operation before January 1, 1981, shall increase its actual rate of emissions of sulfur dioxide over that experienced by such source during calendar year 1980, unless there has been identified for such source a simultaneous net reduction in emissions of sulfur dioxide at one or more points in such region—

"(1) in excess of the emissions which potentially would result from the proposed increase in emission rate, and

"(2) not otherwise required by a State implementation plan under section 110 of this Act or under section 184 or 185 of this part.

This subsection shall not apply to increases in actual rates of emissions of sulfur dioxide from sources in any State in which for each major stationary source of sulfur dioxide which was a utility boiler the emission limitation in effect under an applicable implementation plan at the time of such increases is less than or equal to 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input on an annual average.

"(d) No major stationary source of sulfur dioxide shall commence operation after January 1, 1994, in such region unless there has been identified for such source a simultaneous net reduction in emissions of sulfur dioxide at one or more points in such region—

"(1) in excess of the emissions which potentially would result from the proposed new source, and

"(2) not otherwise required by a State implementation plan under section 110 of this Act or under section 184 or 185 of this part.

This subsection shall not apply to any major stationary source which adopts the best available control technology, as defined in section 169(3) or 171(3) as appropriate for the location of the proposed new source, and which attains at least the most stringent emission limitation shown by an adequate operating history to have been achieved in practice by a major stationary source of the same size, type, and class within the region established under section 181 of this Act.

"(e) No major stationary source of oxides of nitrogen in such region which began operation before January 1, 1981, shall increase its actual rate of emissions of oxides of nitrogen as measured in pounds of oxides of nitrogen per million British thermal units of heat input over the greater of that experienced by such source during calendar year 1980, or during the thirty-day period (excluding days on which such source did not operate) immediately preceding the date of enactment of this subsection, unless there has been identified for such a simultaneous net reduction in emissions of oxides of nitrogen at one or more points in such region—

"(1) in excess of the emissions which potentially would result from the proposed increase in emission rate, and

"(2) not otherwise required by a State implementation plan under section 110 of this Act.

The preceding sentence shall not apply to emissions of oxides of nitrogen from utility boilers which are coal capable as defined under section 301(a) of the Fuel Use Act and which convert to the use of coal as a primary fuel.

"STATE SULFUR DIOXIDE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 184. (a)(1) Each State shall be required to achieve within its borders a reduction in annual sulfur dioxide emissions equal to that fraction of ten million tons which is the ratio of all the actual utility emissions in such State in excess of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input averaged over the period January 1, 1980, to December 31, 1980, to the total in all States in the region of all the actual utility emissions in excess of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input averaged over such period.

"(2) The Governors of any two or more States within the region may by agreement reallot among agreeing States the reductions required under subsectin (a)(1): Provided, That the total reductions equal the total required under subsection (a)(1).

"(b)(1) Not later than twenty-four months after the enactment of this part, each State shall adopt enforceable measures to achieve the reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions required by subsection (a) of this section, including emission limitations and schedules for compliance for sources within such State and other means of emission reduction in accordance with section 186 of this Act. The Governor of such State shall submit such measures to the Administrator for review in accordance with paragraph (2) of this subsection and section 110(a)(3), and to the Governors of all other States in the acid deposition impact region for comment.

"(2) Review and approval of measures submitted under this subsection shall be as provided in section 110(a)(3). The Administrator shall approve such measures submitted under paragraph (1) of this subsection if, taking into consideration the comments of Governors of other States in such region, the Administrator finds that such measures—

"(A) contain enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction,

"(B) contain requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies to assure that the emission limitations are being met, and

"(C) are adequate to achieve the reduction in sulfur dioxide emissions for such State required pursuant to subsection (a) of this section within the time specified in section 183(a) of this Act.

"(3) Not later than thirty-six months after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source subject to an emission limitation established under this subsection shall notify the Governor of the State in which it is located of its intended method of compliance. The Governor shall submit such notifications to the Administrator.

"(4)(A) Not later than sixty months after the enactment of this part, each major stationary source which pursuant to the requirements of this subsection states that it will comply with an emission limitation through the use of fuel substitution shall be in compliance with such emission limitation.

"(B) Not later than sixty months after the date of enactment of this part, each major stationary source which pursuant to this subsection states that it will comply with an emission limitation established under this subsection through the installation of a technological system of continous emission reduction or the replacement of existing facilities with new facilities with substantially lower emissions, or any other means except fuel switching, shall enter into binding contractual commitments to acquire, install, or construct such system or facilities.

"(5) Each emission limitations, schedule for compliance or other measure adopted and approved under this subsection shall be deemed a requirement of the State implementation plan approved or promulgated for such State under section 110 of this Act.

"(6) In the case of any major stationary source in a State listed in section 181, which is not by December 31, 1985, in full compliance with the applicable implementation plan for sulfur dioxide in effect on January 1, 1981, the owner or operator of such source shall be subject to:

"(A) the emission limitation established by section 185 for all facilities in such State owned or operated by such owner or operator, and

"(B) a noncompliance penalty established under sectioin 120 for each such source or facility, including each electric generating facility, for the period from the original date for compliance under the applicable implementation plan until actual compliance with the emission limitation established under this paragraph.

"MAJOR STATIONARY SOURCE SULFUR DIOXIDE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 185. In any State in the acid deposition impact region established by section 181 of the Act which has not in accordance with section 184(b)(1) of this Act adopted measures to achieve the reduction required by section 184(a) of this Act within twenty-four months after enactment of this part, or which has not had such measures approved by the Administrator under section 184(b)(2) of this Act within six months after the submission of such measures, the owner or operator of each fossile-fuel-burning electric generating facility which is a major stationary source which is not subject to section 111(a) shall comply with an emission limitation or limitations for all such facilities owned or operated by the same entity in such region equivalent to an average among such facilities of 1.2 pounds of sulfur dioxide per million British thermal units of heat input on a thirty-day average. The owner or operator of each such facility shall submit to the Administrator a plan and schedule of compliance for achieving such emission limitation or equivalent emission reduction in accordance with section 186 of this Act, not later than three years after the enactment of this part or six months after the date on which such owner or operator becomes subject to such emission limitation, whichever is later. The Administrator shall approve such plan and schedule for compliance if it—

"(A) contains enforceable requirements for continuous emission reduction;

"(B) contains requirements for monitoring by the source and enforcement agencies to assure that the emission limitations are being met; and

"(C)(i) in the case of a source that proposes to comply with the emission limitation through use of fuel substitution, will achieve the emission reduction required by this section no later than twenty-four months after such plan is submitted, or

"(ii) in the case of a source that proposes to comply with the emission limitation through installation of a technological system of continuous emission reduction or replacement of existing facilities with new facilities with substantially lower emissions, or any other means except fuel switching, contains enforceable requirements that such source, within twenty-four months after such plan is submitted, enter into binding contactual commitments to acquire, install or construct such system or facilities.

Failure of such owner or operator to submit such approvable plan and schedule within the time provided in this section, failure to comply with the plan and schedule of compliance, and failure to achieve the emission reduction required by the dates required by this section, shall be violations of emission limitations for the purposes of sections 113, 120, and 304 of this Act.

"ENFORCEABLE EMISSION REDUCTION PROGRAMS

"SEC. 186. (a) For the purposes of maintaining the limitation on emissions required by section 183(c) of this Act or attaining emission reductions required by section 183(a), 184, or 185 of this Act, the following methods or programs for net emission reduction may be used, in addition to enforceable continuous emission reduction measures, by a State or the owner or operator of a source, if emission limitations under such methods or programs are enforceable by the Federal Government, States other than those in which the emissions occur, and citizens under section 304 of this Act:

"(1) least emissions dispatch to meet electric generating demand at existing generating capacity;

"(2) retirement of major stationary sources at an earlier date than provided in schedules on file with the Federal Regulatory Commission, the Internal Revenue Service, or State utility regulatory agencies;

"(3) investments in energy conservation where reductions in emissions can be identified with such investments;

"(4) trading of emission reduction requirements and actual reductions on a State or regional basis, for which States and the Administrator are authorized to establish emission reduction banks or brokerage institutions to facilitate such trading; and

"(5) precombustion cleaning of fuels.".

INTERSTATE POLLUTION

SEC. 2. (a) Section 110(a)(2)(E) of the Clean Air Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or sources" after "source";

(2) by striking "prevent" and inserting in lieu thereof "interfere with"; and

(3) by inserting after "visibility," the following: "or (III) contribute to atmospheric loadings of pollutants or their transformation products which may reasonably be anticipated to cause or contribute to an adverse effect on public health or welfare or the environment in any other State or foreign country,".

(b) Section 123 of the Clean Air Act is amended as follows:

(1) in the second sentence of subsection (c), by striking "immediate vicinity" and inserting in lieu thereof "impact area";

(2) in the fourth sentence of subsection (c), by striking all that language preceding "prohibit" and inserting in lieu thereof "The Administrator may";

(3) adding a new subsection (d) as follows:

"(d) The Administrator shall within one year of enactment of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1984 complete a review of the emission limits for all existing major sources which have come into existence since 1970 or which have raised the stack height since 1970, in order to determine whether emission limits for such sources are inappropriately based upon modeling credit for stack height above good engineering practice. If emission limits are determined to be inappropriately based, the Administrator shall require the State, within six months, to correct the emission limit to conform with requirements of this section. It shall be the burden of the operator of each such source to demonstrate the correct stack height credit to be used in determining proper emission limits.".

(c) Section 126 of the Clean Air Act is amended as follows:

(1) by adding a new subsection as follows:

"(d) Emission of an air pollutant which, by itself or in combination, reaction, or transformation, adversely affects the public health or welfare of another State, is in violation of this section.".

(2) in subparagraph (B) of subsection (a)(1), by striking "in excess of the national ambient air quality standards";

(3) in subsection (b)—

(A) in the first sentence, following "major source", by inserting "or group of sources";

(B) by striking "110(a)(2)(E)(i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "110(a)(2)(E) or this section";

(4) in subsection (c)—

(A) in the first sentence, following the words "violation of", inserting "this section and";

(B) striking "110(a)(2)(E)(i)" wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "110(a)(2)(E) or this section";

(C) in paragraph (2) insert before the period the phrase, "or to continue operation in violation of subsection (d) more than two years after the date of such finding without the installation of reasonably available control technology".

(d) Section 302(h) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting "precipitation," following "Effects on" the second time it appears and by inserting before the period a comma and "whether caused by transformation, conversion, or combination with other air pollutants."

(e) Section 304(a)(1) of the Clean Air Act is amended by inserting—

(i) inserting a comma after "Act";

(ii) striking "or"; and

(iii) inserting at the end thereof the following: "or (C) section 126,".

S. 53

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985".

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 101. (a) Section 104(u)(1) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting immediately following "1982" the phrase ", and not to exceed $22,770,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, and September 30, 1989".

(b) Section 104(u)(2) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting immediately following "1982" the phrase ", and not to exceed $3,000,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, and September 30, 1989".

(c) Section 104(u)(3) of the Clean Water Act is amended by stiking "and" after "1981," and by inserting immediately following "1982" the phrase ", and not to exceed $1,500,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, and September 30, 1989".

(d) Section 106(a)(2) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "and" after "1981" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and by inserting ", 1986, 1987, 1988, and 1989" immediately following "1982".

(e) Section 112(c) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "and" after "1981," and inserting immediately following "1982" the phrase ", and $7,000,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, and September 30, 1989".

(f) Section 314(c)(2) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "and" after "1981," and inserting immediately following "1982" the phrase ", and $30,000,000 per fiscal year for fiscal years 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989".

(g) Section 517 of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "and" after "1981," and inserting immediately following "1982" the phrase ", and $160,000,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, and September 30, 1989".

CHESAPEAKE AND NARRAGANSETT BAYS

SEC. 102. Title I of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"CHESAPEAKE AND NARRAGANSETT BAYS

"SEC. 117. (a) The Administration shall continue the Chesapeake Bay program and shall establish and maintain in the Environmental Protection Agency an Office, Division, or Branch of Chesapeake Bay Programs to–

"(1) collect and make available, through publications and other appropriate means, the results of and other information pertaining to research and other activities that address the environmental quality of the Chesapeake Bay (herein after 'the Bay');

"(2) coordinate all Federal research projects pertaining to the Bay;

"(3) conduct research to determine the impact of sediment deposition in the Bay and to identify the sources, rates routes, and distribution patterns of such sediment deposition; and

"(4) conduct research on the impact of natural and man-induced environmental changes on the living resources of the Bay and the relationships between such changes. Particular emphasis shall be placed on researching the impact of pollutant loadings of nutrients, chlorine, acid precipitation, dissolved oxygen, and toxic pollutants, including organic chemicals and heavy metals. Special attention shall be given to the impact of such changes on the striped bass.

"(b)(1) The Administrator shall, at the request of the Governor of a State affected by the interstate management plan developed pursuant to the Chesapeake Bay program (hereinafter 'the plan'), make a grant for the purpose of implementing the management mechanisms contained in the plan if such State has, within one year after the date of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, approved and committed to implement all or substantially all aspects of the plan. Payments for such purposes may be made to the States as hereinafter provided, subject to such terms and conditions as the Administrator considers appropriate.

"(2) A State or combination of States may elect to avail itself of the benefits of this subsection by submitting to the Administrator a comprehensive proposal to implement management mechanisms contained in the plan which shall include (A) a description of proposed abatement actions which the State commits to take within a specified time period to reduce pollution in the Bay and to meet applicable water quality standards, and (B) the estimated cost of the abatement actions proposed to be taken during the next fiscal year. If the Administrator finds that such proposal is consistent with the national policies set forth in section 101(a) of this Act and will contribute to the achievement of the national goals set forth in section 101(a) of this Act he shall approve such proposal and shall finance the costs of implementing segments of such proposal; except that Federal grants under this subsection shall not exceed 55 per centum of the costs of implementing the plan in any fiscal year and shall be made on condition that non-Federal sources provide the remainder of the cost of implementing the plan during such fiscal year.

"(3) Administrative costs in the form of salaries, overhead or indirect costs for services provided and charged against programs or projects supported by funds made available under this subsection shall not exceed in any one fiscal year 10 per centum of the annual Federal grant made to a State under this subsection.

"(c) Any State or combination of States that receives a grant under subsection (b) shall, within 18 months after the date of receipt of a Federal grant under subsection (b) and biennially thereafter, report in conjunction with EPA to the Congress on progress made in implementing the interstate management plan developed pursuant to the Chesapeake Bay program.

"(d)(1) The Administrator shall, at the request of the Governor of an affected State, after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies and other interested persons, make a grant for purposes of assessing the principal factors having an adverse effect on the environmental quality of the Narragansett Bay, as perceived by both scientists and users, in conjunction with developing and implementing a management program to improve such Bay's water quality. Payments for such purposes may be made to the States as hereinafter provided, subject to such terms and conditions as the Administrator considers appropriate.

"(2) A State may elect to avail itself of the benefits of this subsection by submitting to the Administrator a full and complete description of the program it proposes to establish and administer under State law. The Administrator shall approve each such submitted program, within 3 months of receipt of such program, if the applicant demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Administrator that the applicant will—

"(A) establish a committee of representatives from various units of Federal, State, and local governments, research and educational institutions, and concerned groups and individuals on the Narragansett Bay, to provide advice on the design and implementation of a management program and to coordinate communication on issues affecting the Narragansett Bay's water quality;

"(B) coordinate, subsequent to a review of presently ongoing research, research and abatement programs that will most efficiently address those principal factors having an adverse effect on the Narragansett Bay's water quality; and

"(C) undertake, subsequent to an analysis of all environmental sampling data being collected on the Narragansett Bay, methods for improving such data collection, particularly with respect to toxic pollutants; establish a continuing capacity for collecting, storing, analyzing and disseminating such data; institute a sampling program where deficiencies are found to exist in present sampling programs; and develop and, as soon as practicable but within three years after enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, implement management practices and measures (including land use requirements) to reduce to the greatest extent feasible pollutant loadings in such Bay and to improve such Bay's water quality.

"(3) If the Administrator approves a program submitted under paragraph (2) of this subsection, he shall finance the costs of implementing segments of such program, except that Federal grants under this subsection shall not exceed 55 per centum of the costs of implementing the program in any fiscal year and shall be made on condition that non-Federal sources provide the remainder of the cost of implementing the plan during such fiscal year.

"(4) Any State that avails itself of the benefits of this subsection shall, not later than two years after issuance of a Federal grant under this subsection and annually thereafter, report to the Administrator on progress made in implementing a management program to improve the water quality of Narragansett Bay.

"(e) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated the following sums, to remain available until expended, to carry out the purposes of this section:

"(1) $3,000,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988, to carry out subsection (a);

"(2) $10,000,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988, to carry out subsection (b); and

"(3) $1,500,000 per fiscal year for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988, to carry out subsection (d).".

SMALL FLOWS CLEARINGHOUSE

SEC. 103. Section 104(q) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(4) Notwithstanding section 205(d) of this Act, from funds that are set aside by States under section 205(i) of this Act and not obligated by the end of the twenty-four month period provided under section 205(d), the Administrator shall award a grant under this section in the amount of $1,000,000 or such unobligated amount, whichever is less, in each year, to support a National Clearinghouse to collect and disseminate information on small flows and innovative or alternative technologies, consistent with paragraph (3).".

COMPLIANCE DATES

SEC. 104. (a) Section 301(b)(2)(C) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "not later than July 1, 1984," and inserting immediately after "of this paragraph" the following "as expeditiously as practicable but in no case later than three years after the date such limitations are promulgated under section 304(b), or three years after July 1, 1983, whichever is later, but in no case later than July 1, 1987".

(b) Section 301(b)(2)(E) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "not later than July 1, 1984," and inserting in lieu thereof "as expeditiously as practicable but in no case later than five years after the date such limitations are promulgated under section 304(b), or three years after July 1, 1983, whichever is later, but in no case later than July 1, 1987, compliance with".

(c) Section 301(b)(2)(F) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "as expeditiously as practicable but in no case" and striking "not" after "subparagraph (A) of this paragraph" and by striking "July 1, 1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "three years after July 1, 1983".

(d) Section 301(b) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(3)(A) for effluent limitations under paragraph (1)(A)(i) of this subsection promulgated after January 1, 1982, and requiring a level of control substantially greater or based on fundamentally different control technology than under permits for such industrial category issued before such date, compliance as expeditiously as practicable but in no case later than three years after the date such limitations are promulgated under section 304(b), or three years after July 1, 1983, whichever is later, but in no case later than July 1, 1987; and

"(B) for any effluent limitation in accordance with paragraph (1)(A)(i), (2)(A)(i), or (2)(E) of this subsection established only on the basis of section 402(a)(1) in a permit issued after enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, compliance as expeditiously as practicable but in no case later than three years after the date such limitations are established, and in no case later than July 1, 1987.".

OCEAN WAIVER

SEC. 105. (a) Section 301(h)(5) of the Clean Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(5) sources introducing waste into such treatment works are in compliance with all applicable pretreatment requirements and the applicant has assured continued compliance with such requirements and, in the case of any treatment works serving a population of five thousand or more, the applicant has adopted and is enforcing a program to control the entrance of toxic pollutants from industrial sources into such treatment works, comparable to that required by section 402(b)(8);".

(b) Section 301(h) of the Clean Water Act is amended by—

(1) in paragraph (7), striking the period immediately after "the permit" and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon.

(2) adding immediately after paragraph (7) the following new paragraph:

(8) the applicant at the time such modification becomes effective will be discharging effluent which has received at least primary or equivalent treatment. For the purposes of this paragraph, "primary or equivalent treatment" means treatment by screening, sedimentation, and skimming adequate to remove at least 30 percent of the biological oxygen demanding material and of the suspended solids in the treatment works influent, and disinfection, where appropriate.";

(3) in that portion of subsection (h) following new paragraph (8) as added by this Act,

(A) adding immediately after the first sentence thereof the following new sentence: "Such marine water must exhibit characteristics assuring that water providing dilution does not contain significant amounts of previously discharged effluent from such treatment works."; and

(B) adding at the end thereof the following: "No permit issued under this subsection shall authorize the discharge of any pollutant into saline estuarine waters which at the time of application do not support a balanced indigenous population of shellfish, fish and wildlife, or allow recreation in and on the waters or which exhibit ambient water quality below applicable water quality standards adopted for the protection of public water supplies, shellfish, fish and wildlife or recreational activities or such other standards necessary to assure support and protection of such uses. The prohibition contained in the preceding sentence shall apply without regard to the presence or absence of a causal relationship between such characteristics and the applicant's current or proposed discharge.".

(c) Section 301(j)(1)(A) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon the following: ", except that a publicly owned treatment works which prior to December 31, 1982, had a contractural arrangement to use a portion of the capacity of an ocean outfall operated by another publicly owned treatment works which has applied for or received a modification under subsection (h) of this section, may apply for a modification of subsection (h) in its own right not later than thirty days after the enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985".

WATER QUALITY-BASED EFFLUENT LIMITATIONS AFTER BAT ATTAINMENT

SEC. 106. (a) Section 305 of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c) Each State shall prepare and submit to the Administrator and the Congress within two years after the enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, and revise biennially thereafter, an identification of—

"(1) those waters within or adjacent to such State which after the application of effluent limitations required under section 301(b)(2) of this Act cannot reasonably be anticipated to attain or maintain (A) water quality standards for such waters reviewed, revised or adopted in accordance with section 303(c)(2)(B) of this Act, due to toxic pollutants, or (B) that water quality which shall assure protection of public health, public water supplies, agricultural and industrial uses, and the protection and propagation of a balanced population of shellfish, fish and wildlife, and allow recreational activities in and on the water; and

"(2) those waters within or adjacent to such State which are public water supplies or otherwise important to public health protection, or which have a high quality use designation, and which because of such use and current or potential pollution are of high priority to such State.

In the case of any State which fails to submit the identification required by paragraph (1), or which submits an incomplete identification, the Administrator shall promptly prepare an identification in accordance with paragraph (1).".

(b) Section 304(a) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new paragraphs:

"(7) The Administrator, after consultation with appropriate State agencies and on the basis of criteria and information published under paragraphs (1) and (2) of this subsection, shall develop and publish, within nine months after the date of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, guidance to the States on performing the identification required by section 305(c)(1) of this Act.

"(8) The Administrator, after consultation with appropriate State agencies and within two years after the date of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, shall develop and publish information on methods for establishing and measuring water quality criteria for toxic pollutants on other bases than pollutant-by-pollutant criteria, including biological monitoring and assessment methods.".

(c) Section 303(c)(2) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "(A)" after "(2)" and by adding the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Whenever a State reviews water quality standards pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, or revises or adopts new standards pursuant to this paragraph, such State shall adopt criteria for all toxic pollutants listed pursuant to section 307(a)(1) of this Act, the discharge or presence of which in the affected waters could reasonably be expected to interfere with those designated uses adopted by the State, as necessary to support such designated uses. Such criteria shall be specific numerical criteria for such toxic pollutants and in addition may include criteria based on biological monitoring or assessment methods consistent with information published pursuant to section 304(a)(8). Particular attention shall be given to toxic pollutants which are highly persistent in the environment, bioaccumulative, or known or suspected carcinogens, mutagens, or teratogens. Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or delay the use of effluent limitations or other permit conditions based on or involving biological monitoring or assessment methods.".

(d) Section 303(d) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(4) Not later than two years after the submittal of the identification required by section 305(c)(1) of this Act, each State shall establish effluent limitations for point sources discharging into each portion of the navigable waters identified under section 305(c)(1)(A) as necessary to attain applicable water quality standards, taking into account any substantial nonpoint source contributions of toxic pollutants and existing or planned controls on all sources. Such effluent limitations shall be incorporated into permits under section 402 of this Act, which shall provide for compliance as expeditiously as practicable, but in no event later than three years after the establishment of such effluent limitation.".

(e)(1) Section 302(a) of the Clean Water Act is amended by (1) inserting after "in the judgment of the Administrator" the phrase ", or as identified under section 305(c)"; and (2) inserting after "protection of" the phrase "public health,".

(2) Section 302(b) of the Clean Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Prior to establishment of any effluent limitation pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the Administrator shall publish such proposed limitation and within ninety days of such publication hold a public hearing.

"(2)(A) The Administrator, with the concurrence of the State, may issue a permit which modifies the effluent limitations required by subsection (a) of this section for pollutants other than toxic pollutants, if the applicant demonstrates at such hearing that (whether or not technology or other alternative control strategies are available) there is no reasonable relationship between the economic and social costs and the benefits to be obtained (including attainment of the objective of this Act) from achieving such limitation.

"(B) The Administrator, with the concurrence of the State, may issue a permit which modifies the effluent limitations required by subsection (a) of this section for toxic pollutants for a single period not to exceed five years, if the applicant demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such modified requirements (1) will represent the maximum degree of control within the economic capability of the owner and operator of the source, and (2) will result in reasonable further progress beyond the requirements of section 301(b)(2) toward the requirements of subsection (a) of this section.".

(f) Section 304 of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(l) Not later than three years after the date of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall publish regulations providing guidelines for effluent limitations under subsection (b)(2) of this section and section 306 for categories of sources discharging significant amounts of toxic pollutants referred to in section 301(b)(2)(C), for which guidelines have not previously been published.".

INDIRECT DISCHARGE OF CONVENTIONAL POLLUTANTS

SEC. 107. Section 402 of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m) In issuing a permit under this section, the Administrator shall not require pretreatment by dischargers of conventional pollutants identified pursuant to section 304(b)(4) of this Act as a substitute for municipal treatment adequate to meet the requirements of a permit issued under this section for a treatment works (as defined in section 212 of this Act) which is publicly owned if such discharger is in compliance with all applicable requirements of local pretreatment programs approved under subsection (b)(8) of this section. Nothing in this subsection shall affect the Administrator's authority under sections 307 and 309 of this Act, affect State and local authority under sections 307(b)(4) and 510 of this Act, relieve such treatment works of its obligations to meet requirements established under this Act, or preclude such works from pursuing whatever feasible options are available to meet its responsibility to comply with its permit under this section.".

CIVIL AND CRIMINAL PENALTIES

SEC. 108. (a) Section 309(d) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking '$10,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$25,000".

(b) No State shall be required to modify a permit program approved or submitted under section 402 of the Clean Water Act as a result of the amendment made by subsection (a) of this section before July 1, 1986.

(c) Section 309 of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding a new subsection (g) as follows:

"(g)(1) In addition to any other relief provided, whenever on the basis of any information available to him the Administrator finds that any person is in violation of section 301, 302, 303, 306, 307, 308, 318, or 504 of this Act, or is in violation of any permit condition or limitation implementing any of such sections in a permit issued under section 402 of this Act by him or by a State, or in a permit issued under section 404 of this Act by a State, he may after notifying the State in which the violation occurs assess a civil penalty of not more than $10,000 per day of violation, not to exceed $75,000 in total.

"(2) No civil penalty may be assessed under this subsection unless the person accused of the violation is given notice and opportunity for a hearing with respect to the violation. Such hearing shall not be subject to the requirements of section 554 or 556 of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) In determining the amount of penalty assessed pursuant to this subsection, the Administrator shall take into account the nature, circumstances, extent and gravity of the violation or violations, and, with respect to the violator, ability to pay, any prior history of such violations, the degree of culpability, economic benefit or savings (if any) resulting from the violation, and such other matters as justice may require.

"(4) Any person against whom a civil penalty is assessed under this subsection may obtain review thereof in the appropriate district court of the United States by filing a notice of appeal in such court within thirty days from the date of such order and by simultaneously sending a copy of such notice by certified mail to the Administrator. The Administrator shall promptly file in such court a certified copy of the record upon which such violation was found or such penalty imposed. If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order or after the appropriate court has entered final judgment in favor of the Administrator, the Administrator may request the Attorney General of the United States to institute a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States to collect the penalty, and such court shall have jurisdiction to hear and decide any such action. In hearing such action, the court shall have authority to review the violation and the assessment of the civil penalty de novo.

"(5) The Administrator may issue subpenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of relevant papers, books, or documents in connection with hearings under this subsection. In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued pursuant to this paragraph and served upon any person, the district court of the United States for any district in which such person is found, resides, or transacts business, upon application by the United States and after notice to such person, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony before the administrative law judge or to appear and produce documents before the administrative law judge, or both, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(6) Action taken by the Administrator pursuant to this subsection shall not affect or limit the Administrator's authority to enforce any provision of this Act: Provided, however, That the discharge of pollutants which is penalized administratively under this subsection shall not be the subject of a civil penalty under section 309(d) or section 311(b) of this Act in a civil action commenced by the Administrator.".

(d) Section 309(c) of the Clean Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(c)(1) Any person who (A) negligently violates section 301, 302, 303, 306, 307, 308, 318, or 405 of this Act, or any permit condition or limitation implementing any of such sections in a permit issued under section 402 of this Act by the Administrator or by a State, or any requirement imposed in a pretreatment program approved under section 402(b)(8) of this Act or in a permit issued under section 404 of this Act by the Secretary of the Army or by a State, or who (B) negligently introduces into a sewer system or into a publicly owned treatment works any pollutant or hazardous substance which causes or may reasonably be anticipated to cause personal injury or property damage, or causes such treatment works to violate any effluent limitation or condition in any permit issued to the treatment works under section 402 of this Act by the Administrator or a State, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $2,500 nor more than $25,000 per day of violation, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both.

"(2) Any person who (A) knowingly violates section 301, 302, 303, 306, 307, 308, 318, or 405 of this Act, or any permit condition or limitation implementing any of such sections in a permit issued under section 402 of this Act by the Administrator or by a State, or any requirement imposed in a pretreatment program approved under section 402(b)(8) of this Act or in a permit issued under section 404 of this Act by the Secretary of the Army or by a State, or who (B) knowingly introduces into a sew system or into a publicly owned treatment works any pollutant or hazardous substance which causes or may reasonably be anticipated to cause personal injury or property damage, or causes such treatment works to violate any effluent limitation or condition in any permit issued to the treatment works under section 402 of this Act by the Administrator or a State, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5,000 nor more than $50,000 per day of violation, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both.

"(3) Any person who knowingly makes any false material statement, representation, or certification in any application, record, report, plan, or other document filed or required to be maintained under this Act or who knowingly falsifies, tampers with, or renders inaccurate any monitoring device or method required to be maintained under this Act, shall upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both.

"(4) If a conviction is for a violation of paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of this subsection committed after a first conviction of such person under the same paragraph, the maximum punishment under the respective paragraph shall be doubled with respect to both fine and imprisonment.

"(5) For the purpose of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), the term 'person' shall mean, in addition to the definition contained in section 502(5) of this act, any responsible corporate officer.

"(6) For the purpose of paragraphs (1) and (2), the term 'hazardous substance' shall mean (A) any substance designated pursuant to section 311(b)(2)(A) of this Act, (B) any element, compound, mixture, solution, or substance designated pursuant to section 102 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, (C) any hazardous waste having the characteristics identified under or listed pursuant to section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (but not including any waste the regulation of which under the Solid Waste Disposal Act has been suspended by Act of Congress), (D) any toxic pollutant listed under section 307(a) of this Act, and (E) any imminently hazardous chemical substance or mixture with respect to which the Administrator has taken action pursuant to section 7 of the Toxic Substances Control Act.".

PARTIAL NPDES PROGRAM APPROVAL

SEC. 109. (a) Section 402(b) of the Clean Water Act is amended by—

(1) inserting ", or part of a permit program in accordance with paragraph (10) of this subsection," immediately after "its own permit program" in the first full sentence; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(10) In the event a Governor submits a plan to administer part of a permit program, the Administrator may approve such plan upon a showing that—

"(A)(i) the plan provides for administration of permit program components which represent a significant and identifiable part of the State program authorized by this section; and

"(ii) the plan provides for and the State agrees to make all reasonable efforts to assume administration of the remainder of the program by a specified future date not to exceed five years from submission of the State's initial plan; or

"(B)(i) the plan provides for administration of a permit program for one or more discharge categories such as Federal facilities, municipal or industrial categories, or any other category of dischargers which represent a significant and identifiable part of the permit program in the State; and

"(ii) the plan covers all categories of discharges under the jurisdiction of the State agency or department responsible for administering the plan and represents a complete permit program for all categories of discharges contained in the plan. For purposes of the preceding sentence, 'a complete permit program,' means one for which adequate authority exists to carry out each of the activities listed in paragraphs (1) through (9) of this subsection.".

(b) Section 402(c)(1) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "as to those navigable waters" and inserting in lieu thereof "as to those activities and discharges".

(c) Section 402(c) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding a new paragraph (4) as follows:

"(4) In the event a determination is made (A) by a State to return administration of the program to the Administrator or (B) by the Administrator to withdraw approval pursuant to paragraph (3) of this subsection, return of administration or withdrawal of approval may only be made of the entire program currently being administered by the State.".

NPDES PERMIT TERM AND REOPENER

SEC. 110. (a) Section 402(b)(1)(B) of the Clean Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(B) are for fixed terms not exceeding ten years, unless a permit includes a waiver or modification of any otherwise applicable requirement under sections 301(c), (g), (h), or (m) of this Act, in which case such permit shall be for a fixed term not exceeding five years;".

(b) Section 402(b)(1)(D) of the Clean Water Act is redesignated as section 402(b)(1)(E), and a new section 402(b)(1)(D) is inserted after section 402(b)(1)(C) to read as follows:

"(D) shall be promptly modified whenever new or revised requirements under sections 301, 302, 303, 304, 307, 403, or 405 are established which are more stringent than any requirement in the permit or which control pollutants not limited in the permit and such modification implements these new or revised requirements;".

JUDICIAL REVIEW AND AWARD OF FEES

SEC. 111. (a) Section 509(b)(1) of the Clean Water Act is amended by (1) striking the phrase "transacts such business" and inserting in lieu thereof, "transacts business which is directly affected by such action"; and (2) striking "ninety" and "ninetieth" and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred and twenty" and "one hundred and twentieth", respectively.

(b) Section 509(b) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(3)(A) If applications for review of the same agency action have been filed under paragraph (1) of this subsection in two or more Circuit Courts of Appeals of the United States and the Administrator has received written notice of the filing of one or more applications within thirty days or less after receiving written notice of the filing of the first application, then the Administrator shall promptly advise in writing the Administrative Office of the United States Courts that applications have been filed in two or more Circuit Courts of Appeals of the United States, and shall identify each court for which he has written notice that such applications have been filed within thirty days or less of receiving written notice of the filing of the first such application. Pursuant to a system of random selection devised for this purpose, the Administrative Office thereupon shall, within three business days of receiving such written notice from the Administrator, select the court in which the record shall be filed from among those identified by the Administrator. Upon notification of such selection, the Administrator shall promptly file the record in such court. For the purpose of review of agency action which has previously been remanded to the Administrator, the record shall be filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States which remanded such action.

"(B) Where applications have been filed under paragraph (1) of this subsection in two or more Circuit Courts of Appeals of the United States with respect to the same agency action and the record has been filed in one of such courts pursuant to paragraph (3)(A), the other courts in which such applications have been filed shall promptly transfer such applications to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States in which the record has been filed. Pending selection of a court pursuant to paragraph (3)(A), any court in which an application has been filed under paragraph (1) of this subsection may postpone the effective date of the agency action until fifteen days after the Administrative Office has selected the court in which the record shall be filed.

"(C) Any court in which an application with respect to any agency action has been filed under paragraph (1) of this subsection, including any court selected pursuant to paragraph (3)(A), may transfer such application to any other Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States for the convenience of the parties or otherwise in the interest of justice.

"(4) In any judicial proceeding under this subsection, the court may award costs of litigation (including reasonable attorney and expert witness fees) to any prevailing or substantially prevailing party whenever it determines that such award is appropriate.".

(c) Section 505(d) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "prevailing or substantially prevailing" before "party" in the first sentence thereof.

NONPOINT SOURCE POLLUTION

SEC. 112. (a) Title III of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"NONPOINT SOURCE POLLUTION MANAGEMENT PROGRAM

"Sec. 319 (a)(1) Each State, by itself or in combination with adjacent States, shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, submit to the Administrator, within eighteen months after the date of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, a proposed nonpoint source pollution management program which shall—

"(A) identify those waters within its boundaries which without additional action to control nonpoint sources of pollution cannot reasonably be expected to attain or maintain (i) applicable water quality standards, or (ii) the goals and requirements of the Act;

"(B) designate categories or subcategories of nonpoint sources of pollutants or, where appropriate, particular nonpoint sources, that contribute significant pollution loadings to the waters identified under subparagraph (A);

"(C) identify best management practices which will be undertaken to reduce pollutant loadings resulting from each category, subcategory or particular nonpoint source designated under subparagraph (B);

"(D) identify programs (including, as appropriate, nonregulatory or regulatory programs for enforcement, technical assistance, financial assistance, education, training, technology transfer, and demonstration projects) to achieve implementation of the best management practices by the categories, subcategories and particular nonpoint sources designated under subparagraph (B);

"(E) include a schedule containing annual milestones for (i) utilization of the program implementation methods identified in subparagraph (D), and (ii) implementation of the best management practices identified in subparagraph (C) by the categories, subcategories, or particular nonprofit sources designated under subparagraph (B). Such schedule shall provide for utilization of the program implementation methods and implementation of best management practices at the earliest practicable date;

"(F)(i) include a statement from the attorney general of such State or States (for the attorney for those State water pollution control agencies which have independent legal counsel) that the laws of such State or States, as the case may be, provide adequate authority to carry out the described program, or what additional authorities would be necessary to do so, and (ii) if this statement identifies additional needed authorities, include a schedule and commitment by the State to seek such authorities as expeditiously as practicable; and

"(G) include an identification of Federal financial assistance programs and Federal development projects for which the State will review individual assistance applications or development projects for their effect on water quality pursuant to the procedures set forth in Executive Order 12372 as in effect on September 17, 1983, to determine whether such assistance applications or development projects would be consistent with and further the purposes and objectives of the program prepared under this subsection. For the purposes of this paragraph, identification shall not be limited to the assistance programs or development projects subject to the Executive Order 12372 but may include any programs listed in the most recent Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance which may have an effect on the purposes and objectives of the State's nonpoint source pollution management program.

"(2) In developing the nonpoint source management program required by this section, the State (A) may rely upon information developed pursuant to sections 208, 303(e), 304(f), and 305(b), and other information as appropriate, and (B) may utilize appropriate elements of the waste treatment management plans developed pursuant to section 208(b), to the extent such elements are consistent with and fulfill the requirements of this section.

"(3) In developing and implementing the management program described in this subsection, a State may make use of local agencies or organizations.

"(b)(1) Within six months of the date of receipt of a proposed nonpoint source management program, the Administrator shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, make a determination whether the State's proposed management program meets the requirements of subsection (a)(1) of this section.

"(2) If the Administrator determines that the proposed management program does not meet the requirements of subsection (a)(1) of this section, he shall within six months of receipt of the proposed program notify the State of any revisions or modifications necessary to obtain approval. The State shall thereupon have an additional three months to submit its revised management program and the Administrator shall approve or disapprove such revised program within three months of receipt.

"(3) Pursuant to paragraph (1) or (2) of this section, the Administrator shall approve those State management programs that he determines meet the requirements of subsection (a)(1) of this section.

"(4) If the Administrator fails to approve the State management program pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection or fails to notify the State of necessary revisions pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection within six months of receipt of the State program, or if he fails to approve or disapprove the program pursuant to paragraph (2) of this section within three months of receipt of the revised program, the program shall be deemed to have been approved by the Administrator.

"(c) If a State fails to submit a nonpoint source pollution management program that the Administrator determines meets the requirements of subsection (a)(1) of this section, the Administrator shall notify such State, and within thirty months after the date of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, after consultation with appropriate Federal and State agencies and other interested persons, carry out the requirements of subsections (a)(1)(A) and (B) of this section for such State. Upon completion of this requirement, the Administrator shall report to Congress on his actions pursuant to this section.

"(d)(1) The Administrator shall award grants, subject to such terms and conditions as the Administrator considers appropriate, to assist States in the implementation of management programs which have been approved pursuant to subsection (b) of this section. Such grants shall not exceed 75 per centum of the costs of implementing the program in any fiscal year and shall be made on condition that non-Federal sources provide at least 25 per centum of the costs that receive funding under this subsection.

"(2)(A) Two-thirds of the funds appropriated in any fiscal year for grants under this section shall be made available for allotment to the several States in accordance with the following table:

"(B) One-third of the funds appropriated in any fiscal year for grants under this section shall be made available to the Administrator who shall make grants in response to applications from States if the Administrator determines such grants are necessary and appropriate to assist such States in—

"(i) controlling particularly difficult or serious nonpoint source pollution problems, including, but not limited to, problems resulting from mining activities;

"(ii) implementing innovative methods or practices for controlling nonpoint sources of pollution, including both regulatory of nonregulatory programs where the Administrator deems appropriate;

"(iii) controlling interstate nonpoint source pollution problems; or,

"(iv) providing financial assistance for implementation by an Indian tribe, within the reservation, of an approved management program: Provided, That any such Indian tribe shall be subject to all terms and conditions of this section applying to a State. Financial assistance to any one reservation under this clause shall not exceed one-third of 1 per centum of the total amount appropriated for grants for each year.

"(3) The funds allotted to the States pursuant to paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection for a fiscal year shall remain available for obligation for the fiscal year for which appropriated. The amount of any such allotments not obligated by the end of such fiscal year and any unobligated funds remaining under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection shall be reallotted by the Administrator for the next fiscal year on the basis of the table in paragraph (2)(A).

"(4) States may use funds from grants made pursuant to this section for financial assistance to persons only to the extent that such assistance is related to the costs of demonstration projects.

"(5) No grant shall be made to a State under this section unless the Administrator determines, on the basis of information provided by the State and from other relevant sources, that the State is implementing the program satisfactorily in terms of the requirements and objectives of this section.

"(6) The Administrator may request such information, data, and reports as he may deem necessary to make the determination of continuing eligibility for grants under this section.

"(7) For the purpose of this section, there are authorized to be appropriated, to remain available until expended, $70,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $130,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.

"(e) Each State shall report to the Administrator on an annual basis concerning (1) its progress in meeting the schedule of milestones submitted pursuant to subsection (a)(1)(E) of this section, and (2) to the extent that appropriate information is available, reductions in nonpoint source pollutant loading and improvements in water quality resulting from implementation of the management program.

"(f) The Administrator shall—

"(1) transmit to the Office of Management and Budget and the appropriate Federal departments and agencies a list of those assistance programs and development projects identified by each State under subsection (a)(1)(G) for which individual assistance applications and projects will be reviewed pursuant to the procedures set forth in Executive Order 12372 as in effect on September 17, 1983. Beginning not later than sixty days after receiving notification by the Administrator, each Federal department and agency shall modify existing regulations to allow States to review individual development projects and assistance applications under the identified Federal assistance programs and shall accommodate, according to the requirements and definitions of Executive Order 12372, as in effect on September 17, 1983, the concerns of the State regarding the consistency of such applications or projects with the State nonpoint source pollution management program;

"(2) collect and make available, through publications and other appropriate means, information pertaining to management practices and implementation methods, including, but not limited to, (A) information concerning the costs and relative efficiencies of best management practices for reducing nonpoint source pollution; and (B) available data concerning the relationship between water quality and implementation of various management practices to control nonpoint sources of pollution; and

"(3) submit to the Congress, within thirty six months of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, a report which on the basis of information submitted by the States pursuant to subsections (a) and (e) of this section, and other information as appropriate:

"(A) describes the management programs being implemented by the States by types and amount of affected waters, categories and subcategories of nonpoint sources, and types of best management practices being implemented;

"(B) describes the experiences of the States in adhering to schedules and implementing best management practices;

"(C) describes the amount and purpose of grants awarded pursuant to subsection (d) of this section;

"(D) identifies, to the extent that information is available, the progress made in reducing pollutant loads and improving water quality in the waters of the United States; and

"(E) indicates what further actions need to be taken to attain and maintain in those waters (i) applicable water quality standards and (ii) the goals and requirements of the Act.".

(b) Section 304(k)(1) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting after the word "Act" the following: "and nonpoint source pollution management programs approved under section 319 of this Act.".

STORMWATER RUNOFF FROM MINING OPERATIONS

SEC. 113. Section 402(l) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(l)" and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Administrator shall not require a permit under this section nor impose effluent limitations, nor shall the Administrator directly or indirectly require any State to require such a permit or impose such limitations, for discharges of stormwater runoff from mining operations of oil or gas exploration, production, processing, or treatment operations, composed entirely of flows from conveyances or systems of conveyances (including pipes, conduits, ditches, and channels) used for collecting and conveying precipitation runoff and not contaminated with process wastes, overburden, raw materials, toxic pollutants, hazardous substances in excess of reportable quantities, or oil or grease.".

ANTI-BACKSLIDING

SEC. 114. (a) Section 402 of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

SEWAGE SLUDGE

SEC. 115. (a) Section 405(d) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(d)", by striking "(1)", "(2)" and "(3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A)", "(B)" and "(C)", and by adding the following new paragraph:

"(n) In the case of effluent limitations established on the basis of subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, a permit may not be renewed, reissued or modified solely on the basis of effluent guidelines promulgated under section 304(b) subsequent to the original issuance of such permit, to contain effluent limitations which are less stringent than the comparable effluent limitations in the previous permit. If the source has installed the treatment facilities required to meet the effluent limitations in the previous permit and has properly operated and maintained the facilities but has nevertheless been unable to achieve the previous effluent limitations, the limitations in the renewed, reissued or modified permit may reflect the level of pollutant control actually achieved (but shall not be less stringent than required by effluent guidelines in effect at the time of permit renewal, reissuance or modification).".

(b) Section 402(a)(1) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "(A)" after "either" and by inserting "(B)" after "this Act, or".

"(2)(A)(i) Not later than six months after the enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall identify those toxic pollutants which on the basis of available information on their toxicity, persistence, concentration, mobility, or potential for exposure, may be present in sewage sludge in concentrations which may adversely affect public health or the environment.

"(ii) Not later than eighteen months after enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall identify those toxic pollutants not identified under subparagraph (A)(i) which may be present in sewage sludge in concentrations which may adversely affect public health or the environment.

"(B)(i) Not later than eighteen months after the enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall publish regulations specifying acceptable management practices for sewage sludge containing each toxic pollutant identified under subparagraph (A)(i) and establishing numerical limitations for each such pollutant for each use identified under paragraph (1)(A). Such management practices and numerical limitations shall be adequate to protect public health and the environment from any reasonably anticipated adverse effects of such pollutant. Such regulations shall require compliance no later than six months after their publication.

"(ii) Not later than thirty months after the enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall publish regulations specifying acceptable management practices for sewage sludge containing each toxic pollutant identified under subparagraph (A)(ii) and establishing numerical limitations for each such pollutant for each such use identified under paragraph (1)(A). Such management practices and numerical limitations shall be adequate to protect public health and the environment from any reasonably anticipated adverse effects of such pollutant. Such regulations shall require compliance no later than six months after their publication.

"(iii) For purposes of this subparagraph, if, in the judgment of the Administrator, it is not feasible to prescribe or enforce a numerical limitation for a pollutant identified under paragraph (2)(A), he may instead promulgate a design, equipment, management practice, or operational standard, or combination thereof, which in his judgment is adequate to protect public health and the environment from any reasonably anticipated adverse effects of such pollutant. In the event the Administrator promulgates a design or equipment standard under this subsection, he shall include as part of such standard such requirements as will assure the proper operation and maintenance of any such element of design or equipment.

"(C) Nothing in this section authorizes the establishment of any requirement or time for compliance which is less stringent than required by any other law.".

INTERSTATE DISPUTE RESOLUTION

SEC. 116. (a) Section 402(d)(2) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "(A)" after "(2)", by striking "(A)" and "(B)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(i)" and "(ii)" respectively, and by adding the following subparagraph:

"(B) In the case of the failure of any State to accept the recommendations of another State whose waters may be affected by the issuance of a permit, submitted in accordance with subsection (b)(5), the Administrator shall determine whether any violation of a water quality requirement (including a standard) of the affected State or adverse effect on public health of the affected State will result from the issuance of such permit. If the Administrator so determines, the Administrator shall object to the issuance of such permit. Any such determination shall be provided in writing to the affected State and such determination or such objection shall be reviewable in the appropriate Circuit Court of Appeals under section 509(b) of this Act as the issuance or denial of a permit under section 402.".

(b) Section 402(b)(1) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following:

(b)(1) Section 308(a)(4) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "405," before the phrase "and 504".

(2) Section 505(f) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "or" where it appears before "(6)", and inserting before the period a semicolon and the following: "or (7) a regulation under section 405(d) of this Act,".

(3) Section 509(b)(1)(E) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "or 306" and inserting in lieu thereof "306, or 405".

"(F) shall be reconsidered for termination or modification at any time a State other than that in which the source is located provides notice that the permitted discharge is causing the violation of a water quality requirement (including any standard) of such State or adversely affecting the public health of such State and seeks a modification of such permit;".

(c) Section 511 of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding a new subsection (e) as follows:

"(e) Any State or municipality the water quality of which is adversely affected by pollutants from another State may petition the Administrator who, upon determining on the record after opportunity for Agency hearing pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 554, 556, and 557 that such pollution is causing the violation of a water quality requirement (including any standard) of such State or adversely affecting the public health of such State, shall issue an order restraining any person causing or contributing to such pollution or providing such other relief as is appropriate, taking into account the goals and requirements of this Act and other equitable consideration. In no case shall such order or other relief based solely on this subsection supersede or abrogate rights to quantities of water which have been established by interstate water compacts, Supreme Court decrees, or State water laws. This subsection shall not apply in any case in which section 402(d)(2)(B) or section 402(b)(1)(F) is available.".

PRESERVATION OF OTHER RIGHTS

SEC. 117. (a) Section 505(e) of the Clean Water Act is amended by inserting "(1)" after "(e)" and by adding the following new paragraphs:

"(2)(A) Nothing in this Act shall be construed, interpreted, or applied to displace, preempt, or limit the rights or liabilities of any person under State common law. Any person injured by an act or activity within the field covered by this Act may file an action and be granted relief which is provided under the statutory or common law of the State in which such person resides or the State in which the claim arose. Such action may be filed in Federal district court in accordance with section 1332 of title 28, United States Code.

"(B) Nothing in this Act shall affect or modify in any way the liabilities of any person under other Federal statutes for damages caused by noncompliance with any requirement of this Act or any permit issued under this Act.

"(3) In any case involving the application of State common or statutory law to an instance where a discharge of pollutants arising in another State is alleged to have an adverse effect on the public health or welfare or the attainment of any water quality requirement of such State or municipality, a State or municipality shall be considered a citizen of such State for the purpose of filing an action in, or seeking removal to, a Federal district court pursuant to section 1332 of title 28, United States Code.".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall not apply in any dispute involving claims of interstate water pollution, wherein a State or municipality is the defending party, which is pending as of the enactment of this Act (or has been finally adjudicated), and on which the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered a decision.

HAZARDOUS WASTE PRETREATMENT STUDY

SEC. 118. Section 516 of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(f) The Administrator shall, not later than two years after the date of the enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985, submit a report to the Congress concerning hazardous wastes identified or listed under section 3001 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act which are excluded from regulation pursuant to subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act under regulations exempting mixtures of domestic sewage and other wastes that pass through a sewer system to a publicly owned treatment works for treatment. Such report shall specify the types and quantities of such hazardous wastes which are exempted pursuant to such regulations and shall include recommendations respecting whether or not other provisions of law applicable to such mixtures are adequate to protect human health and the environment from hazards associated with such wastes or whether regulation of such mixtures under subtitle C of the Solid Waste Disposal Act is necessary for such purpose.".

AD VALOREM TAX DEDICATION

SEC. 119. For the purposes of complying with section 204(b)(1) of the Clean Water Act, the ad valorem tax user charge system of the Town of Hampton, New Hampshire, shall be deemed to have been dedicated as of December 27, 1977. The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall review such ad valorem tax user charge system for compliance with the remaining requirements of section 204(b)(1) and related regulations of the Agency.

LIMITATION ON DISCHARGE OF RAW SEWAGE BY NEW YORK CITY

SEC. 120. (a)(1) If the wastewater treatment plant identified in the consent decree as the North River plant has not achieved advanced preliminary treatment as required under the terms of the consent decree by August 1, 1986, the City of New York shall not discharge raw sewage from the drainage area of such plant (as defined in the consent decree) into navigable waters after such date in an amount which is greater for any 30-day period than an amount equal to 30 times the average daily amount of raw sewage discharged from such drainage area during the 12-month period ending on the earlier of the date on which such plant becomes operational or March 15, 1986 (as determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency), except as provided in subsection (b).

(2) If the wastewater treatment plant identified in the consent decree as the Red Hook plant has not achieved advanced preliminary treatment as required under the terms of the consent decree by August 1, 1987, the City of New York shall not discharge raw sewage from the drainage area of such plant (as defined in the consent decree) into navigable waters after such date in an amount which is greater for any 30-day period than an amount equal to 30 times the average daily amount of raw sewage discharged from such drainage area during the 12-month period ending on the earlier of the date on which such plant becomes operational or March 15, 1987 (as determined by the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency), except as provided in subsection (b).

(b)(1) In the event of any significant interruption in the operation of the North River plant or the Red Hook plant caused by an event described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (5) occurring after the applicable deadline established under subsection (a), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a) with respect to such plant, but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as may be reasonably necessary for the City of New York to resume operation of such plant.

(2) In the event that the volume of precipitation occurring after the applicable deadline established under subsection (a) causes the discharge of raw sewage to exceed the limitation under subsection (a), the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a) with respect to either or both such plants, but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be necessary to take into account the increased discharge caused by such volume of precipitation.

(3) In the event that an increase in discharges from the North River drainage area constituting a violation of subsection (a)(1) is due to a random or seasonal variation, and that any sewer hookup occurring, or permit for a sewer hookup granted, after July 31, 1986, is not responsible for such violation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a)(1), but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be reasonably necessary to take into account such random or seasonal variation.

(4) In the event that an increase in discharges from the Red Hook drainage area constituting a violation of subsection (a)(2) is due to a random or seasonal variation, and that any sewer hookup occurring, or permit for a sewer hookup granted, after July 31, 1987, is not responsible for such violation, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall waive the limitation of subsection (a)(2), but only to such extent and for such limited period of time as the Administrator determines to be reasonably necessary to take into account such random or seasonal variation.

(5) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall extend either deadline under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) to such extent and for such limited period of time as may be reasonably required to take into account any—

(A) act of war,

(B) unanticipated grave natural disaster or other natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, the effects of which could not have been prevented or avoided by the exercise of due care or foresight, or

(C) other circumstances beyond the control of the city of New York, such circumstances not to include (i) the unavailability of Federal funds under section 201 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, (ii) the unavailability of funds from the city of New York or the State of New York, or (iii) a policy decision made by the city of New York or the State of New York to delay the achievement of advanced preliminary treatment at the North River Plant or Red Hook plant beyond the applicable deadline in subsection (a).

(c) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b), any violation of subsection (a) shall be considered to be a violation of section 301 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, and all provisions of such Act relating to violations of such section 301 shall apply.

(d) For purposes of this section, the "consent decree" is the consent decree entered into by the Environmental Protection Agency, the city of New York, and the State of New York, on December 30, 1982, relating to construction and operation of the North River and Red Hook wastewater treatment plants.

(e) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall work with the city of New York to eliminate the discharge of raw sewage by such city at the earliest practicable date.

(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying the terms of the consent decree.

(g) It is the sense of the Congress that the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency should not agree to any further modification of the consent decree with respect to the schedule for achieving advanced preliminary treatment.

(h)(1) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect with respect to the North River drainage area until such time as the North River plant has achieved advanced preliminary treatment (as defined in the consent decree) for a period of six consecutive months.

(2) The provisions of this section shall remain in effect with respect to the Red Hook drainage area until such time as the Red Hook plant has achieved advanced preliminary treatment (as defined in the consent decree) for a period of six consecutive months.

(i) The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish and carry out a program for the monitoring activities which may be required under subsection (a) by December 1, 1984. The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish the methodologies, data base, and any other information required for making determinations under subsection (b) for the North River drainage area (as defined in the consent decree) by July 31, 1986, unless the requirements of subsection (b)(1) have been satisfied, and for the Red Hook drainage area (as defined by the consent decree) by July 31, 1987, unless the requirements of subsection (h)(2) have been satisfied. In carrying out such program, if the Administrator finds that a violation of subsection (a) has occurred, the Administrator shall also determine, within 30 days after such finding, whether a provision of subsection (b) applies. If the Administrator requires information from the city of New York in order to determine whether a provision of subsection (b) applies, the Administrator shall request such information. If the city of New York does not supply the information requested by the Administrator, the Administrator shall determine that subsection (b) does not apply. The city of New York shall be responsible only for such expenses as are necessary to provide such requested information. Enforcement action pursuant to subsection (c) shall be commenced at the end of such 30 days unless a provision of subsection (b) applies.

TITLE II—CONSTRUCTION GRANT AMENDMENTS

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 201. Section 207 of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "and September 30, 1985," and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1985, September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, September 30, 1989, and September 30, 1990,".

ALLOCATION

SEC. 202. (a) Section 205(c) of the Clean Water Act is amended by adding the following new paragraph:

"(3) Sums authorized to be appropriated pursuant to section 207 for the fiscal year 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 shall be allotted for each such year by the Administrator not later than the tenth day which begins after the date of enactment of the Clean Water Act Amendments of 1985. Sums authorized for such fiscal years shall be allotted in accordance with the following table:

(b) Section 207(e) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "and 1985," each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990,".

SET ASIDES

SEC. 203. (a) Section 207(g)(1) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990".

(b) Section 207(i) of the Clean Water Act is amended by striking "and September 30, 1985," and inserting in lieu thereof September 30, 1985, September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, September 30, 1988, September 30, 1989, and September 30, 1990".

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Vermont, the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, as an original cosponsor of legislation to reauthorize the Nation's Superfund program.

The cleanup of abandoned toxic waste sites is a top priority for New Jersey. In no other State is the Superfund program more important. Fully 95 of the 786 sites on the National Priority List for cleanup are in New Jersey. The most dangerous site in the country, the Lipari landfill, is located in the suburbs of Camden. These is not one county in New Jersey free of sites which threaten human health and the surrounding environment. Therefore, I applaud Senator STAFFORD's hard work last year to strengthen and renew Superfund and his intention to put Superfund at the top of our committee's agenda this year.

Mr. President, it is vital that the Congress take up consideration of the Superfund program as soon as possible. The Superfund program expires in September. It is imperative that Superfund be reauthorized with sufficient lead time so that the Environmental Protection Agency can gear up to run an expanded and accelerated program.

The legislation that we are introducing today is virtually identical to the bill approved by a vote of 17 to 1 by the Environment and Public Works Committee last September. This bill was subsequently referred to the Senate Finance Committee, where it languished in the waning hours of the 98th Congress.

In an effort to gain Senate approval, Senator BRADLEY and I offered an amendment, similar to the legislation approved by the Environment and Public Works Committee, during consideration of the continuing resolution in early October. Unfortunately, opposition to Superfund renewal by the administration hindered approval of the bill.

The legislation that we are introducing today directs and authorizes funds for the testing of toxic chemicals most commonly found at Superfund sites. It requires that health assessments be done at every site listed on the National Priority List and that a more effective program be established for providing information to citizens who are worried about the health ramifications of exposure to nearby abandoned waste sites.

It requires that EPA replace household water, when warranted by conditions around a site. This provision, which I offered in committee, requires that our citizens have at least the very basics: not only clean water to drink, but also to bathe in, to wash their clothes in, and to use for other essential household purposes.

The bill also refines the Federal-State relationships under Superfund, which are one of the most critical elements of any effective cleanup program. This is one of the areas that I devoted substantial attention to in committee because of its importance to a successful program. I was very appreciative that the committee saw fit to adopt these amendments. They would clarify the right to the States to raise their own funds; extend the statute of limitations for filing natural resource damage claims; allow States to get credit for State money spent to clean up Superfund sites eligible for Federal assistance; and to assure that the treatment of ground and surface water be considered a part of the cleanup.

Mr. President, while this bill is a good starting point it is modest in scope. It does not contain the administrative assistance program for compensating victims of toxic exposure included in last year's bill. Nor does it contain a cause of action for seeking relief in Federal courts. I expect that the committee will be very active on these important issues this year. The pilot administrative program offered by my colleague, Senator MITCHELL, represented a good first step, and I look forward to working with him and other members of the committee in fashioning victims' compensation provisions.

In addition, a number of issues were left unresolved last year in an effort to forge a strong consensus late in the session last year. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my additional views to the Environment and Public Works Committee report on last year's bill be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. These views indicate the areas that I would like to see added as amendments to the bill introduced today.

BHOPAL

The recent tragedy in Bhopal, India, raises several critical issues relevant to the reauthorization of Superfund. The lethal release of methyl isocyanate by the Union Carbide plant swept over the populated city early in the morning. Investigations have confirmed that plant personnel fled, emergency equipment failed to work, and evacuation measures were not instituted until after the release of the poisonous gas. In the wake of the worst industrial accident in history, citizens and officials around the globe are asking, Could it happen to us?

Nowhere is the question of safety more important than in the State of New Jersey. The State is the most densely populated State in the Nation. It is also the third largest producer of chemicals. Recent incidents in the State, including an explosion that released malathion into the air over heavily populated areas, are cause for reevaluation of safety precautions and emergency response capabilities in New Jersey and other communities across the Nation.

Federal emergency response authorities stem for Superfund. In fact, EPA has carried out more emergency response actions than planned cleanup actions, although most people associate the Superfund program with the cleanup of abandoned toxic waste sites.

The Bhopal incident raises a host of questions the Congress should pursue during consideration of Superfund legislation:

What percentage of the American public lives within 10, 20, or 50 miles of facilities that handle hazardous materials?

Do we know what these materials are and what hazards they present to adjacent communities?

What is the adequacy of emergency procedures of State and Federal Governments to respond to environmental disasters?

Does the National Response Team set up under Superfund have the capability to provide or coordinate essential services in the event of a disaster?

How would relief funds be made available during and immediately following an emergency?

How would victims of exposure be compensated?

To what extent do current liability provisions under Superfund encourage the institution of safety measures?

Are penalties for nonreporting of releases steep enough?

In addition to these response issues, the specter of daily exposure to chemicals emitted as byproducts of chemical processes has been raised by Bhopal. To respond to spills and leaks of chemicals, we need to know where facilities are located, what chemicals they use or produce, and in what volume these chemicals are released on a routine basis.

I intend to introduce amendments to Superfund this year to address some of these issues. It is my hope that Congress will consider my legislation within the context of reauthorization of Superfund.

NEED TO EXPAND SUPERFUND

Mr. President, the long-awaited studies mandated by Superfund were issued in December. They confirm that we cannot afford to delay the expansion and acceleration of the Superfund program. No longer can anyone dispute that the time for study has ended. The major findings of the studies are persuasive. EPA expects that over 2,000 sites will be listed on the National Priority List. Another 22,000 sites are candidates for the NPL. If these sites are added at the current ratio of one to every six, the list may grow to 3,700 to 4,200 sites. These figures could be substantially increased as more active hazardous waste facilities, municipal and industrial landfills, mining waste sites, leaking underground storage tanks and sites contaminated by radioactive wastes and pesticides become eligible for Superfund action. More than half of the 25 most commonly found substances at Superfund sites are known or suspected carcinogens, and substances from over 75 percent of these sites have infiltrated into ground water sources.

It is our responsibility to give EPA the direction and resources to effectively mitigate the dangers these toxics present. There is no question that the job is a very large one, and that significant resources will be needed to make the Superfund an effective program. EPA estimates that the average cost of cleaning up an abandoned waste site is over $8 million. This figure does not take into account inflation, deteriorating conditions at many abandoned waste sites, compensation for damages to natural resources, and, of critical importance to the State of New Jersey, the long-term costs of maintaining cleaned-up sites. The choice made between completely cleaning up sites, or simply containing wastes, will also influence cleanup costs.

Given these assumptions, EPA estimates that the cleanup of the first 1,800 Superfund sites will cost between $11.7 and $22.7 billion. This range reflects the assumption that responsible parties will contribute 50 percent of the cleanup costs in calculating the $11.7 billion figure and 40 percent calculating the $22.7 billion figure. Recovery from responsible parties has been about 25 percent, a much lower figure.

Clearly, the program will have to be funded at a level far higher than the original $1.6 billion. Last year, the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee recommended a funding level of $7.5 billion over the next 5 years. The House of Representatives approved a funding level of $10.2 billion. To adequately fund this vital public health program, the Congress will have to increase Superfund resources significantly. While our bill does not contain a funding title, which will be developed primarily in the Finance Committee, I will support proposals to expand and broaden the existing tax base. Last year, the Environment and Public Works Committee developed information on a number of proposals to spread the tax burden. This was an important effort which should be renewed this year.

Mr. President, it is my hope that we can proceed rapidly with Superfund reauthorization. I applaud Chairman STAFFORD for putting this legislation at the top of our committee's agenda. In my State of New Jersey, not 1 of the 95 sites on the NPL has been completely cleaned up. This is an intolerable situation. I intend to work hard with my colleagues on the Environment and Public Works Committee, and with the Finance Committee, to strengthen this program which is of such critical importance to New Jersey.

There being no objection, the views were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXHIBIT 1: ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR LAUTENBERG ON S. 2892

The chairman and ranking minority member of the committee have exercised vital leadership in securing nearly unanimous committee approval of S. 2892. I hope the Senate will make consideration of this bill a high priority before the 98th Congress adjourns.

The importance of an expanded and accelerated Superfund Program cannot be understated. Citizens who live in continual fear of contaminated ground water, air, and soil from abandoned waste sites deserve to have this program implemented as quickly and effectively as possible. The sheer magnitude of the task, and the need for the Environmental Protection Agency and the States to make managerial and financial commitments without a loss of continuity, requires that the Superfund Program be reauthorized well before it expires in October 1985.

In the interest of assuring timely action on S. 2892, the committee considered a 5-year $7.5 billion reauthorization of current programs. Members of the committee were provided with the opportunity to offer amendments, and several were adopted that will improve the existing Superfund Program. To facilitate committee consideration of S. 2892, however, several important issues were not considered. I hope the Senate will be able to address them when it considers S. 2892.

S. 2892 does not address the pace of the program. Superfund sites are being added to the national priority list at an astounding rate. Currently, there are 546 sites on the NPL. Over the next several years, the Environmental Protection Agency expects the list to grow to 1,400 to 2,200 sites. Every effort should be made to ensure that EPA has adequate resources to initiate cleanups and that it do so as quickly as possible. This may require an increase in funding and direction about the pace at which sites are added to the NPL and the speed with which remedial investigations feasibility studies and remedial actions are undertaken.

Another issue related to the cleanup of sites is the determination of "how clean is clean." The committee gave this issue considerable attention. It resolved that the Agency or State carrying out a remedial action should be provided with flexibility in determining how much should be cleaned up. S. 2892 requires that the degree of clean-up always meets the test of protection of human health and the environment. It is my view that removal of hazardous substances, pollutants, or contaminants should be the preferred method of cleanup unless compelling evidence indicates another solution better serves the public health and environment.

The Superfund Program must be responsive to the citizens that live in the vicinity of an abandoned waste site or site of a release under the act. Citizens should have the opportunity to petition EPA if a release or the threat of a release poses imminent and substantial endangerment to human health or the environment and also to petition EPA to carry out nondiscretionary duties under the act. Citizen suit provisions under other environmental statutes have made programs more responsive to the public and have generally improved Agency regulation and enforcement of such laws.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am also pleased to join the chairman, Senator STAFFORD, and many of my distinguished colleagues of the Environment and Public Works Committee, as an original cosponsor of legislation to control acid rain.

For over 3 years, Congress has been debating the shape of an acid rain control program. The Environment and Public Works Committee has twice approved strong acid rain control programs as part of the reauthorization of the Clean Air Act. Twenty-seven days of hearings and 33 markups on the Clean Air Act, including 10 days of hearings specifically on acid rain, were held, and over 5,000 pages of a hearing record was compiled. It is my sincere hope that acid rain controls will finally be put into place in the 99th Congress.

Every day that we delay, another 100,000 tons of sulfur dioxide pollution is spewed out over our cities, our forests and crops, and rivers and streams. While the evidence amasses that this pollution causes slow but pervasive degradation of our natural resources, and damages buildings, bridges, and priceless monuments in the United States, the Congress has remained immobilized.

The legislation introduced today is identical to the bill approved by the Environment and Public Works Committee last March. Approval of acid rain legislation was my first vote as a member of the committee. The legislation would put into action a program to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions by over 40 percent. The bill requires that this reduction be achieved by January 1, 1994, and that phased reductions be made in the interim.

It is not a perfect bill, but it represents an important step toward mitigating one of the most troublesome environmental problems of the decade.

Other nations have moved forward with significant programs to cut emissions of sulfur and nitrogen oxides. Canada is pledged to a 50-percent reduction of its smelter and powerplant sulfur dioxide emissions. Three other countries in Europe have joined the call for a 50-percent reduction. Two of the countries represent the industrial hub of Europe: France and West Germany. The third country is Norway. Together, 10 countries have pledged to reduce their emissions by at least 30 percent over the next decade in a cooperative effort to stem this urgent international problem.

We need to take action in the Congress before we lose irreplaceable national treasures; lakes and streams, crops and forest land, and historical monuments, and, perhaps more importantly, the health of our young and elderly.

In the late 1970's, poisoned lakes in the Adirondacks drew the attention of citizens across the country. Last year, the Office of Technology Assessment reported that 9,000 lakes and 117,000 miles of streams are at risk in States east of or bordering on the Mississippi River. Scientists are now discovering that the problem extends further west to Colorado and all the way to California and Washington State.

Today, red spruce from Maine to North Carolina are in decline, mirroring what has happened in West Germany, where the Government estimates that fully 50 percent of the forests are dead or dying.

The corrosion of buildings, monuments and water supply systems are also exacting an economic toll that the national academy of sciences estimated in 1978 exceeded $2 billion per year. In fact, destruction from acid rain is so widespread that today some car warranties will not fully cover paint damage from so-called chemical fallout. Oldsmobile warranties warn of airborne pollutants attacking vehicle paints, particularly along the northeastern seaboard.

In my home State of New Jersey, there is tremendous concern about acid rain. New Jersey's own pine barrens are at risk. It is one of seven regions identified by the Environmental Protection Agency as most vulnerable to acid rain. Correlation of acidified streams and reduced productivity of pines in the Lebanon State Forest was the first indication on the eastern seaboard that acid rain may be damaging our forests.

Also, in the Kittatinny Mountains to the north, three lakes are immediately threatened. The acidity is at levels endangering trout and bass breeding. State scientists fear that metal deposits found in Kittatinny Lake samples could contaminate the water supplies of the central highland reservoirs.

Even more disturbing is the evidence building on health effects. Some recent studies indicate that more people may die prematurely from airborne sulfates each year than die on our Nation's highways.

Mr. President, what we know today is compelling.

In 1981 the National Academy of Sciences confirmed that sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides are the cause of acid rain. NAS recommended a 50-percent reduction in acid deposition.

Two years later, the NAS issued a second landmark report. It concluded that reductions in sulfur dioxide emissions would lead to direct and proportional reductions in acid rain.

On the heels of the NAS report, a presidentially appointed panel of scientists—appointed by President Reagan—reiterated that concrete action to reduce sulfur dioxide emissions was in order.

The panel clearly stated that the risks of waiting to get more information far outweighed the risks of acting, and that waiting could result in irreversible damage to the environment.

Mr. President, in 1970, the Clean Air Act was passed. That act set out a mandate for cleaning up the emissions from our factories and our cars. The technology for accomplishing this task was then only on the drawing boards. Today, that technology is working. It has reduced some automobile emissions by 90 percent and reduced sulfur dioxide emissions by 20 percent.

In America and in New Jersey, we have the finest engineers and scientists in the world. We have the evidence and the know how to put an acid rain program in place. What is needed is the political will to do so.

From a small movement that originated in New England, public support for acid rain control has grown steadily. The National Clean Air Coalition and the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain have gathered the membership of groups numbering in the millions to work for acid rain controls.

It is my hope that 1985 is the year we confront our regional differences and concerns, and enact a meaningful acid rain control program.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to consponsor the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985. The bill we introduce today is virtually identical to the legislation approved by the Committee on Environment and Public Works last year.

It is critical that this legislation be enacted into law this year because the authorization for the program expires in September 1985.

There is no environmental problem of more importance to the American people than the thousands of abandoned hazardous waste sites across this country. No area of the United States is immune from the threat of chemical contamination of our air, our water and land. No person is immune from the threat to his or her health and well-being from toxic chemicals in the environment.

It is indeed ironic that this is the legacy of the modern chemical technology which has so improved our standard of living. The Environmental Protection Agency estimates that there could be as many as 22,000 potentially hazardous waste sites in this country.

The Congress acted in 1980 to address this problem by enacting the Superfund law. We enacted a law which was based on the principle that those who are responsible for chemical harm should bear the costs of that harm. This was the basis for both the strict liability standard of the law, and the taxation of chemical feedstocks to fund the cleanup of sites.

Today we are introducing legislation to extend the life of the Superfund law for another 5 years. In the 4 years since we enacted the original statute, we have learned that the magnitude of the problem is far greater than we expected. The $1.6 bill fund authorized in 1980 will probably clean up only 170 of the 546 worst sites now on EPA's priority list. The average cost of cleaning up each site has increased from an estimated $2.5 million in 1980 to $4.5 million in 1983 to $6.5 million in 1984.

We are proposing a modest bill which will permit the continuation of the current program at a slightly increased pace.

EPA officials have stated that the current program—130 site cleanups a year—would cost $5.2 billion over 5 years. This estimate is misleading. It does not include the cost of payment of natural resource claims authorized under the current law. Although claims of $2.7 billion have been filed, none have yet been paid. Moreover, EPA's cost estimate assumes no inflation between 1986 and 1990, and no increase in construction costs at sites. It was these factors in part that led the members of the Environment and Public Works Committee last year to recommend a Superfund Program of $7.5 billion over 5 years.

VICTIM ASSISTANCE

The law now makes no provision for compensation to the human victims of exposure to hazardous chemicals. Compensation is, however, available for damage to natural resources owned by State and Federal authorities. As I have said since 1980, this represents a misguided set of priorities which elevates things over people.

For 4 years, I have been advocating the addition of compensation for injury to persons to the Superfund law, through a combination of judicial and administrative remedies.

It is necessary and justified that each of these avenues provide resource to people injured from exposure to hazardous substances. Together, these kinds of remedies place injury to people on the same footing as damage to property. I am convinced, by the record of the Environment Committee and the general debate over the past years, that a genuine need for this kind of compensation exists. And I am convinced that we, as a society, will provide such compensation in a comprehensive fashion. We will provide it because ultimately, the equity of shifting the burden of harm from the victim to the responsible party will be self-evident and irrefutable.

The bill we introduce today does not contain a detailed recommendation on victim compensation. This should not be construed to mean that we do not intend to address that issue. I will introduce legislation in the near future on that subject, and I intend to offer such a proposal in the Environment Committee this year.

The legislation we adopted last year established a demonstration program of administrative victim assistance in five States to be selected by EPA. I personally believe that such a program could be and should be operated from the human health threat of hazardous substances in the environment. I am therefore at this time reexamining the various suggestions put forth during the Superfund debate last year, with respect to victim assistance. I hope to develop a proposal which is both workable and equitable, and more comprehensive in scope.

Mr. President, this is a modest piece of legislation. It does not expand greatly the regulatory authorities of the current law. It is essentially a reauthorization of the current program. We must move expeditiously to enact it.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I would like to commend Senator STAFFORD for introducing on this first day of the 99th Congress amendments to the Clean Water Act. We on the Environment and Public Works Committee worked hard during the last Congress to develop legislation that would expand our efforts to improve the quality of the Nation's waters. In spite of the progress made in the past decade by sewage treatment and other controls, additional attention must be paid to toxic pollutants and nonpoint source pollution. This bill will continue last year's efforts to achieve these goals.

I would also like to speak to the provision that would limit discharges of raw sewage by the city of New York. This language was the culmination of weeks of negotiation among all four Senators from New York and New Jersey, as well as Representative JIM HOWARD.

It is certainly imperative that such discharges near New York City and more than 200 other locations across the United States end as soon as possible. New York City is making a major effort to do so; two sewage treatment plants now are under construction—North River and Red Hook—and soon will eliminate continuous raw discharges to the Hudson River and New York Harbor.

The larger of the two plants, North River, is an engineering marvel. Perched on a huge concrete slab over the Hudson, it will collect, pump, and treat up to 200 million gallons of sewage every day. A thousand workers are at work on the site, and the plant is scheduled to be ready by November 1985. I would note that a consent agreement among New York City, New York State, and the Environmental Protection Agency does not require completion until 6 months later. The second plant, Red Hook, is similarly ahead of schedule and will be treating waste by December 1986.

In view of New York City's aggressive program to eliminate the discharge of raw sewage, I saw no need for this provision. This legislation will not hasten completion of the two treatment facilities, where work is already proceeding as rapidly as possible. I also believe that any strategy to improve water quality should be applied nationwide. The Environmental Protection Agency has identified 242 locations in the United States where sewage is not treated. Yet this amendment would affect only New York City's discharges. I agreed to it because it is carefully worded to ensure that New York City will not be punished for circumstances beyond its control.

Finally, I would like to put this legislation into perspective. Improving the quality of our Nation's waters will require a variety of regulatory and management efforts. Elimination of raw municipal sewage is clearly important, but we are close to achieving that goal. Other water pollution problems are even more critical—industrial discharges of heavy metals and toxic organic chemicals, nonpoint source pollution, and others. Let us resolve to focus our attention and efforts on these largely unaddressed problems. I suggest enactment of the Clean Water Act amendments as a first step.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to comment briefly on the Clean Water Act, which is being reintroduced today by my distinguished colleague from Vermont, the chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee. Section 120 of this act addresses the concerns of the State of New Jersey with respect to the continued discharge of raw sewage by New York City. At the same time, this provision offers New York City sufficient protection from events beyond its control that might otherwise have triggered a ban contained in a version of the provision considered by the House during the 98th Congress.

Mr. President, I applaud the spirit of compromise behind the drafting of this section. Senators MOYNIHAN, LAUTENBERG, and BRADLEY, along with Congressman HOWARD, are to be commended for their commitment to working out an agreement which will ensure that these waters are protected, while at the same time establishing realistic goals that New York can, and will, meet. In fact, I expect that New York will be ahead of schedule in accomplishing these goals.

This amendment explicitly states that the Environmental Protection Agency shall be responsible for the monitoring required to ascertain the levels of sewage discharge. In this way, New York will not be expected to bear a greater financial burden under the act than is borne by other communities across the Nation.

At the same time, this amendment offers protection to the city so that it will not be a victim of actions or occurrences beyond its control. Specifically, it provides an exemption should either plant come on line, but break down for reasons beyond the control of the city of New York, or if the plants could not be brought on line for reasons beyond the control of the city, such as an act of God, an act of war, or a strike, or if the violation of the cap was due to increased rainfall, or random or seasonal fluctuations. Finally, the section provides for a sunset provision for the raw sewage discharge cap on each of the plants, and it makes clear that the cap applies only to the drainage areas involved, not to the entire city.

Mr. President, I am pleased we have reached this compromise, and, once again, I applaud my colleagues for the cooperation which made this agreement possible.

SUPERFUND IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1985

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator STAFFORD and other members of the Committee on Environment and Public Works today as a cosponsor of the Superfund Improvement Act of 1985.

It is particularly significant that this legislation is being introduced on this, the first day of the 99th Congress. The Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980, or Superfund, will expire at the end of the present fiscal year. However, the work of the Superfund Program has just begun. Thousands of hazardous waste sites, including many in my State, await action under the program. It is absolutely imperative that the Congress moves quickly to reauthorize this important environmental statute.

We have learned a great deal over the initial years of the Superfund Program. Importantly, we now have a better understanding of the scope of the problem, and it is far larger than originally anticipated. Further, it has become clear that we must devote considerably more resources than we have in the past to the clean up of these sites. Indeed, the Environmental Protection Agency recently told the Congress that their projections for per-site clean-up costs have risen to well over $8 million.

In New Hampshire, where we seem to have more than our share of hazardous waste sites, I have had the opportunity to work closely with local, State, and Federal officials in the cleanup efforts. I have seen first hand that there are many areas where we can improve the program to make it work better and faster.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works spent a great deal of time in the last Congress looking into the scope, problems, and priorities of the program. I believe that the results of the committee's work, which are largely reflected in the bill being introduced today, successfully address needed expansion and improvements to the Superfund Program. I am particularly pleased that the bill as introduced also contains a provision that will provide for a program to increase our understanding of health effects associated with Superfund sites.

Mr. President, it is very important that we move quickly on a Superfund extension. I urge my colleagues to actively support speedy consideration of this legislation.

Mr. President, today I am also pleased to join Senator STAFFORD and several colleagues as a cosponsor of the Acid Rain Control Act of 1985.

The threats to our fragile environment which continue to be posed by acid deposition have been well documented in several major scientific studies. We know that large sections of our country are at substantial risk because of acid rain. Not only are invaluable natural resources at risk, but so is the economic well being of those who depend upon our rivers, lakes, forests, and farms for their livelihood.

It is clear that the time for further study has passed, and the time for action is upon us. That is what makes the introduction of this legislation today so important. I commend the chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works for his continued leadership on this issue. It is particularly important that this legislation is being introduced on this, the first day of the 99th Congress.

Last year the committee reported a similar acid rain control provision to the full Senate where it was never taken up. We cannot afford to let that happen again this year.

Mr. President, I hope that the early introduction of this legislation serves as a signal to this body that the time for action on acid rain has arrived.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 54. A bill to establish a Federal Annuity Program to compensate participants in private pension plans which terminated before July 1, 1974, for nonforfeitable pension benefits which were lost by reason of termination, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

TERMINATED PENSIONERS' SURVIVAL ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Terminated Pensioners Survival Act. This legislation will assure that those who have worked throughout an entire lifetime will be able to retire in dignity. I believe the Federal Government has a duty to help those people whose pension rights were not protected by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 [ERISA]—to so-called pension losers.

During the 98th Congress, I introduced identical legislation in the Senate. I also participated in hearings held by the House Subcommittee on Labor-Management Relations on September 20, 1984, where companion legislation was then under consideration. Although the last Congress adjourned without taking any action on this issue, I am confident the 99th Congress will act to make certain that workers who have been promised and may have contributed to a retirement plan will not spend their retirement years unable to afford the necessities of life.

It is of the utmost importance that prompt action be taken to restore a measure of retirement economic security to a class of citizens that grows smaller as the years pass by. Time is literally running out for the tens of thousands of pension losers, many of whom are experiencing retirements fraught with financial worries and the need for extreme self-sacrifice in order to make ends meet. The pension losers are people who built their hopes and dreams for a decemt retirement on the promise of a pension—a pension which they had earned with years of hard work.

Pension losers are workers who satisfied the prerequisites of their company pension plans. Unfortunately, they lost out on these pensions when their companies went bankrupt prior to enactment of ERISA on September 2, 1974. Pension losers lost their benefits not only to company bankruptcies, but also to pension plan terminations caused by company closings and relocations.

When ERISA was enacted, numerous protections for workers' retirement plans were initiated. The primary goal of ERISA was to ensure that workers covered under private pension plans receive the benefits to which they are entitled. In order to achieve this goal, the landmark legislation provided many protections, including: Fiduciary standards, funding standards, reporting and disclosure rules, plan termination insurance, and new tax-qualifications rules. However, it did not protect those workers who simply had the bad luck to have contributed to a pension plan which terminated before the arbitrary cutoff date established with ERISA's passage.

At the time of ERISA's enactment 10 years ago, there were an estimated 125,000 pension losers who had vested in pension plans which had terminated between 1942 and 1974. Since 1974, the number of pension losers has decreased dramatically to about 83,000. The number of potential recipients under my bill continues to shrink, as actuarial tables predict, and surviving pension losers struggle to maintain their dignity—a dignity that often disappears in the fight against inflation, gas and electric bills, food bills, and dwindling savings.

It is difficult to understand the plight of pension losers without examining first-hand what it has meant to specific people to lose their pension. One such pension loser is Mr. Michael Fletutor of Hudson, NY. Mr. Fletutor worked 32 years for Gifford-Wood Co., Inc. He was vested in the company's pension plan, yet never received any benefits. Recently, I contacted Mr. Fletutor again and he related a story typical of many pension losers. He told me how he and his wife struggle to pay their monthly bills with their Social Security checks and their personal savings.

They have serious worries about the future:

> . . . Hospitalization has been really tough . . . I have hyper-tension and high blood pressure while my wife is a diabetic . . . My wife really worries about financial problems. I tell her that we will manage. We will live life like this as long as we can and when our savings are gone, we will just have to sell our house.

Are these the kind of "golden retirement years" we have provided for some of our senior citizens? Enactment of the bill which I am introducing today would be an important first step in rectifying the injustice that has been done. This legislation will provide annually, beginning at age 65, $75 for every year a pension loser worked toward his or her pension plan. In order to qualify, a worker must have fulfilled the vesting requirements of the terminated pension plan. For example, a person who worked 20 years for a company would receive $1,500 a year. Clearly, such compensation is minimal in comparison to the contributions these workers made to their plans and to what the plans would have paid out had they remained solvent.

The pension losers' legislation has built-in limitations both as to the size of Federal expenditures and the number of recipients. The qualified beneficiaries are a finite group which can only decrease with time. The average annual cost of benefits paid out through this program will be about $42 million. At the program's highest point, its third year, it will reach $61 million and then taper down to $38 million by its fifth year. These figures are based on the latest CBO draft review, made in September 1984, of their previous 1982 cost estimate.

It is important for us to reflect on the fact that, although this class of approximately 83,000 people has been categorized as "pension losers," they are certainly not losers in terms of what the have contributed to this country. They are the workers who built America—they worked, sacrificed, and suffered through the worst economic depression ever experienced by this country and they lived through the hardships of World War II—many are service veterans. I am talking about the kind of people who don't ask for a handout. It is our job now, as responsible legislators, to pay them back on their investment in this Nation.

Passage of this needed legislation will restore a measure of financial security for pension losers who worked many years to earn their pensions. If we fail to move this legislation, then pension losers will continue to grasp fruitlessly for the financial security that has so painfully eluded them since the enactment of ERISA.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in its entirety in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 54

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Terminated Pensioners' Survival Act".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. For purposes of this Act—

(1) The terms "State" and "United States" have the meanings set forth for such terms in paragraph (10) of section 3 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002).

(2) The terms "participant", "beneficiary", "nonforfeitable", and "defined benefit plan" have the meanings set forth in paragraphs (7), (8), (19), and (35), respectively, of section 3 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1002).

(3) The term "early terminated plan" means a defined benefit plan—

(A) which is described in subsection (a) of section 4 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1003) and is not described in subsection (b) of that section, and

(B) the termination date of which (as determined by Secretary of Labor) was before July 1, 1974.

(4) The term "qualified participant" means an individual who—

(A) was a participant in an early terminated plan,

(B) had immediately before the termination a nonforfeitable benefit under the plan, and

(C) has not received payment in full of such benefit by reason of the termination of the plan.

(5) The term "qualified spouse" means an individual who is the widow (within the meaning of section 216(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 416(c)) or the widower (within the meaning of section 216(g) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 416(g)) of a qualified participant.

ENTITLEMENT TO ANNUITY

SEC. 3. (a) A qualified participant who is alive on the effective date set forth in section 13 is entitled, subject to subsection (d), and upon approval under this Act of a claim therefor, to an annuity computed under section 4(a).

(b) A qualified spouse who is alive on the effective date set forth in section 13 is entitled, subject to subsection (d), and upon approval under this Act of a claim therefor, to an annuity computed under section 4(b).

(c)(1)(A) The annuity of a qualified participant commences on the day after the later of—

(i) the effective date set forth in section 13, or (ii) the date on which the qualified participant attains sixty-five years of age.

(B) The annuity of a qualified participant and the right thereto terminate at the end of the last calendar month preceding the day on which the qualified participant dies.

(2)(A) The annuity of a qualified spouse of a qualified participant commences on the latest of—

(i) the effective date set forth in section 13, (ii) the first day of the month in which the qualified participant dies, or

(iii) if the qualified participant dies before attaining 65 years of age, the first day of the month in which the qualified participant would have attained such age but for the qualified participant's death.

(B) The annuity of a qualified spouse and the right thereto terminate at the end of the last calendar month preceding the day on which the qualified spouse dies.

(d) Entitlements to annuities under this section shall take effect only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

COMPUTATION OF ANNUITY

SEC. 4. (a) The annuity computed under this subsection (relating to a qualified participant) in connection with any early terminated plan is equal to—

(1) the product of $75 and the number of years of service of the qualified participant under the plan, reduced by

(2) the amount of nonforfeitable pension benefits under the plan (if any)—

(A) to which the qualified participant is entitled, and

(B) which remain payable as of the effective date set forth in section 13 or any later date.

(b) The annuity computed under this subsection (relating to the qualified spouse of a qualified participant) in connection with an early terminated plan is equal to the greater of—

(1) 50 percent of the amount determined under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) in connection with such qualified participant, reduced by

(2) the amount of nonforfeitable pension benefits under the plan (if any)—

(A) to which the qualified spouse is entitled, and

(B) which remain payable as of such date or any later date.

CLAIM REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 5. (a) Claims for annuities under this Act shall be in such form as the Secretary of Labor shall by regulation prescribe.

(b) Claim forms shall be made available to the public by the Social Security Administration in local offices of the Administration, and completed claim forms may be filed at such local offices. The Administration shall promptly forward any such completed claim forms to the Secretary of Labor. The Secretary of Labor shall provide the Administration with claim forms necessary to carry out this subsection.

(c)(1) Claims for annuities under this Act which meet the requirements of subsection (a) and of paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be approved by the Secretary.

(2)(A) A claim meets the requirements of this paragraph if the claim includes evidence sufficient to establish that the claimant is a qualified participant or qualified spouse.

(B) Evidence which may be relevant for purposes of subparagraph (A) includes, but is not limited to—

(i) employment and payroll records of the applicable employer who, alone or together with others, maintained the early terminated plan,

(ii) documents and records of the early terminated plan,

(iii) relevant correspondence, and

(iv) affidavits.

(C) In considering claims for annuities under this Act, the Secretary of Labor shall consider, on the request of a claimant or the claimant's representative, in addition to any other relevant evidence—

(i) a comparison of employment and payroll records which were maintained under chapter 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to Federal Insurance Contributions Act) or under the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 301 et seq.) with records maintained by the Internal Revenue Service relating to the qualification status of trusts forming part of a stock bonus, pension, or profit-sharing plan under part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to pension, profit-sharing, stock bonus plans, etc.), and

(ii) records maintained under the Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act of 1958.

ADMINISTRATIVE APPEALS

SEC. 6. (a)(1) The Secretary of Labor shall send any individual whose claim under this Act is denied by the Secretary a written notice of the denial. Such notice shall include the reason for the denial and shall set forth the procedures required to be followed in order to obtain review under this Act.

(2) Any such individual whose claim is denied is entitled to—

(A) a reasonable time, but not less than thirty days after receipt of the written notice of denial described in paragraph (1), to request a review and to furnish affidavits and other documentary evidence in support of the request;

(B) be represented by an attorney or other representative; and

(C) unless a hearing is undertaken under subsection (b), a written decision and the specific reasons therefor at the earliest practicable date.

(b)(1) The Secretary may, and, upon the request (made within fifteen days after receipt of the notice referred to in subsection (a)(1)) of any individual entitled to such notice, shall, provide by regulation for a hearing which shall be before an administrative law judge appointed under section 3105 of title 5, United States Code, or any other employee of the Department of Labor designated by the Secretary (hereinafter in this subsection referred as as the "presiding official") and which may be in lieu of or in addition to the review requested under subsection (a). Any such hearing shall be conducted in accordance with the requirements of this subsection and section 554 and 555 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) The presiding official shall, on the basis of evidence presented at the hearing, affirm, modify, or reverse any earlier applicable findings of fact and decision under this Act.

(3) In the course of any such hearing, the presiding official may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Evidence may be received at any such hearing even though inadmissible under rules of evidence applicable to court procedure.

(4)(A) For the purpose of any such hearing, the presiding official may issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of any evidence which relates to any matter under investigation or in question before such official.

(B) The attendance of witnesses and production of evidence at the designated place of the hearing may be required from any place in the United States or in any territory or possession thereof.

(C) Subpenas issued by the presiding official shall be served by anyone authorized by such official—

(i) by delivering a copy thereof to the individual named therein, or

(ii) by registered mail or by certified mail addressed to such individual or at such individual's last dwelling place or principal place of business.

(D) A verified return by the individual so serving the subpena setting forth the manner of service or, in the case of service by registered mail or be certified mail, the return post office receipt therefor signed by the individual so served shall be proof of service.

(E) Witnesses so subpenaed shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

(5) In the case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena duly served upon, any person, any district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the person charged with contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the Secretary, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring the person to appear and give testimony, or to appear and produce evidence, or both. Any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as contempt thereof.

(c)(1) The findings and decisions of the presiding official under subsection (a) or (b) shall be binding upon all individuals involved.

(2) No finding of fact or decision of the presiding official shall be reviewed by any person, tribunal, or governmental agency except as provided in section 7.

(3) No action against the United States, the Secretary of Labor, or any officer or employee thereof shall be brought under section 1331 or 1346 of title 28, United States Code, to recover on any claim arising under this Act.

JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 7. (a) Any individual, after any final decision made after a hearing under section 6(b), irrespective of the amount in controversy, may obtain a review of the decision by a civil action commenced within sixty days after the mailing to the individual of notice of such decision or within such further time as the Secretary of Labor may allow.

(b) Any action commenced under this section shall be brought in—

(1) the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the plaintiff resides, or in the judicial district in which is located the plaintiff's principal place of business, or

(2) if the plaintiff does not reside within any such judicial district and the plaintiff's principal place of business is not located in any such district, in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

(c) As part of any answer by the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary shall file a certified copy of the transcript of the record, including the evidence upon which the findings and decision complained of are based.

(d) The court shall enter, upon the pleadings and transcript of the record a judgment affirming, modifying, or reversing the decision, with or without remanding the case for a rehearing.

(e) The findings under section 6(b) as to any fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. In any case in which a claim has been denied because of failure of the claimant to submit proof in conformity with any regulation prescribed under section 4, the court shall review only the question of conformity with such regulations and the validity of the regulations.

(f)(1) The court shall, on the motion of the Secretary made before the Secretary files the Secretary's answer, remand the case to the Secretary for further action by the Secretary. The court may, at any time, on good cause shown, order additional evidence to be taken before the Secretary.

(2) The Secretary shall, after the case is remanded, and after hearing such additional evidence if so ordered—

(A) modify or affirm the earlier findings of fact or decision, or both, under section 6(b), and

(B) file with the court any such additional and modified findings of fact and decision, and a transcript of the additional record and testimony upon which the Secretary's action in modifying or affirming was based.

(3) Any such additional or modified finding of fact or decision shall be reviewable only to the extent provided for review of the original finding of fact or decision.

(g) The judgment of the court shall be final except that it shall be subject to review in the same manner as a judgment in other civil actions.

(h) Any action instituted in accordance with this section shall survive notwithstanding any change in the person occupying the office of Secretary or any vacancy in such office.

PAYMENT OF ANNUITIES

SEC. 8. (a)(1) Each annuity is stated as an annual amount, one-twelfth of which, fixed to the nearest dollar, constitutes the monthly rate payable during the month after the month or other period for which it had accrued.

(2) Any individual whose claim for an annuity under this Act is approved after the date on which the annuity commences under paragraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) of section 3(c) shall be paid the total amount of the annuity payments for months before the date on which the claim is approved in the form of a lump-sum payment.

(b) Upon a final decision under section 6, or upon the final judgment of any court of competent jurisdiction under section 7, that any individual is entitled to one or more annuity payments under this Act—

(1) the Secretary of Labor shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury—

(A) the name, address, and social security account numbers of the individual so entitled to receive such payments,

(B) the amount of such payments, and

(C) the time at which such payments should be made, and

(2) the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Division of Disbursement of the Department of the Treasury, shall make such payments—

(A) in accordance with the certification of the Secretary of Labor, and

(B) to the extent practicable, together with any payments of benefits made to the individual under the Social Security Act through such Division.

(c)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall promptly notify the Secretary of Labor of each annuity under this Act which terminates.

(2) The Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit quarterly to the Secretary of Labor a report setting forth the following information in connection with the last quarter:

(A) the number of annuities in pay status as of the end of the last quarter;

(B) the number of annuities which terminated during the last quarter; and

(C) the total amount paid as annuity payments under this Act during the last quarter.

(d)(1) Payment due an individual mentally incompetent or under other legal disability may be made to the person who is constituted guardian or other fiduciary by the law of the State of residence of the claimant or is otherwise legally vested with the care of the claimant or the claimant's estate. If a guardian or other fiduciary of the individual under legal disability has not been appointed under the law of the State of residence of the claimant, payment may be made to any person who is responsible for the care of the claimant, and the payment bars recovery by any other person.

(2) Determinations under paragraph (1) shall be made by the Secretary of Labor and certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

(e)(1) Payments under this Act which would otherwise be made to a person under this Act shall be made (in whole or in part) to another person if and to the extent expressly provided for in the terms of any court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation, or the terms of any court order or court-approved property settlement agreement incident to any court decree of divorce, annulment, or legal separation. Any payment under this paragraph to a person bars recovery by any other person.

(2) Paragraph (1) shall only apply to payments made by the Secretary of the Treasury under this Act after the date of receipt by both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Labor of written notice of such decree, order, or agreement, and such additional information and documentation as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe.

(3) As used in this subsection, the term "court" means any court of any State.

(f)(1) Amounts payable under this Act are not assignable, either in law or equity, or subject to execution, levy, attachment, garnishment, or other legal process, except as otherwise may be provided by Federal law.

(2) Recovery of payments under this Act may not be made from an individual in any case in which the Secretary of Labor determines that the individual is without fault and recovery would be against equity and good conscience.

INTERAGENCY COORDINATION AND COOPERATION

SEC. 9. (a) The Secretary of Labor may make such arrangements or agreements with other departments, agencies, or establishments of the United States for cooperation or mutual assistance in the performance of their respective functions under this Act as are necessary and appropriate to avoid unnecessary expense and duplication of functions.

(b) The Secretary of Labor may use, as appropriate, on a reimbursable or other basis, the facilities or services of any department, agency, or establishment of the United States or of any State or political subdivision thereof, including the services of any of its employees, with the lawful consent of such department, agency, or establishment.

(c)(1) Each department, agency, or establishment of the United States shall cooperate with the Secretary of Labor and, to the extent necessary and appropriate, provide such information and facilities as the Secretary may request for his assistance in the performance of the Secretary's functions under this Act.

(2) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide the Secretary of Labor with such records, determined by the Secretary of Labor to be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, as the Secretary of Labor may request.

(3) Section 6103(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to statistical use of returns and return information) is amended—

(A) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5); and

(B) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraph:

"(4) DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.—Returns and return information shall be open to inspection by or disclosure to officers and employees of the Department of Labor whose official duties require such inspection or disclosure for the purpose of, but only to the extent necessary in, considering such returns and return information pursuant to section 5(c)(2)(C) of the Terminated Employee Pension Restoration Act of 1980. Such inspection or disclosure shall be permitted only upon written request which sets forth the specific reason or reasons why such inspection or disclosure is necessary and which is signed by the head of the bureau or office of the Department of Labor requesting the inspection or disclosure.".

DELEGATION OF POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 10. The Secretary of Labor may delegate to any officer or employee of the Department of Labor designated by the Secretary any of the powers and duties conferred upon the Secretary by this Act to the extent necessary to effectively carry out the purposes of this Act.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 11. The Secretary of Labor shall, before the effective date set forth in section 13, prescribe the initial regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act. Regulations under this Act shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor in consultation, as appropriate, with the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 12. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1981, to the Department of Labor such sums as are necessary for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this Act (including reimbursable expenses incurred by any other department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States or of any State or political subdivision thereof).

(b) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Treasury for the purpose of making annuity payments under this Act such sums as are necessary to make such payments beginning with the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1981, and continuing until the last such payment is made.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 13. The preceding provisions of this Act (other than sections 11 and 12) shall take effect 180 days after the date of the enactment of the Act.

By Mr. STEVENS (for himself and Mr. MURKOWSKI):

S. 55. A bill to establish an Ocean and Coastal Resources Management and Development Fund from which coastal States and territories shall receive block grants, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation.

OCEAN AND COASTAL RESOURCES MANAGEMENT BLOCK GRANTS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce legislation today that is of prime importance to our Nation's future domestic energy supply and crucial to the continued protection of our precious ocean and coastal resources. This Outer Continental Shelf revenue sharing legislation will invest a small portion of our Outer Continental Shelf [OCS] revenue receipts in coastal States to improve the evaluation and development of offshore resources.

The need to increase our utilization of the Outer Continental Shelf is obvious. This legislation does not just allocate funds for the development of energy related resources. It encompasses the contributions the OCS can make in the full use of our coastal resources such as the harvesting of our fisheries and the efficient use of our ports to increase exports.

The Congress has fashioned a series of policies and enacted a number of programs to address concerns generated by the multiple use concept of our Nation's coast. Wisely, Congress has seen that the State governments, guided by national policy, are the proper stewards of the public trust in our Nation's coastline. Fisheries research and management, port development, coastal management, mitigation of the impacts of energy development, as well as the development of general infrastructure have all been federally established and financed. They have been administered by the States, with close cooperation with local governments, according to each State's needs and priorities.

Unfortunately, budgetary constraints now threaten the State/Federal partnership in the management of America's coastal resources in its present form. The State governments are being asked to assume a greater portion of national responsibilities. The benefits of coastal resource development must be shared along with the assumption of management responsibilities.

The Outer Continental Shelf Revenue Sharing Act is an ideal way to achieve the balance of responsibility between the Federal, State, and local governments. OCS revenue sharing would compensate the States for the impacts of federally initiated development. It is only with regard to OCS oil and gas development that the Federal Government has yet to acknowledge that States need and deserve financial support to evaluate and cope with the attendant impacts of offshore development.

The bill I introduce today is the same legislation that was conferenced between the House of Representatives and the Senate last fall. It is the product of a great deal of time and effort to address the concerns of coastal States with the protection and development of the Outer Continental Shelf and other coastal resources. Among its most pertinent provisions, the bill provides: First, funding as a share of OCS receipts subject to the appropriations process; second, allocation of funds based on coastal population, shoreline milage, and coastal energy facilities, as well as contribution to oil and gas leasing and production; third, eligible uses of the funds to be oriented to OCS and coastal development research, education and planning problems, and development of all coastal resources; fourth, flexibility for the States to distribute funds according to each's unique needs with direction that 33 percent go to coastal communities; fifth, recognition of the national nature of the Outer Continental Shelf by distributing minimum funding to all coastal States and territories.

In summation, Mr. President, I believe this legislation to be crucial to the future viability of our Nation's energy supplies. OCS revenue sharing would help relieve the coastal States' reservations about OCS leasing and development off their shorelines. It involves long-term fiscal prudence, balanced decisionmaking, and the recognition of the importance of all coastal resources. I am confident that if funds are shared with the States through this legislation, OCS receipts to the Treasury will be enhanced.

By Mr. ABDNOR:

S. 56. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to modify the application of the imputed interest and interest accrual rules; to the Committee on Finance.

IMPUTED INTEREST AND INTEREST ACCRUAL APPLICATION MODIFICATION

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I rise today on the first day of the new Congress to introduce legislation that should have been passed last October. My bill will prohibit the Internal Revenue Service from requiring sellers to charge high rates of interest when they finance the sale of property.

In an effort to eliminate many of the abuses prevalent in orginal-issue, deep-discount bonds, the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, Public Law 98-369, contained a provision that, beginning July 1, 1985, will require a seller who finance the sale of real property to charge a high rate of interest or the Internal Revenue Service will impute an interest rate of 120 percent of the appropriate Government security.

What this means in simple terms is government-mandated high interest rates on the sale of homes, farms and small businesses.

At a time when virtually every Member of the U.S. Congress is chastising high rates and the harm they are doing to the economy, when my colleagues on both sides of the aisle assign to others the blame for high interest rates. I cannot believe these same Members support congressionally mandated high interest rates.

We criticize bankers because they won't lower their interest rates, yet we prohibit a retiring farmer from lowering his interest rate to a young farmer trying to get into business. Although we don't hesitate to blame the Federal Reserve, the White House, Wall Street and others for high interest rates, we still have the gall to mandate high interest rates on farmers, small businesses and homeowners.

Fortunately, I am sure the people back home recognize these imputed interest rate provisions for exactly what they are—a blatant grab by Congress for more tax revenue without any regard to the effect on our Nation's small businesses, homeowners, and farmers.

This tax grab has the effect of increasing the cost of the sale to the seller, forcing the seller to absorb the higher cost, cancel the deal, or increase the price to the buyer. All of us should realize these options could have the effect of preventing a new family from owning their first home, a young man from buying a farm, or a young woman from purchasing the local drugstore.

Yes, Congress gives a lot of lip service to the economic benefits of capital gains taxation. But, with its action this summer and fall, Congress has taken away the opportunity for middle class Americans to enjoy capital gains benefits. The injustice is clear, the effect is obvious, and the time for correction is now.

In the last Congress I introduced S. 2822, which would have exempted the sale or exchange of a farm or business from the imputed interest portions of the Tax Code. I watched with interest the progress, or lack thereof, on the imputed interest legislation introduced by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER].

This situation was so appalling to me that, in August, I was prepared to attach to the Treasury appropriations bill a provision to prevent the Treasury Department from using any funds to implement or enforce the imputed interest sections of the Tax Code as they relate to the sale or exchange of a residence, farm or small business.

Unfortunately, because this provision was beyond the scope of the conference committee, needed unanimous consent of both Houses, and because Members were prepared to object, my amendment could not be attached to the conference report.

Then, in October, Senators JEPSEN and DOLE came to the body of the Senate with a proposal that passed the Senate without a single dissenting vote. That vote of support gave me a great deal of hope that Congress would truly resolve this terrible situation once and for all.

However, on October 11, the day before adjournment, Senator DOLE came to the floor with the news that the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee would agree only to a 6 month deferral during which loans under $2 million would be subject to the 9-percent test rate and farm property loan interest would be accounted for on the cash method by both the buyer and seller.

This is fine until July 1, 1985, but after that the problem will be as bad as ever. That is why I rise today to reintroduce the Jepsen-Dole imputed interest compromise. It was good, reasonable legislation in October and it is good legislation today.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent that the original speech of Senator DOLE upon joining Senator JEPSEN in proposing Senate Amendment No. 7083 be inserted in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

In his speech, Senator DOLE mentions that in the effort to correct the abuses in place prior to the enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act, Congress was "not . . . intending to force average Americans to restructure their sales of property to conform with any prescribed notion of what fair interest rates were."

The original Finance Committee report, the Ways and Means Committee report, and the Conference Committee report bear out that there was no intent to force small businesses, farmers and ranchers, or homeowners to charge higher interest rates when they sell. Not once is the effect of this provision with regard to average seller-financed real property sale mentioned in any committee report.

Congress has been given 6 months to resolve this problem. With all due respect to the number crunchers at the Joint Taxation Committee, if nothing is done, the newly enacted imputed interest provisions will not reduce the deficit but will increase the deficit because retiring farmers won't be able to sell their farm to new farmers, prospective first-time homeowners won't be able to afford the payments, and small businesses will only be affordable to the chain stores. If this happens, three American institutions—the homeowner, farmer, and shopkeeper—will die untimely and needless deaths.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation once again to get the Government out of the business of mandating high interest rates. Thank you.

I ask unanimous consent the text of the bill be reprinted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF SENATOR DOLE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this summer we enacted the imputed interest and original issue discount provisions of the Deficit Reduction Act to close loopholes which were estimated to reduce Federal receipts by approximately $2.2 billion within the next 3 years. We were not, however, intending to force average Americans to restructure their sales of property to conform with any perscribed notion of what fair interest rates were. There has been a lot of confusion on this matter and it is understandable. The concepts are complex, but the potential for abuse was real and reform was necessary.

THE ABUSES THAT SHOULD BE PROHIBITED

It may be useful to describe in summary form the type of abuses that were intended to be prohibited. There are two major types of games that taxpayers could play using the imputed interest rates and accounting rules that were in place prior to the enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act. First, by using a combination of low interest rates and the installment method of accounting, taxpayers could defer tax on installment payments beyond what they would be possible if they were required to account for economic interest in an appropriate way. Second, and more importantly, taxpayers could state deliberately low interest rates in order to argue that their basis in property which was purchased in a transaction with seller financing was far in excess of the real value of that property according to any reasonable estimate of that value. By doing this, the taxpayer could take unreasonably high amounts of investment tax credits and correspondingly high depreciation deductions. These deductions could far outweigh the value of interest-paid deductions which would be available if the real value of the property were used amounts were recharacterized as interest.

The Internal Revenue Service could argue that the fair market value of the property really was not as high as the taxpayer was claiming and thus disallow some of the credits and depreciation, but reputable law firms were giving opinions that the taxpayer had a reasonable basis for taking the position that the low rates of interest could be used as a basis for determining the value of the property.

These were not hypothetical cases—they were real and prospectuses were printed showing how investors take advantage of this tax reduction scheme.

LIMITATIONS ARE APPROPRIATE

We did not, however, intend to adversely affect the average American who decided that it was in his best interest to provide financing in order to sell a piece of property. While it is undoubtedly appropriate to conform the tax laws to economic reality, the practical reality that some taxpayers are less sophisticated than others should also be taken into account.

This amendment strikes a balance between our rightful concern that tax abuses should be curtailed and the concern that average Americans should not have to be a tax specialist in order to comply with the law. The amendment will conform the tax law to economic reality for large transactions with the greatest potential for abuse to the economic reality of the deal. It will, however, not require individuals selling their residences or their vacation homes, people selling their small businesses or their family farm to learn any substantial new rules with respect to the calculation or reporting for tax purposes of interest when they finance their sale.

The amendment also addresses the concern that even larger sales of real estate were being forced to recharacterize too much of their gain from a transaction as interest income rather than gain. And finally, the amendment provides additional relief, on a transitional basis, to give taxpayers more time even in the larger transactions to adapt to the new rules. Of course, there are a number of additional protections to make the application of the tax law in these types of transactions fairer recognizing the need for stability in interest rates in order to avoid discouraging the sales of property.

A COMPROMISE SOLUTION

Probably the best indication that this is a reasonable compromise between the needs of taxpayers and the concerns of the Federal Treasury is the groups who have helped us design it and who unequivocally support it. These groups include the American Land Development Association, the National Apartment Association, the National Association of Homebuilders, the National Association of Realtors, the National Federation of Independent Business, the National Multi-Housing Council, and the National Small Business Association. Mr. President, this is a very broad spectrum of support. To my knowledge, the only groups who have not endorsed this compromise represent those who engage in the largest commercial real estate transactions with the greatest opportunity for tax abuse. The groups who represent the average taxpayer—people selling their own homes or farms, people selling their business, and people building single family homes and apartment buildings—all support this compromise.

TREASURY'S POSITION

On the other side, Treasury also believes that this compromise goes far to meet the objections of taxpayers while curtailing the worst abuses. They would still prefer the provisions enacted this summer, but acknowledge that changes of the type included in this amendment are appropriate. They support this amendment although they think we may have provided too much relief for taxpayers.

This Senator acknowledges that this is not the simplest legislation that would be possible. However, the structure of the amendment reflects the fact that this is a compromise which reflects the special needs of taxpayers in different positions. We worked carefully with representatives of these taxpayers to assure that we accommodated their needs without spending up new loopholes. I am confident we have succeeded.

The compromise follows:

IMPUTED INTEREST COMPROMISE

1. RESIDENCES

a. General rule

A person who sells his residence or vacation home residence with a purchase price of $250,000 or less would be subject to a 9 percent imputed interest test rate.

If commercial interest rates went down, Treasury would have the authority to lower the 9 percent rate. They would not have authority to raise the 9 percent rate.

The 9 percent rate would apply to both principal residences (at the time of the sale) and vacation homes. Vacation homes would be defined as residences on which depreciation was not allowable for the 2 years before the sale. Inventory property (e.g., a homebuilder's inventory) would not qualify for this rule.

If the purchase price is greater than $250,000, the applicable test rate would be a weighted "blend" of 9 percent and 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate.

No sale-leasebacks would be allowed and both buyer and seller would account for the transaction on a cash basis.

b. Dealer property

A homebuilder or realtor selling a residence which he holds in inventory and sells for a purchase price of $250,000 or less would be subject to an imputed interest rate of 80 percent of the applicable Treasury rate (10.5 percent for the first 6 months of 1985).

The 80 percent rate would apply to sales of homes to be occupied by the owner. It would not apply to residences on which depreciation is claimed by the buyer. If the buyer subsequently took depreciation on the property, the benefit of the 80 percent rate would be recaptured.

If the purchase price is greater than $250,000, the applicable test rate would be a weighted "blend" of 80 percent of the Federal rate and 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate.

For borrowings to carry seller-financing, interest deductions on the borrowing would be limited to current interest income, including imputed interest, recognized on seller financing; deferred interest deductions would be allowed on a pro-rate basis as the homebuyer made payments on his mortgage.

The seller would account for the seller financing on an accrual basis under the original issue discount rules.

2. FARMS AND RANCHES

A farm or ranch with a purchase price of not more than $2 million would also be subject to a 9 percent test rate.

Treasury would have authority only to lower the rate, if appropriate.

The property must have been used by any person (not necessarily the seller) as a farm or ranch for the 3 prior years and the purchasers must intend to use the property as a farm or ranch.

If the purchase price is over $2 million, the test rate will be a weighted blend of 9 percent and the applicable Federal rate.

No sale-leasebacks would be allowed, both buyer and seller would account for the transaction on a cash basis, and the 9 percent rate would not apply to new section 38 (investment tax credit) property. The seller would not be required to liquidate his farm interests.

3. SMALL BUSINESS

This rule would apply only to businesses with a value of no more than $1 million. The sale of a business with a purchase price of $1 million or less would be subject to a 9 percent test rate.

Treasury would have the authority only to lower the rate, if appropriate.

The 9 percent rate would apply to sale of a complete line of such business and to a sale of an ownership interest in such a business

If the business is worth more than $1 million, then the test rate will be a weighted "blend" of 9 percent and 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate.

No sale-leasebacks would be allowed, both the buyer and seller would account for the transaction on a cash basis, and the 9 percent rate would not apply to new section 38 property.

4. MEDIUM-SIZED REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS

For sales of real property involving no more than $4 million of deferred payments, the applicable rate would be 80 percent of the applicable Federal rate (about 10.5 percent for the first 6 months of 1985).

Payments under the agreement would not extend for more than 12 years. Any amount exceeding the $4 million amount would be subject to a rate equal to 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate. Buyer and seller would account for the transaction on a cash basis.

5. LARGE REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS

For sales of property involving more than $4 million of deferred payments, the test interest rate would be 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate.

The maximum rate for transactions subject to the 100 percent of the Federal rate would be 11 percent for the first 6 months of 1985. Thereafter, the rate could be increased no more than 50 basis points (0.5 percent) every 6 months until the rate equaled 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate.

The payments would be accounted for under the original issue discount rules.

Eighty percent of interest due under the contract would be required to be paid currently.

6. OTHER TRANSACTIONS

Transactions not meeting any of the preceding rules would have a test rate of 110 percent of the applicable Federal rate

7. ASSUMPTIONS

Assumptions of loans originally entered into before date of enactment of these rules would be grandfathered under pre-Deficit Reduction Act rules. Sales of principal residences and vacation homes would also be exempt from the new assumption rules together with other transactions where the Secretary of Treasury determined there was no tax avoidance problem.

8. LIMITATION OF INCREASE IN RATES

If applicable Federal rate increases by more than 2 percent during a 6-month period, the imputed interest test rate generally may not be increased by more than half the amount of the increase (with a minimum of 1 percent).

If there is a significant drop in interest rates, the Secretary of Treasury may reduce the imputed interest rate to reflect the drop in rates.

Mr. DOLE. I am pleased that we were able to work out a compromise bill on imputed interest that satisfies the legitimate tax policy concerns which led to the administration's original proposal, and also satisfies the concerns of homeowners, farmers and ranchers, small businesses, and the major real estate associations that have endorsed the compromise.

I have every reason to believe the bill should also be satisfactory to Members, since it permits nonabusive seller financing to be provided on terms essentially similar to existing practice in the real estate industry, while preventing tax shelters that overvalue the tax bais of depreciable property or mismtach the timing of interest income and interest deductions.

The only remaining concern that I am aware of relates to the problem of complexity. I would like to address that concern in detail. Despite the fact that the compromise bill is long—I believe it will not be complex or difficult to apply in practice.

Although there are essentially five new rules in the bill, the vast majority of transactions will be clearly within one rule or another. And once the seller or his real estate agent knows which rule applies—the rules are relatively simple and straightforward to apply.

RULE NO. 1. HOMEOWNERS

The vast majority of homeowners selling their principal residences or vacation homes have one very simple rule to apply. Seller financing must provide for 9 percent compound interest, and interest income and deductions are accounted for on the cash basis. In the relatively infrequent case where a home is sold for more than $250,000, the required interest rate is not 9 percent but a blended interest rate somewhat higher than 9 percent. The blend is simple artithmetic calculation that I am confident every licensed realtor and every seller of a $250,000 residence will be able to compute.

RULE NO. 2. FARMS AND RANCHES

Every farmer or rancher selling farm land or ranch property for less than $2 million also has a very simple rule to apply. The transaction must state 9 percent compound interest, and income and deductions are computed on the cash method. If the sale exceeds $2 million a blended interest rate applies involving a simple arithmetic computation, and accounting is done on the accrual method. Once again, these computations are not at all burdensome or complex in the context of a $2 million transaction.

RULE NO. 3. SMALL BUSINESSES

Any small businessman selling his business, or a separate line of business, or buying out one or more of his partners also has a simple rule. The 9-percent interest rate applies, and cash method accounting applies. Only if the business is worth more than $1 million does the owner have to think about anything else. And the same arithmetic blending formula for interest rates applies for such larger businesses.

RULES 4. SMALL REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS

For all small real estate transactions, involving less than around $1 million, the rule is also simple. State an interest rate equal to 80 percent of the Federal rate on a note no longer than 12 years, and the imputed interest rules are satisfied. That will satisfy the exception for transactions with less than $4 million of deferred payments.

RULE NO 5. LARGER ESTATE TRANSACTIONS

For sale of real estate involving more than $4 million of deferred payments—about a $1 million purchase price if all interest is deferred—there are several options, and several computations that must be done if a taxpayer wants to figure out all of his choices. But, again, $1 million real estate deals are not done today without figuring the tax consequences and the options for different kinds of depreciation and other tax benefits. So I do not believe it will be too complex to offer sophisticated real estate investors some choices on the imputed interest rules.

S. 56

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TAX TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DEFERRED PAYMENTS.

(a) REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES UNDER SECTION 483.—Section 483 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to interest on certain deferred payments) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (f), (g), and (h) as subsections (h), (i), and (j), and

(2) by striking out subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"(e) REDUCED RATE OF INTEREST IN CASE OF CERTAIN SALES OF RESIDENCES, FARMS, OR TRADES OR BUSINESSES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any debt instrument arising from a sale or exchange to which this subsection applies, the discount rate under subsection (b) or (c)(1)(B) shall be the rate prescribed by the Secretary in regulations but shall not be greater than 10 percent and 9 percent, respectively.

"(2) SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH THIS SUBSECTION APPLIES.—This subsection shall apply to any of the following sales or exchanges:

"(A) RESIDENCES.—Any sale or exchange of a residence by an individual, an estate, or a testamentary trust, but only if—

"(i) either—

"(I) such residence on the date of such sale or exchange (or in the case of an estate or testamentary trust, on the date of death of the decedent) was the principal residence (within the meaning of section 1034) of the individual or decedent, or

"(II) during the 2-year period ending on such date, no substantial portion of such residence was of a character subject to an allowance under this title for depreciation (or amortization in lieu thereof) in the hands of such individual or decedent, and

"(ii) such residence was not at any time, in the hands of such individual, estate, testamentary trust, or decedent, described in section 1221(1) (relating to inventory, etc.).

"(B) FARMS.—Any sale or exchange by a qualified person of—

"(i) real property which was used as a farm (within the meaning of section 6420(c)(2)) at all times during the 3-year period ending on the date of such sale or exchange, or

"(ii) tangible personal property which was used in the active conduct of the trade or business of farming on such farm and is sold in connection with the sale of such farm, but only if such property is sold or exchanged for use in the active conduct of the trade or business of farming by the transferee of such property.

"(C) TRADES OR BUSINESSES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Any sale or exchange by a qualified person of any trade or business.

"(ii) APPLICATION WITH SUBPARAGRAPH (B).—This subparagraph shall not apply to any sale or exchange of any property described in subparagraph (B).

"(iii) NEW SECTION 38 PROPERTY.—This subparagraph shall not apply to the sale or exchange of any property which, in the hands of the transferee, is new section 38 property.

"(3) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) shall apply to any debt instrument to the extent that the sales price does not exceed the applicable limit with respect to such sale or exchange.

"(B) APPLICABLE LIMIT DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'applicable limit' means the limit determined in accordance with the following table:

"If the transaction is described in:	The limit is:
Paragraph (2)(A)	$250,000
Paragraph (2)(B)	$2,000,000
Paragraph (2)(C)	$1,000,000.

"(4) BLENDED RATE WHERE SALES PRICE EXCEEDS APPLICABLE LIMIT.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which this subsection applies with respect to which the sales price exceeds the applicable limit—

"(A) TEST RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (c)(1)(B) shall, in lieu of the rate under paragraph (1), be equal to the sum of—

"(i) 9 percent, multiplied by a fraction the numerator of which is the applicable limit and the denominator of which is the sales price, and

"(ii) 110 percent of the applicable Federal rate, multiplied by a fraction—

"(I) the numerator of which is the sales price minus the applicable limit, and

"(II) the denominator of which is the sales price.

In the case of a transaction described in paragraph (2)(A), clause (ii) shall be applied by substituting '100 percent' for '110 percent'.

"(B) IMPUTED RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (b) shall, in lieu of the rate under paragraph (1), be equal to the rate determined under subparagraph (A) by substituting '10 percent' for '9 percent' and, except in the case of any transaction described in paragraph (2)(A), '120 percent' for '110 percent' each place it appears.

"(C) RATES AS ADJUSTED.—For purposes of this paragraph, if the Secretary prescribes, pursuant to paragraph (1), a lower discount rate under subsection (c)(1)(B) or (b) than the maximum rate allowed under paragraph (1), such lower rate shall apply in lieu of '9 percent' or '10 percent' in subparagraphs (A)(i) or (B), respectively.

"(5) AGGREGATION AND ALLOCATION RULES.—For purposes of this subsection, except as provided in regulations—

"(A) DEBT INSTRUMENTS.—All debt instruments arising from a transaction (or any series of related transactions) shall be treated as 1 debt instrument.

"(B) SALES AND EXCHANGES.—All sales and exchanges which are part of the same transaction (or a series of related transactions) shall be treated as 1 sale or exchange.

"(C) PRORATION OF APPLICABLE LIMIT WHERE MORE THAN ONE PERSON HOLDS AN INTEREST.—In the case of a sale or exchange of any property (or a trade or business) described in paragraph (2) with respect to which there is more than 1 owner, the applicable limit under paragraph (3) shall be apportioned among each owner on the basis of the ratio which the fair market value of such owner's interest bears to the fair market value of all interests of such owners.

"(6) APPLICATION WITH SUBSECTION (h).—In the case of any qualified sale (as defined in subsection (h)(2)), the applicable limit determined under paragraph (3) shall be reduced by the amount of any debt instrument to which subsection (h)(1) applies.

"(7) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) QUALIFIED PERSON DEFINED.—The term 'qualified person' means—

"(i) a person who—

"(I) is an individual, estate, or testamentary trust,

"(II) is a corporation which immediately prior to the date of the sale or exchange has 35 or fewer shareholders, or

"(III) is a partnership which immediately prior to the date of the sale or exchange has 35 or fewer partners,

"(ii) is a 10-percent owner of a farm or a trade or business,

"(iii) pursuant to a plan, disposes of—

"(I) an interest in a farm or farm property, or

"(II) his entire interest in a trade or business and all substantially similar trades or businesses, and

"(iv) the ownership interest of whom may be readily established by reason of qualified allocations of the type described in section 168(j)(9)(B), one class of stock, or the like).

"(B) 10-PERCENT OWNER DEFINED.—The term '10-percent owner' means a person having at least a 10-percent ownership interest, applying the attribution rules of section 318 (other than subsection (a)(4)).

"(C) SALES PRICE DEFINED.—The term 'sales price' means the sum of—

"(i) money and fair market value of property received in the sale or exchange, plus

"(ii) the stated principal amount of any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange.

"(D) TRADE OR BUSINESS DEFINED.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'trade or business' means any trade or business, including any line of business, qualifying as an active trade or business within the meaning of section 355.

"(ii) RENTAL OF REAL PROPERTY.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the holding of real property for rental shall not be treated as an active trade or business.

"(f) SPECIAL TEST RATES FOR SALES OR EXCHANGES INVOLVING CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which this subsection applies, subsection (c)(1)(B) shall be applied by substituting—

"(A) '80 percent' for '110 percent' in the case of any debt instrument described in paragraph (3), and

"(B) '100 percent' for '110 percent' in the case of any debt instrument described in paragraph (4).

"(2) SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH THIS SUBSECTION APPLIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this paragraph, this subsection applies to any sale or exchange of—

"(i) land, or

"(ii) real property described in subparagraph (D) or (F) of subsection (c)(2) of section 168 (whether or not such property is of a character subject to an allowance under this title for depreciation (or amortization in lieu thereof) in the hands of the purchaser), including de minimis amounts of tangible personal property associated with such real property.

"(B) CERTAIN PROPERTY NOT INCLUDED.—This subsection shall not apply to any sale or exchange—

"(i) of new section 38 property, or

"(ii) with respect to which the transferor and transferee are related persons.

"(3) DEBT INSTRUMENTS TO WHICH 80 PERCENT RATE APPLIES.—A debt instrument is described in this paragraph if—

"(A) the term of the instrument (determined with regard to any extension or renewal) is not greater than the lesser of—

"(i) 12 years, or

"(ii) in the case of a debt instrument issued in exchange for recovery property, ⅔ of the shortest recovery period under section 168 for such property, and

"(B) the total deferred payments under such instrument, when added to the sum of the total deferred payments under all other debt instruments issued in connection with the sale or exchange—

"(i) to which this paragraph applies, and

"(ii) which were issued before such instrument was issued,

do not exceed $4,000,000.

"(4) DEBT INSTRUMENTS TO WHICH 100 PERCENT RATE APPLIES.—A debt instrument is described in this paragraph if—

"(A) the rate of interest stated in the instrument is not less than the applicable Federal rate,

"(B) such instrument provides for—

"(i) the unconditional payment each year of at least 80 percent of the interest so stated, or

"(ii) after the close of the 2-year period beginning on the date such instrument was issued the instrument provides the unconditional payment each year of all interest accruing thereunder for that year, and

"(C) such instrument is not described in paragraph (3).

"(5) SPECIAL RULES FOR DETERMINATION OF DISCOUNT RATES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the applicable Federal rate determined under section 1274(d) for any period after June 30, 1985 (other than the Federal short-term rate) exceeds by more than 2 percentage points such rate for the preceding period as limited by this paragraph, such applicable Federal rate shall not exceed the greater of—

"(i) the sum of—

"(I) such applicable Federal rate for such preceding period, plus

"(II) one-half of such excess, or

"(ii) the highest such applicable Federal rate during the 2-year period before the period for which such determination was made after the application of this paragraph.

"(B) SPECIAL RULES FOR 1985 AND 1986.—NOTWITHSTANDING ANY OTHER PROVISION OF THIS SECTION, IN THE CASE OF ANY SALE OR EXCHANGE WITH RESPECT TO WHICH A BINDING CONTRACT WAS ENTERED INTO DURING 1985 OR 1986—

"(i) TEST RATE.—The discount rate for purposes of applying subsection (c)(1)(B) to any debt instrument described in paragraph (3) shall not be greater than the rate determined in accordance with the following table:

"For contracts entered into during the period:	The rate is:
Jan. 1–June 30, 1985	10.5
July 1–Dec. 31, 1985	11
Jan. 1–June 30, 1986	11.5
July 1–Dec. 31, 1986	12.

For purposes of applying subsection (c)(1)(B) to any debt instrument described in paragraph (4), the discount rate shall not be greater than the rate determined in accordance with the table, plus one-half percentage point.

"(ii) IMPUTED RATE.—The discount rate for purposes of applying subsection (b) to any debt instrument described in paragraph (3) or (4) shall not be greater than the rate determined under clause (i), plus 1 percentage point.

"(6) AGGREGATION RULES.—For purposes of this subsection, all sales and exchanges which are part of the same transaction (or a series of related transactions) shall be treated as 1 sale or exchange.

"(7) RELATED PERSON DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection and subsection (g), the term 'related person' means a person who is related (within the meaning of section 267(b) or section 707(b)(1)) to another person other than a qualified 5-percent or less partner (within the meaning of section 267(e)(5)(B)).

"(g) SPECIAL RULES FOR APPLICATION OF THIS SECTION.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) APPLICATION OF SUBSECTIONS (e) AND (f).—In the case of any sale or exchange, either subsection (e) or subsection (f) may be applied, but not both.

"(2) TREATMENT OF ASSUMPTIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if, after December 31, 1984, any person—

"(i) assumes any debt obligation issued after October 15, 1984, or described in subparagraph (C), in connection with the sale or exchange of any property, or

"(ii) takes such property subject to any such debt obligation, and the terms and conditions of such debt obligation are not changed, then this section shall apply only to the person assuming, or taking property subject to, such obligation and the obligation shall be treated as issued by the purchaser to the seller in the transaction in which such obligation was assumed or the property taken subject to such obligation.

"(B) OTHER ASSUMPTIONS.—In the case of any assumption to which subparagraph (A) does not apply, the rules regarding assumptions as in effect prior to the enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 shall apply.

"(C) OBLIGATIONS DESCRIBED IN THIS SUBPARAGRAPH.—A debt obligation is described in this subparagraph if such obligation—

"(i) was issued on or before October 15, 1984, and

"(ii) was assumed (or property was taken subject to such obligation) in connection with the sale or exchange of property (including a deemed sale under section 338(a)) the sales price of which is greater than $100,000,000.

"(D) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be appropriate to effect the purpose of this subsection, including regulations relating to tax-exempt obligations, government subsidized loans, or other similar instruments.

"(E) CERTAIN EXEMPT TRANSACTIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations under which any transaction shall be exempt from the application of this paragraph if such exemption is not likely to significantly reduce the tax liability of the purchaser by reason of the overstatement of the adjusted basis of the acquired asset.

"(3) FAIR MARKET VALUE RULE IN POTENTIALLY ABUSIVE CASES.—In the case of any potentially abusive situation (within the meaning of section 1274(b)(3)(B)), the principal amount of any debt instrument received in any sale or exchange of property to which this section applies shall be the fair market value of such property adjusted to take into account other consideration involved in the transaction.

"(4) SALE-LEASEBACKS.—Subsections (e) and (f) shall not apply to any sale or exchange if, pursuant to a plan, the transferor or any related person leases such property.

"(5) RULES NOT TO APPLY WHERE PREPAYMENT PROHIBITED.—Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any obligation arising from a loan from a third-party creditor, pursuant to which the obligor is not permitted to pay the instrument prior to maturity.

"(6) NO IMPUTATION RATE WHERE RESTRICTIONS ON STATED INTEREST APPLY.—Except as otherwise provided in regulations, in any case in which State law applicable to a transaction prohibits the parties from stating interest sufficient to satisfy the applicable rate under subsection (c)(1)(B), the rate under subsection (b) shall be considered equal to the rate so applicable under subsection (c)(1)(B).".

(b) INTEREST INCOME AND DEDUCTIONS COMPUTED ON CASH BASIS IN CERTAIN CASES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1274 of such Code (relating to determination of issue price in the case of certain debt instruments issued for property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH INTEREST RULES OF SECTION 483 APPLY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subpart—

"(1) TRANSACTIONS TO WHICH SECTION 483(e) APPLIES.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which section 483(e) applies—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), any inclusion in income or deduction under this title with respect to interest on any debt instrument issued in connection with such sale or exchange shall be computed on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(B) SALES PRICE EXCEEDS APPLICABLE LIMIT.—In any case in which the sales price exceeds the applicable limit under section 483(e)(3)—

"(i) except in the case of any transaction to which section 483(e)(2)(A) applies, subparagraph (A) shall not apply, and

"(ii) the discount rates under subsections (c)(3) and (b)(2)(B) shall be equal to the rates determined under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 483(e)(4).

"(2) TRANSACTIONS TO WHICH SECTION 483(F) APPLIES.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which section 483(f) applies—

"(A) TRANSACTIONS WITH 80 PERCENT TEST RATE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), any inclusion in income or deduction under this title with respect to interest on any debt instrument described in section 483(f)(3) shall be computed on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(ii) SPECIAL RULE FOR TRANSACTIONS NOT QUALIFYING FOR 80 PERCENT TEST RATE.—Clause (i) shall not apply to any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange if, in addition to such instrument, a debt instrument not described in section 483(f)(3) is issued in such sale or exchange.

"(B) TRANSACTIONS TO WHICH SUBPARAGRAPH (A) DOES NOT APPLY.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except in the case of property described in subsection (e)(2)(A) of section 483, if subparagraph (A) does not apply to any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange, subsection (c)(3) shall be applied—

"(I) in the case of any debt instrument described in section 483(f)(4), by substituting '100 percent' for '110 percent', and

"(II) in the case of any debt instrument described in section 483(f)(3), by substituting '80 percent' for '110 percent'.

"(ii) SPECIAL RULES FOR 1985 AND 1986.—In the case of any debt instrument to which clause (i) applies issued during 1985 or 1986, the discount rate under subsection (c)(3) shall not be greater than the rate determined under section 483(f)(5).

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR HOLDING AND TRANSFER OF DEBT OBLIGATION.—

"(A) Paragraphs (1)(A) and (2)(A) shall apply to the holder of a debt obligation only if such obligation is—

"(i) held by the first obligee of such obligation or such obligee's spouse or estate, and

"(ii) secured by the property sold or exchanged in the transaction in which such obligation is issued.

"(B) Except as otherwise provided in regulations, in the case of a transfer of property by the obligor in which the obligation is not satisfied and the transferee does not become liable to pay such obligation to the first obligee, any deduction for interest on any indebtedness paid or incurred by the transferee to the immediate transferor attributable to such obligation shall be deferred until such time as such deduction would have been allowed if such obligation had been assumed by the transferee.

"(C) In any case in which the transferee assumes or takes property subject to any obligation under subparagraph (A) or is considered to do so under subparagraph (B), the transferee shall compute the amount of the deduction for any interest on such obligation on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(4) SUBSECTION ALSO TO APPLY TO DEBT USED TO CARRY OBLIGATIONS.—In any case in which an obligor of a debt obligation to which paragraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) applies pays or incurs interest on indebtedness to carry such debt obligation, any deduction for such interest shall be deferred to the extent necessary to achieve a proper matching of interest income and expense.

"(5) REGULATIONS TO PREVENT ABUSE OF REQUIRED CASH ACCOUNTING.—The Secretary may by regulation prescribe rules to prevent the mismatching of interest income and interest deductions in connection with obligations on which interest is computed on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(6) OTHER RULES APPLY.—For purposes of this subsection, rules similar to the rules under subparagraphs (B) and (D) of section 483(g)(2) shall apply.".

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR ASSUMPTIONS.—Paragraph (4) of section 1274(c) of such Code (relating to debt obligations to which section applies) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) TREATMENT OF ASSUMPTIONS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except in the case of property described in subsection (e)(2)(A) of section 483, if, after December 31, 1984, any person—

"(I) assumes any debt obligation issued after October 15, 1984, or described in clause (ii) in connection with the sale or exchange of any property, or

"(II) takes such property subject to any such debt obligation, and the terms and conditions of such debt obligation are not changed, then this section shall apply only to the person assuming, or taking property subject to, such obligation and the obligation shall be treated as issued by the purchaser to the seller in the transaction in which such obligation was assumed or the property taken subject to such obligation.

"(ii) OBLIGATION DESCRIBED IN THIS CLAUSE.—A debt obligation is described in this clause if such obligation—

"(I) was issued on or before October 15, 1984, and

"(II) was assumed (or property was taken subject to such obligation) in connection with the sale or exchange of property (including a deemed sale under section 338(a)) the sales price of which is greater than $100,000,000.

"(iii) CERTAIN EXEMPT TRANSACTIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations under which any transaction would be exempt from the application of this subparagraph if such exemption would not significantly reduce the tax liability of the purchaser by reason of the overstatement of the adjusted basis of the acquired asset.

"(iv) OTHER ASSUMPTIONS.—In the case of any assumption to which subparagraph (A) does not apply, the rules regarding assumptions as in effect prior to the enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 shall apply.

"(v) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be appropriate to effect the purpose of this subsection, including regulations relating to tax-exempt obligations, government subsidized loans, or other similar instruments.".

(c) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN SALES OR EXCHANGES OF RESIDENCES BY DEALERS IN SUCH PROPERTY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1274 of such Code is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN SALES OR EXCHANGES OF RESIDENCES BY DEALERS IN SUCH PROPERTY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subpart—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any debt instrument described in paragraph (4) arising from a sale or exchange to which this subsection applies—

"(A) subsection (c)(3) shall be applied by substituting '80 percent' for '110 percent', and

"(B) subsection (b)(2)(B) shall be applied by substituting '110 percent' for '120 percent'.

"(2) SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH THIS SUBSECTION APPLIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—This subsection applies to any sale or exchange of any residence by a dealer who holds such residence as section 1221(1) property to a person who intends to occupy such residence if the sales price of such residence does not exceed $250,000.

"(B) PRORATION OF APPLICABLE LIMIT WHERE MORE THAN ONE PERSON HOLDS AN INTEREST.—In the case of a sale or exchange of any property described in subparagraph (A) with respect to which there is more than 1 owner, the applicable limit under subparagraph (A) shall be apportioned among each owner on the basis of the ratio which the fair market value of such owner's interest bears to the fair market value of all interests of such owners.

"(3) BLENDED RATE WHERE SALES PRICE EXCEEDS $250,000.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which this subsection would otherwise apply with respect to which the sales price exceeds $250,000—

"(A) TEST RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (c)(3) shall, in lieu of the rate under paragraph (1)(A), be equal to the sum of—

"(i) 80 percent, multiplied by a fraction the numerator of which is $250,000 and the denominator of which is the sales price, and

"(ii) 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate, multiplied by a fraction—

"(I) the numerator of which is the sales price minus $250,000, and

"(II) the denominator of which is the sales price.

"(B) IMPUTED RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (b)(2)(B) shall be the rate under paragraph (1)(B).

"(4) DEBT INSTRUMENT.—A debt instrument is described in this paragraph if it provides conspicuous notice to the obligor in a manner prescribed by regulations that if the obligor of such instrument places the residence in service in a trade or business the depreciation rules under section 168(f)(16) shall apply.

"(5) SALES PRICE DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'sales price' means—

"(i) money and fair market value of property received in the sale or exchange, plus

"(ii) the stated principal amount of any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange.

"(6) RULES RELATING TO INTEREST TO CARRY DEALER OBLIGATIONS ARISING UNDER THIS SUBSECTION.—

"(A) EXCESS DEDUCTIONS DISALLOWED.—For each year the interest expense paid or incurred on any debt incurred or continued to carry any dealer obligation shall be disallowed to the extent such expense exceeds interest income includable with respect to such dealer obligation for such year.

"(B) DISALLOWED INTEREST EXPENSE ALLOWED IN SUBSEQUENT YEARS.—For any year the amount of disallowed interest expense shall be allowed as a deduction with respect to any dealer obligation in an amount equal to the disallowed interest expense as of the close of such year (not including any amount previously allowed under this subparagraph) multiplied by a fraction—

"(i) the numerator of which is the sum of the principal payments on such dealer obligation made in such year, and

"(ii) the denominator of which is the total amount of principal outstanding on such dealer obligation at the beginning of such year.

"(C) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) DEALER OBLIGATION DEFINED.—The term 'dealer obligation' means an obligation arising pursuant to a transaction to which paragraph (1) of this subsection applies.

"(ii) DISALLOWED INTEREST EXPENSE DEFINED.—The term 'disallowed interest expense' means the aggregate amount of interest expense disallowed under subparagraph (A) with respect to any dealer obligation.

"(D) NO INFERENCE.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to imply that any transaction described in this paragraph is or is not subject to the rules of section 453B, and any determination of such issue shall be made as if this paragraph had not been enacted.".

(d) RULE WHERE SPECIAL STATE LAW APPLIES.—Section 1274 of such Code is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) NO IMPUTATION RATE WHERE RESTRICTIONS ON STATED INTEREST APPLY.—Except as otherwise provided in regulations, in any case in which State law applicable to a transaction prohibits the parties from stating interest sufficient to result in an adequate stated interest in the transaction, a rule similar to the rule of section 483(g)(6) shall apply.".

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Paragraph (4) of section 1274(c) of such Code (relating to certain excepted debt instruments) is amended—

(1) by striking out subparagraphs (A) and (B),

(2) by striking out "section 483(e)" and "SECTION 483(e)" in subparagraph (F) and the heading to subparagraph (F), respectively, and inserting in lieu thereof "section 483(i)" and "SECTION 483(i)", respectively, and

(3) by redesignating subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), and (F) as subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D), respectively.

(f) DEPRECIATION.—Subsection (f) of section 168 of such Code (relating to accelerated cost recovery system) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph—

"(16) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN RESIDENCES.—In the case of any debt instrument described in section 1274(f)(1), the original principal amount of the debt instrument shall be deemed to be the lesser of—

"(A) the stated principal amount, or

"(B) the imputed principal amount determined by applying section 1274(f) using a discount rate of 110 percent of the applicable Federal rate at the time the debt was issued.".

(g) FAIR MARKET VALUE IN POTENTIALLY ABUSIVE SITUATIONS.—Subparagraph (B) of section 1274(b)(3) of such Code (relating to fair market value rule in potentially abusive situations) is amended in clause (ii), by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (III), by redesignating subclause (IV) as subclause (V), and by adding after subclause (III) the following new subclause:

"(IV) deferred interest, or".

(h) DETERMINATION OF APPLICABLE FEDERAL RATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 1274(d) of such Code (relating to determination of applicable Federal rate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) AUTHORITY FOR SECRETARY TO DETERMINE RATE MORE FREQUENTLY.—If there is a significant decrease in any applicable Federal rate following any 6-month test period referred to in subparagraph (B), the Secretary may determine the applicable Federal rate on the basis of a more recent period (not less than 30 days) as he determines appropriate to reflect such decrease.".

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1984.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any debt instrument issued during the first 6 months of 1985 pursuant to a sale or exchange for which a binding contract was entered into during 1984, the applicable Federal rate for purposes of sections 483 and 1274 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be 10 percent.

(B) PARAGRAPH NOT TO APPLY.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any debt instrument to which section 483(e) or (f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by this section, applies.

(i) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect as if included in the amendments made by section 41 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

By Mr. ABDNOR:

S. 57. A bill to provide for a graduated reduction of budget deficit of the Federal Government; referred jointly pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, to the Committees on the Budget and Governmental Affairs with instructions that if one committee reports, the other committee has 30 days of continuous session to report or be discharged.

DEFICIT REDUCTION ACT

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, huge Government budget deficits have our country in serious financial straits. In 1980, the Federal budget deficit was about $60 billion. It was nearly triple that amount last year.

These deficits have already put us in uncharted economic waters. The Congressional Budget Office projects that the crisis will continue to worsen and that between 1984 and 1989 deficits will average 5.4 percent of the gross national product. This compares with an average of 1.7 percent for the period 1965 to 1981. As a result, interest on the national debt is skyrocketing and is far and away the most rapidly growing segment of the Federal budget.

By now, two things are clear. First, huge deficits are a driving force behind high interest rates. Second, they contribute to an overvalued dollar, and that in turn aggravates our trade deficits, which are already at record levels.

As a South Dakotan, I'm especially aware of the impact on agriculture. Our farmers and ranchers are on the ropes through no fault of their own. In fact, they are by far the most efficient producers of food the world has ever seen.

The blame lies with Congress. A $175 billion deficit is simply not a responsible way to run this country, and our agricultural sector is paying an especially steep price for this irresponsibility—through higher costs and lost markets.

And it's not just farmers who are hurt; main street businesses are suffering too.

I would be encouraged by all the talk of reducing deficits if there were reason to believe it is anything more than rhetoric. The plain truth is that Congress has a lot of great talkers, but it has even greater spenders.

The only way we are going to achieve progress toward a balanced budget is to hamstring Congress so it can't continue to spend billions more than the taxes it takes in. That isn't a very nice way to put it, but Congress has demonstrated over and over again that it simply cannot be trusted to manage this country in a fiscally responsible fashion. When it comes to money, Members of Congress are like little kids in a candy store—they can't control themselves.

An amendment to the Constitution is one way of clamping down on Congress. I wish we didn't have to resort to such a drastic step, but there's little choice. That's why I have long been a cosponsor of the balanced budget amendment and am again an original cosponsor of that measure in this, the 99th Congress.

Still, as much as I support the amendment, I have much concern about what happens until the time it becomes law. Even if Congress passed it today, ratification by the States could be a lengthy process.

For this reason, I am today reintroducing my bill which would require immediate action to reduce the deficit. This legislation mandates steady progress over a 9-year period toward a balanced budget. The bill contains no "sacred cows." Every area is subject to scrutiny for savings. This is one Senator who is willing to do whatever it takes to get our budget under control.

My bill sets out a mandatory schedule of reductions in the deficit. Congress would be committed to adopting a budget which will reduce the fiscal year 1986 budget deficit by about $40 billion below current expectations and continue further reductions each year until 1994, when deficits would be eliminated. During the first 2 years, at least two-thirds of the reduction in the deficit must be in the form of spending reductions.

But, if Congress continues to refuse to do its job, the President is granted a carefully defined power to rescind spending authority and prevent Congress from busting the budget. If still further action proves necessary to meet the deficit-reduction targets contained in the bill, spending is to be reduced across the board. But, one way or another, deficits will steadily decline and the budget will be balanced over time.

This legislation is one of the most comprehensive, responsible, and doable long-range budget plans my colleagues will see, and I'm pleased that Senator DOMENICI has agreed to hold Budget Committee hearings on my bill.

Congress should be willing to commit itself to making measured progress in reducing deficits, and Congress should be willing to live within the budget it adopts. Enactment of this bill is a practical and achievable step to see that we don't let deficits continue to spiral out of control pending passage and ratification of the balanced budget amendment.

I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in getting serious about controlling Federal deficit spending. The continuation of the economic recovery as well as the future of our country depend upon our living up to our responsibility. And the American people have a right to expect no less.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 57

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Deficit Reduction Act".

SEC. 2. (a) Title III of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by inserting after section 301 the following new section:

"LIMITS ON BUDGET DEFICIT

"SEC. 301A. (a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, it shall not be in order in the Senate or the House of Representatives to vote on the question of agreeing to any concurrent resolution on the budget or any amendment thereto or any conference report thereon for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1985, or for any subsequent fiscal year, if the adoption of such concurrent resolution, such amendment, or such concurrent resolution in the form recommended in such conference report, would cause—

"(1) the amount of the deficit set forth as appropriate for such fiscal year in such concurrent resolution to exceed the maximum deficit amount specified for such fiscal year in subsection (b); or

"(2) (A) the recommended amount by which the revenues of the Federal Government should be increased for such fiscal year, as set forth in such concurrent resolution, to exceed an amount equal to 50 percent (33 percent in the case of fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1985, and before October 1, 1987) of the amount (if any) by which the current services deficit for such fiscal year exceeds the deficit amount set forth as appropriate for such fiscal year in such concurrent resolution, or

"(B) the recommended amounts by which current services budget authority provided for such fiscal year, and current services spending authority effective in such fiscal year are to be reduced, as set forth in such concurrent resolution, to be insufficient to reduce current services outlays during such fiscal year by an amount not less than 50 percent (67 percent in the case of fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1985, and before October 1, 1987) of the amount (if any) by which the current services deficit for such fiscal year exceeds the deficit amount set forth as appropriate for such fiscal year in such concurrent resolution.

"(b) PROCEDURE.—A point of order raised pursuant to subsection (a) may be raised only at the conclusion of debate and before a vote is taken on a concurrent resolution on the budget, an amendment thereto, or a conference report thereon. If any such point of order is sustained by the presiding officer of the House in which it is raised, an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the Members of such House duly chosen and sworn shall be required to sustain an appeal of such ruling. Debate on any such appeal shall be limited to two hours, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees. An appeal of such a point of order is not subject to a motion to table.

"(c) WAIVER PROHIBITED.—The provisions of this section may not be waived pursuant to section 904(b).

"(d) INAPPLICABILITY IN TIME OF WAR.—In any fiscal year in which a declaration of war is in effect, the provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to—

"(1) any concurrent resolution on the budget that is considered pursuant to section 304 and revises the concurrent resolution on the budget most recently agreed to for such fiscal year, and

"(2) any concurrent resolution on the budget considered during such fiscal year for the fiscal year succeeding such fiscal year if a declaration of war will be in effect during such succeeding fiscal year.

"(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

"(1) the term 'maximum deficit amount' means, with respect to any fiscal year, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying the amount of the deficit for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983, by the applicable percentage;

"(2) the term 'deficit' means, with respect to any fiscal year, the amount by which the amount of total budget outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year exceeds the amount of the total revenues of the Federal Government for such fiscal year; and

"(3) the term 'applicable percentage' means—

"(A) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1985, 85 percent;

"(B) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1986, 70 percent;

"(C) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1987, 55 percent;

"(D) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1988, 45 percent;

"(E) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1989, 35 percent;

"(F) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1990, 25 percent; and

"(G) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1991, 15 percent;

"(H) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1992, 5 percent; and

"(I) with respect to the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1993, and each succeeding fiscal year, zero percent.".

(b) (1) Section 3 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 622) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(6) The term 'current services deficit' means, with respect to any fiscal year, the amount by which the amount of current services outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year exceeds the amount of current law revenues of the Federal Government for such fiscal year.

"(7) The term 'current services budget authority' means, with respect to any fiscal year, the total amount of budget authority which would be necessary to carry out programs and activities of the Federal Government during such fiscal year at the same level as such programs and activities were carried out in the preceding fiscal year without any policy change (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office).

"(8) The term 'current services outlays' means, with respect to any fiscal year, the total amount of outlays which would be necessary to carry out programs and activities of the Federal Government during such fiscal year at the same level as such programs and activities were carried out in the preceding fiscal year without any policy changes (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office).

"(9) The term 'current services spending authority' means, with respect to any fiscal year, the total amount of spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) which would be necessary to be effective in such fiscal year to carry out programs and activities of the Federal Government during that fiscal year without policy changes and at the same level as such programs and activities were carried out during the preceding fiscal year (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office).

"(10) The term 'current law revenues' means, with respect to any fiscal year, the total amount of revenues that would be received by the Federal Government in such fiscal year if no law were enacted to change the amount of revenues received in the Treasury during such fiscal year (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office).".

(2) Subsection (b) of section 904 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 621 note) is amended by striking out "or IV" and inserting in lieu thereof "(except section 301A) or title IV".

(3) The table of contents in subsection (b) of the first section of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621 note) is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 301 the following new item:

"Sec. 301A. Limits on budget deficit.".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 310 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 641) is amended to read as follows:

"DEFICIT REDUCTION PROCEDURE

"SEC. 310. (a) IN GENERAL.—Any concurrent resolution on the budget considered under section 301 or section 304 for a fiscal year shall, to the extent necessary, specify—

"(1) the total amount by which—

"(A) current services budget authority provided for such fiscal year under laws enacted before the date of adoption of such concurrent resolution;

"(B) new current services budget authority authorized to be enacted for such fiscal year;

"(C) current services outlays for such fiscal year that are associated with the current law budget authority referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B); and

"(D) current services spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) for such fiscal year; contained in laws, bills, and resolutions within the jurisdiction of a committee, is to be changed and direct that committee to determine and recommend changes to accomplish a change of such total amount and to report such determinations and recommendations in accordance with subsection (b) by a date specified in such concurrent resolution;

"(2) specify the amount by which budget authority initially provided for fiscal years preceding such fiscal year, and budget outlays associated with such budget authority, contained in laws, bills, and resolutions within the jurisdiction of a committee are to be changed and direct that committee to determine and recommend changes to accomplish a change of each such total amount and to report such determinations and recommendations in accordance with subsection (b) by a date specified in such concurrent resolution;

"(3) specify the total amount by which current law revenues for such fiscal year are to be changed and direct the committees having jurisdiction to determine and recommend changes in the laws, bills, and resolutions to accomplish a change of such total amount and to report such determinations and recommendations in accordance with subsection (b) by a date specified in such concurrent resolution;

"(4) specify the amount by which the statutory limit on the public debt is to be changed and direct the committees having jurisdiction to recommend such change and to report such recommendations in accordance with subsection (b) by a date specified in such concurrent resolution; and

"(5) specify and direct any combination of the matters described in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4).

"(b) DEFICIT REDUCTION MEASURES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If a concurrent resolution on the budget is agreed to which, in accordance with subsection (a), contains directions to one or more committees to determine and recommend changes in laws, bills, or resolutions, and—

"(A) only one committee of the House or the Senate is directed to determine and recommend changes, that committee shall promptly make such determination and recommendations and shall, by the date specified pursuant to subsection (a), report to its House a deficit reduction bill or a deficit reduction resolution, or both, containing such recommendations; or

"(B) more than one committee of the House or the Senate is directed to determine and recommend changes, each such committee so directed shall promptly make such determination and recommendations, whether such changes are to be contained in a deficit reduction bill or deficit reduction resolution, and shall, by the date specified pursuant to subsection (a), report such recommendations to the Committee on the Budget of its House, which upon receiving all such recommendations, shall report to its House a deficit reduction bill or deficit reduction resolution, or both, carrying out all such recommendations without any substantive revision.

"(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, a deficit reduction resolution is a concurrent resolution directing the Clerk of the House of Representatives or the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, to make specified changes in bills and joint resolutions which have not been enrolled.

"(c) COMPLETION OF DEFICIT REDUCTION PROCESS.—Congress shall complete action on any deficit reduction bill or deficit reduction resolution reported under subsection (b) not later than 60 days after the adoption of the concurrent resolution requiring such bill or resolution to be reported.".

(b)(1) The table of contents in subsection (b) of the first section of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621 note), as amended by section 2(b)(3), is further amended—

(A) by striking out "Adoption of first concurrent resolution" in the item relating to section 301 and inserting in lieu thereof "Annual adoption of concurrent resolution";

(C) by striking out "(C) any other" and inserting in lieu thereof "(B) a".

(3) Section 300 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 631) is amended—

(A) by striking out "first" in the item relating to April 15 and in the second item relating to May 15;

(B) by striking out the items relating to September 15 and September 25; and

(C) by inserting after the item relating to May 15 the following new item:

"July 15.....	Congress completes action on deficit reduction bill or deficit reduction resolution, or both, implementing concurrent resolution on the budget.".

(4) (A) The heading of section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 632) is amended to read as follows:

"ANNUAL ADOPTION OF CONCURRENT RESOLUTION".

(B) Subsection (a) of section 301 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 632) is amended—

(i) by striking out "the first concurrent resolution on the budget" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "a concurrent resolution on the budget"

(ii) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (6);

(iii) by redesignating paragraph (7) as paragraph (10); and

(iv) by inserting after paragraph (6) the following new paragraphs:

"(7) the total amount of the current law revenues of the Federal Government;

"(8) the total amount of the current services outlays of the Federal Government;

"(9) the current services deficit of the Federal Government; and".

(C) Section 301(b) of such Act is amended—

(i) by striking out "first concurrent resolution on the budget" and inserting in lieu thereof "concurrent resolution on the budget referred to in subsection (a)"; and

(ii) by striking out paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(1) the deficit reduction procedure described in section 310; and"; and

(iii) by striking out the matter that follows paragraph (2).

(D) Section 301(d) of such Act is amended by striking out "first" each place it appears.

(E) Section 301(e) of such Act is amended—

(i) by striking out "set for" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "set forth"; and

(ii) by striking out "first concurrent resolution on the budget" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "concurrent resolution on the budget referred to in subsection (a)".

(5) Subsection (c) of section 302 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 633) is amended by striking out "or 310".

(9) Paragraph (2)(A) of subsection (a) of section 308 of such Act (2 U.S.C 639) is amended by striking out "first concurrent resolution on the budget" and inserting in lieu thereof "concurrent resolution on the budget referred to in section 301(a)".

(10) Paragraph (1) of section 309 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 640) is amended by striking out ", and other than the reconciliation bill for such year, if required to be reported under section 310(c)".

(11)(A) Subsection (a) of section 311 of such Act (2 U.S.C. 642) is amended to read as follows:

"(a) LEGISLATION SUBJECT TO POINT OF ORDER.—After the Congress has completed action on the concurrent resolution on the budget referred to in section 301(a) for a fiscal year, and, if a deficit reduction bill or resolution, or both, for such fiscal year are required to be reported for such fiscal year, after that bill has been enacted into law or that resolution has been agreed to, it shall not be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill, resolution, or amendment providing new budget authority for such fiscal year, providing new spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) to become effective during such fiscal year, or reducing revenues for such fiscal year, or any conference report on any such bill or resolution, if—

"(1) the enactment of such bill or resolution as reported;

"(2) the adoption and enactment of such amendment; or

"(3) the enactment of such bill or resolution in the form recommended in such conference report; would cause the appropriate level of total new budget authority or total budget outlays set forth for such fiscal year in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for such fiscal year to be exceeded, or would cause the total amount of revenues received by the Treasury for such fiscal year to be less than the recommended level of Federal revenues set forth in such concurrent resolution for such fiscal year.".

(B) Section 311 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) PROCEDURE.—If a point of order raised pursuant to subsection (a) is sustained by the presiding officer of the House in which it is raised, an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the Members of such House duly chosen and sworn shall be required to sustain an appeal of such ruling. Debate on any such appeal shall be limited to two hours, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the majority leader and the minority leader or their designees. An appeal of such a point of order is not subject to a motion to table.".

(12) Clause (1) of Rule XLIX of the Rules of the House of Representatives is amended by striking out ", 304, or 310" and inserting in lieu thereof "or 304".

SEC. 4. Section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amount set forth in any Budget submitted to the Congress pursuant to subsection (a) for any fiscal year with respect to the estimated expenditures necessary to support the Government for such fiscal year may not exceed the amount set forth in such Budget with respect to the estimated receipts of the Government for such fiscal year by an amount that is greater than the maximum deficit amount established for such fiscal year under section 301A of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

"(2) For any fiscal year with respect to which the President determines that, for reasons of national security or economic necessity, the adoption of a Budget that complies with the requirements of paragraph (1) is not feasible, and submits to the Congress a written statement of the reasons for such determination, the President may submit two Budgets only one of which complies with the requirements of paragraph (1).".

SEC. 5. (a) Title X of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART C—IMPOUNDMENT PROCEDURES FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 1021. For purposes of this part—

"(1) the term 'spending authority' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 401(c)(2);

"(2) the term 'maximum deficit amount' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 301A(b)(1);

"(3) the term 'deficit' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 301A(b)(2); and

"(4) the term 'applicable percentage' shall have the meaning given to such term in section 301A(b)(3).

"PERIODIC REPORTS ON ESTIMATED DEFICIT

"SEC. 1022. (a) On November 1, February 1, and May 1 of each fiscal year, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall transmit to the Congress and the President a report based upon the most reliable information available at the time such report is transmitted. Such report shall contain—

"(1) an estimate of the total budget outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year;

"(2) an estimate of the total revenues of the Federal Government for such fiscal year;

"(3) a specification of the amount (if any) by which the amount estimated pursuant to paragraph (1) exceeds the amount estimated pursuant to paragraph (2); and

"(4) a specification of the amount (if any) by which the amount specified pursuant to paragraph (3) exceeds the deficit amount set forth as appropriate for such fiscal year in the concurrent resolution adopted for such fiscal year under section 301.

"(b) In the first report required under subsection (a) for any fiscal year with respect to which a deficit reduction bill, or a bill or joint resolution incorporating changes directed by a deficit reduction resolution (as defined in section 310(b)(2)), or both, becomes law, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall specify—

"(1) the amount by which such law or laws would cause the total amount of revenues of the Federal Government for such fiscal year to exceed the amount of current law revenues set forth in the concurrent resolution on the budget adopted for such fiscal year under section 301 if economic conditions during such fiscal year were the same as the economic conditions assumed for such fiscal year in such concurrent resolution;

"(2) the amount by which such law or laws would reduce the total amount of the outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year below the amount of current services outlays set forth in such concurrent resolution for such fiscal year if economic conditions during such fiscal year were the same as such assumed economic conditions;

"(3) the amount by which a deficit reduction bill enacted pursuant to a concurrent resolution on the budget for such fiscal year—

"(A) adopted under section 301,

"(B) setting forth as appropriate for such fiscal year a deficit amount equal to the deficit amount set forth as appropriate for such fiscal year in the concurrent resolution on the budget adopted for such fiscal year under section 301, and

"(C) recommending that the total amount of the revenues of the Federal Government for such fiscal year be increased by the maximum amount by which such total amount may be increased by a concurrent resolution on the budget that complies with the requirements of section 301A(a)(2)(A) for such fiscal year, would cause the total amount of revenues of the Federal Government for such fiscal year to exceed the amount of current law revenues set forth in such concurrent resolution for such fiscal year; and

"(4) the amount by which a deficit reduction bill enacted pursuant to a concurrent resolution on the budget for such fiscal year—

"(A) adopted under section 301,

"(B) setting forth as appropriate for such fiscal year a deficit amount equal to the deficit amount set forth as appropriate for such fiscal year in the concurrent resolution on the budget adopted for such fiscal year under section 301, and

"(C) recommending that the total amount of the budget outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year be reduced by the minimum amount by which such outlays may be reduced by a concurrent resolution on the budget that complies with the requirements of section 301A(a)(2)(B) for such fiscal year, would reduce the amount of the total outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year below the total amount of current services outlays set forth in such concurrent resolution for such fiscal year.

"SPECIAL MESSAGE PROPOSING RESCISSIONS TO REDUCE DEFICIT

"SEC. 1023. (a) Not later than 30 days after receiving any report under section 1022 that specifies an amount pursuant to paragraph (4) of subsection (a) of such section, the President shall transmit to the Congress a special message that proposes rescissions of budget authority for the fiscal year to which such report relates in an amount that will reduce the total budget outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year by an amount equal to the amount specified under such paragraph (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office).

"(b)(1)(A) A special message transmitted under subsection (a) pursuant to a report transmitted under section 1022 for a fiscal year may propose rescissions of budget authority for such fiscal year with respect to any program, project, activity, or account of the Federal Government with respect to which the President determines that it is desirable to reduce outlays (except the budget authority provided by section 1305(2) of title 31, United States Code, for payment of interest on the public debt).

"(B) No rescission proposed in such special message pursuant to this paragraph may reduce the total amount of outlays for any program, project, activity, or account of the Federal Government for the fiscal year to which special message relates by an amount in excess of 10 percent of the total amount of outlays that would be made for such program, project, or activity for such fiscal year but for this paragraph (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office).

"(C) If pursuant to this paragraph the President proposes to rescind for a fiscal year budget authority with respect to spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C), the special message proposing such rescission shall describe the changes that will be made in the program or programs to which such spending authority relates for such fiscal year if the Congress enacts a bill rescinding such budget authority.

"(2)(A) If the total amount of the rescissions proposed in such special message pursuant to paragraph (1) are insufficient to reduce the total outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year by an amount equal to the amount specified pursuant to section 1022(a)(4) in the report to which such special message relates, such special message shall propose additional rescissions of budget authority for such fiscal year with respect to each program, project, activity, and account of the Federal Government (including programs, projects, activities, and accounts with respect to which budget authority is proposed to be rescinded under paragraph (1)).

"(B) A rescission proposed pursuant to this paragraph with respect to any program, project, activity, or account shall reduce the total amount of outlays for such program, project, activity, or account by an amount equal to the product of—

"(i) the amount of outlays that would be made for the program, project, activity, or account for the fiscal year to which the special message proposing such rescission relates but for this subparagraph (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office), and

"(ii) the percentage that will, if multiplied by the total amount of outlays that would be made for every program, project, activity, or account of the Federal Government for such fiscal year but for this paragraph, produce an amount that is equal to the remainder obtained by subtracting—

"(I) the total amount by which rescissions proposed in such special message under paragraph (1) would reduce the total amount of outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year, from

"(II) the amount specified pursuant to section 1022(a)(4) in such special message.

"(C)(i) A special message transmitted under subsection (a) shall describe the changes that will be made in any program for which spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) has been enacted if the President is required under section 1024 to withhold from obligation and expenditure budget authority proposed to be rescinded with respect to such spending authority pursuant to this paragraph.

"(ii) Changes proposed in a program pursuant to clause (i) may include (I) a pro rata reduction in the payments that would otherwise be required by law to be made under such program, and (II) changes promoting the efficient administration of such program, but may not include any change in the requirements established by law with respect to eligibility for, or entitlement to, payments under such program.

"(D) No rescission may be proposed under subparagraph (A) with respect to the budget authority provided by section 1305(2) of title 31, United States Code, for payment of interest on the public debt.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), rescissions proposed pursuant to paragraphs (1) and (2) in a special message may not reduce the total outlays of the Federal Government by an amount that exceeds the amount specified pursuant to section 1022(a)(4) in the report to which such special message relates.

"(B) If the President proposes to rescind budget authority with respect to spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C) pursuant to paragraph (1), the President shall also include in the special message proposing such rescissions an alternative proposal to rescind budget authority in accordance with paragraph (2) in an amount that will reduce the total amount of budget outlays of the Federal Government for the fiscal year to which such special message relates by an amount equal to the amount by which the rescissions proposed pursuant to paragraph (1) with respect to such spending authority would reduce such total amount of outlays if such proposed rescissions became law. The President may withhold from obligation and expenditure budget authority proposed to be rescinded pursuant to this subparagraph only if a bill rescinding budget authority with respect to such spending authority does not become law within the period of time specified in section 1024.

"(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) and in section 1024, the provisions of part B of this title shall apply to the consideration of a special message transmitted under subsection (a).

"(2) For purposes of this section, the 45-day period referred to in sections 1011 and 1012(b) of such part shall be deemed to refer to a period of 30 calendar days.

"EFFECTS OF RESCISSION BILL

"SEC. 1024. (a) If, within 30 calendar days after both Houses of the Congress have received a special message transmitted by the President pursuant to section 1023 for a fiscal year, a rescission bill is enacted and becomes law that rescinds the budget authority of the Federal Government for such fiscal year that was proposed to be rescinded in such message, the President shall withhold from obligation and expenditure the budget authority rescinded by such rescission bill.

"(b)(1) If, within 30 calendar days after both Houses of the Congress have received a special message transmitted by the President pursuant to section 1023 for a fiscal year, a rescission bill is enacted and becomes law that rescinds budget authority of the Federal Government for such fiscal year in an amount that will reduce the total outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year by the amount by which such total outlays would be reduced by the rescissions of budget authority proposed in such special message (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office), the budget authority proposed to be rescinded in such special message shall be made available for obligation and expenditure (except to the extent that such rescission bill rescinds the budget authority proposed to be rescinded in such message).

"(2) If a rescission bill enacted pursuant to this subsection provides for the rescission of budget authority with respect to spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C), it shall be accompanied by a report specifying the changes to be made in the program or programs to which such spending authority relates in order to carry out such rescission (if such changes differ from the changes in such program or programs that are proposed by the President pursuant to paragraphs (1)(C) and (2)(C) of section 1023(b)).

"(c)(1) If, within 30 calendar days after both Houses of the Congress have received a special message transmitted by the President pursuant to section 1023 for a fiscal year, a rescission bill is enacted and becomes law that rescinds budget authority of the Federal Government for such fiscal year in an amount that will reduce the total outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year by an amount that is less than the amount by which such total outlays would be reduced if a rescission bill were enacted rescinding the budget authority proposed to be rescinded in such special message (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office), the President shall—

"(A) withhold from obligation and expenditure the budget authority rescinded by such rescission bill, and

"(B) withhold from obligation and expenditure budget authority proposed to be rescinded for such fiscal year in such special message (other than budget authority proposed pursuant to section 1023(b)(1) to be rescinded with respect to spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C)) in an amount that will reduce the total budget outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year by an amount which, when added to the amount by which such outlays are reduced for such fiscal year under such rescission bill, equals the amount by which such total outlays would be reduced if the rescissions proposed in such special message were enacted (as determined on the basis of estimates made by the Director of the Congressional Budget Office); and

"(C) implement any changes described in such message pursuant to section 1023(b)(2)(C) that are necessary to carry out the requirements of subparagraph (B).

"(2) If a rescission bill enacted pursuant to this subsection provides for the rescission of budget authority with respect to spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C), it shall specify the changes to be made in the program or programs to which such spending authority relates in order to carry out such rescission (if such changes differ from the changes in such program or programs that are proposed by the President pursuant to paragraphs (1)(C) and (2)(C) of section 1023(b)).

"(3) Notwithstanding subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1), the President may not rescind any budget authority proposed to be rescinded in a special message if a rescission bill is enacted and becomes law under this subsection that specifically disapproves the rescission of such budget authority.

"(d) Notwithstanding section 1012(b) or any other provision of law, if no rescission bill with respect to a special message transmitted under subsection (a) becomes law under subsection (b) or (c) within 30 calendar days after receipt by both Houses of the Congress of such special message, the President shall—

"(1) carry out the rescissions of budget authority proposed in such special message for such fiscal year (other than budget authority proposed pursuant to section 1023(b)(1) to be rescinded with respect to spending authority described in section 401(c)(2)(C); and

"(2) implement any changes described in such message pursuant to section 1023(b)(2)(C).

ENFORCEMENT OF MANDATED SPENDING REDUCTIONS; LIMITATIONS ON REVENUE INCREASES

"SEC. 1025. (a) If, in the first report transmitted under section 1022 for any fiscal year, an amount is specified pursuant to paragraph (1) of subsection (b) of such section that exceeds the amount specified pursuant to paragraph (3) of such subsection, the President shall, within 30 days after receiving such report, transmit to the Congress a special message proposing rescissions of budget authority for such fiscal year in an amount sufficient to reduce the total outlays of the Federal Government for such fiscal year by an amount that, when added to the amount by which such outlays will be reduced by any rescissions intended to be proposed for such fiscal year under section 1023 during such 30-day period, equals the amount obtained by subtracting the amount specified pursuant to paragraph (2) of subsection (b) of section 1022 from the product obtained by multiplying—

"(1) the amount specified in such report pursuant to paragraph (4) of such subsection, and

"(2) the quotient obtained by dividing—

"(A) the amount specified in such report pursuant to paragraph (1) of such subsection, by

"(B) the amount specified in such report pursuant to paragraph (3) of such subsection.

"(b) Any rescission of budget authority proposed in a special message transmitted under subsection (a) shall be subject to the requirements of section 1023(b)(2) and to the provisions of section 1024.".

(b) The table of contents in subsection (b) of the first section of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 621 note) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"PART C—IMPOUNDMENT PROCEDURES FOR DEFICIT REDUCTION

"Sec. 1021. Definitions.
"Sec. 1022. Periodic reports on estimated deficit.
"Sec. 1023. Special message proposing rescissions to reduce deficit.
"Sec. 1024. Effects of rescission bill.
"Sec. 1025. Enforcement of mandated spending reductions; limitations on revenue increases.".

SEC. 6. (a)(1) There is established a National Bipartisan Commission on the Budget (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Commission"). The Commission shall be composed of fifteen private citizens of the United States appointed as follows:

(A) five members appointed by the President, no more than three of whom shall be of the same political party;

(B) five members appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, three of whom shall be appointed upon the recommendation of the Majority Leader of the Senate, and two of whom shall be appointed upon the recommendation of the Minority Leader of the Senate; and

(C) five members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, two of whom shall be appointed upon the recommendation of the Minority Leader.

(2) Initial appointments required to be made by paragraph (1) shall be made not later than thirty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) The Chairman of the Commission shall be elected by a majority vote of the members of the Commission.

(4) A vacancy on the Commission shall not alter its powers and shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(b) The Commission shall—

(1) review the budget submitted by the President for fiscal year 1986;

(2) review such other budget proposals or information as the members of the Commission shall deem relevant;

(3) consult with other private and public sector experts for recommendations about reforms that would best address Federal budget deficits; and

(4) make recommendations for levels of spending and changes in the laws of the United States which may be necessary to reduce the budget deficit of the Federal Government in accordance with section 301A of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (as added by section 2 of this Act) and to achieve a balanced budget by fiscal year 1994.

(c) The Commission may, for the purpose of carrying out subsection (b), hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, and receive such evidence, as the Commission considers appropriate. The Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before it.

(d)(1) The heads of the executive agencies and the legislative agencies shall, to the extent permitted by law, provide the Commission such information as it may require for the purpose of carrying out its functions.

(2) Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation. However, members may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same amount as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under sections 5702 and 5703 of title 5, United States Code. Such expenses shall be paid equally from the contingent fund of the Senate and the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

(e) The Commission shall transmit to the President and to each House of Congress a report not later than August 1, 1985. The report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Commission, together with its recommendations for such levels of spending, legislation, and administrative actions as it considers appropriate.

(f) The Commission shall cease to exist thirty days after submitting its report pursuant to subsection (e).

SEC. 7. No law enacted after the date of the enactment of this Act shall waive or limit any provision of this Act, or any amendment to the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act made by this Act, unless such law does so in specific terms, referring to this Act or to the amendment made by this Act, and declaring that such law waives or limits this Act or such amendment.

By Mr. DANFORTH (for himself and Mr. BENTSEN):

S. 58. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to increase research activities, to foster university research and scientific training, and to encourage the contribution of scientific equipment to institutions of higher education; to the Committee on Finance.

HIGH TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION ACT

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, Senator BENTSEN and I are today introducing legislation which I believe is of extreme importance to the U.S. economy and our position in world trade. The Commerce Department has just issued a study showing that the high technology industry continues to be one of the few sectors to contribute positively to the U.S. balance of trade. This has historically been the case, and even now, when we are faced with a record trade deficit, exports of R&D-intensive products far exceed imports of those products.

Yet, Mr. President, we are being challenged by our trading partners, particularly the Japanese, who are each year increasing their share of such markets as computers and other high-tech electronic apparatus. In the last 20 years, Japan has far outspent the United States in R&D, as a percentage of gross national product. If we hope to maintain our superiority in technological innovation over our competitors, we must maintain and increase the level of R&D that is performed in the United States.

Because of the tremendous societal benefits that flow from the performance of R&D, it is appropriate for the Government to support such activities. Traditionally, the Federal Government has taken a lead role in funding basic research, through grants to universities and other nonprofit research organizations. Support is also appropriate where R&D activities may have commercial goals. This is because, as the Treasury Department noted in testimony before the Ways and Means Committee last summer:

> Where the market rewards for R&D expenditures do not match society's need for technological innovation, it falls appropriately upon Government to supply additional incentive.

The R&D credit was originally enacted in 1981 to provide just such an incentive. The credit is designed to reward increased R&D activity, and is available only for R&D expenditures that exceed the average of such expenditures for the previous 3 years. Based on the limited information that is available to date, the credit has been a success. In 1981, R&D expenditures increased by over 40 percent, compared to the previous year. In 1982, there was a 38-percent increase in R&D. Considering that these were both recessionary years, these increases are particularly impressive.

When enacted, the R&D credit was not made permanent, and is scheduled to expire at the end of this year. The bill we are introducing today would make the credit a permanent part of the law. This bill will be familiar to Members because the Senate passed this bill last year as part of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. (Only minor modifications have been made in this version of the bill. Unfortunately, when we conferred with the House on that bill, we were unable to keep this provision in the package. This was principally because the credit was not expiring until 1985, and Representatives of the House on the Conference Committee did not want to address the issue until this year.

Today we are facing the deadline. It is essential that the credit be renewed, and, I believe, made permanent. And it is essential that action be taken as soon as possible. Let me explain the reason for this urgency. R&D expenditures are made by companies pursuant to plans that are formulated years in advance. Most R&D projects are long-term endeavors, spanning 5 to 10 years or, in some cases, even longer. They are not activities that can be turned on and off like a light switch.

As such, R&D budgets cannot be influenced by last minute changes in the tax law. If we as a body wish to see the incentive effect of the R&D credit continue, then we must act quickly to persuade those who make these decisions that the credit will continue, and that they may safely take it into account in planning their R&D budgets for the coming years. I am afraid that the very existence of the sunsetting provision in current law already had a dampening effect on R&D spending since the availability of the credit after 1985 has remained an uncertainty.

As I mentioned, this bill was passed by the Senate in 1984. In addition to making the credit permanent, it narrows the definition of the types of R&D activities that qualify for the credit in order to target the credit to truly innovative, technological research. (There had been concern that the present law definition was too loose, and, as a result, I, my staff, the Treasury Department, the Finance Committee staff, and the Joint Committee staff spent a great deal of time last year developing this tight definition.) The bill also provides incentives for corporate support of university research efforts. With the modification in the definition of qualifying research, the Treasury Department last year supported the passage of an extension of the credit. Since an extension of the credit is included in the Treasury proposal on fundamental tax reform, I must assume that they continue to support the credit.

Mr. President, this bill also has the support of the Coalition for the Advancement of Industrial Technology, or CAIT, which is an organization made up of 49 companies involved in R&D activities, eight high-tech trade associations, and 15 universities which are also involved in basic research and research training. I have a brief summary of the provisions of the bill and a detailed description. I ask unanimous consent that they, and the text of the bill, be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was/were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FACT SHEET REGARDING THE "HIGH TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION ACT OF 1985"

SUMMARY

I. Improvement and extension of the R&D credit

1. The R&D credit is made permanent.

2. The definition of qualified research for R&D credit purposes is tightened to eliminate any taxpayer abuses of the R&D credit and to ensure that the credit is targeted to fulfill its original purpose of encouraging technological innovation.

3. The R&D credit is made available to start-up corporations, to research joint ventures composed of corporations, and to other qualifying joint ventures of partners with existing businesses to which the research relates.

II. Promotion of university research and scientific education

A. Credit for Corporate Payments to Universities for Basic Research

The Act creates a new credit equal to 20 percent of that portion of a corporation's payments to universities and other qualified non-profit, tax-exempt organizations for basic research which exceeds a fixed, historical maintenance-of-effort floor. This maintenance-of-effort floor is equal to 1% of the corporation's average annual R&D budget (including university basic research payments) over 1981-1983. A second threshold requirement also is used to prevent corporations from merely diverting their generalized charitable university giving to creditable support of university basic research.

B. Enhanced Deduction for Corporate Donations of Scientific Equipment to Colleges, Universities, and Vocational Schools

The Act expands the present enhanced deduction to corporate contributors of scientific and technical equipment and apparatus given to colleges, universities, junior colleges, and post-secondary vocational schools for use in research or research training by means of the following:

Eligible uses of the property are expanded to include direct education in the sciences as well as research and research training;

Donations of computer software are made eligible for the deduction;

Donations of state-of-the-art equipment used in the taxpayer's trade or business are made eligible for the deduction.

C. Clarification of Exclusion From Income of Scholarships, Grants, and Student Loan Forgiveness Received by Certain Graduate Students in the Sciences

The Act clarifies that scholarships, grants, and student loan forgiveness received by graduate students will be excluded from such student's gross income, even though he or she is required to perform future teaching services for any of a broad class of institutions of higher education as a condition of receiving such scholarship, grant, or loan forgiveness.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION OF THE "HIGH TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION ACT OF 1985"

I. IMPROVEMENT AND EXTENSION OF THE R&D CREDIT (TITLE I OF THE ACT)

A. R&D credit made permanent (sec. 101)

The Act eliminates the current sunset provision under which the R&D credit is due to expire on December 31, 1985, thereby making the credit permanent.

B. Improvement of the R&D credit through clarification and tightening of the definition of qualified research for credit purposes (sec. 102)

1. The Act adopts a new definition of qualified research for R&D purposes that is entirely separate from the definition of research or experimentation for section 174 deduction purposes. The new credit definition adopts as its starting point the definition of R&D for financial accounting purposes, subject to various modifications.

2. In general, qualified research for R&D credit purposes means (i) planned search or critical investigation (including basic research) undertaken for the purpose of discovering information which may be potentially useful in the development of a technologically new or improved business component of the taxpayer or (ii) applying the results obtained from a research activity or other knowledge to develop a technologically new or improved business component of the taxpayer, including the conceptual formulation, design, testing, and reformulation of hypotheses regarding elements of the business component and the design, construction, and testing of prototypes, models, and pilot plants.

3. "Technologically new or improved"—

Two-fold requirement:

(i) The new or improved characteristics of the business component (defined below) are "technological in nature"; and

(ii) Substantially all of the activities undertaken in developing or improving such component are part of a process of experimentation relating to such factors as new or improved function, performance, efficacy, reliability, safety, quality, or reduced cost, rather than to style, taste cosmetic, or seasonal design factors.

(a) "Technological"—

Clarifies that the R&D credit is limited to technologically-based products and processes (including software), as opposed to financial services, advertising, and the like.

Whether the new chacteristics or improvements are technological in nature is determined by whether the process necessary to develop such characteristics or improvements ultimately relies on principles of physical science, biological science, chemical science, computer science, or engineering.

(b) Substantially all of the activities are part of experimentation directed toward functional changes—

"Substantially all" is to be determined on the basis of all of the facts and circumstances, with relative costs incurred being evidence as to "substantially all" and with such costs including costs of support and supervision of R&D.

4. Item which must be technologically new or improved: Concept of a "business component"—

The objective at which qualified research is directed for R&D credit purposes—a business component—is defined to include a product, computer software, process, technique, formula, or invention to be offered for sale, lease, license, or used by the taxpayer in a trade or business.

The "technologically new or improved" test is applied first at the level of the product or process as a whole. If the test is not satisfied at that level, the test is reapplied at the next most significant subset of elements of the product or process. This "shrinking back" of the product or process will continue until either a subset of elements of the product or process that satisfies the test is reached or the most basic element of the product or process is reached and such element fails to satisfy the test.

5. The Act's revised definition of qualified research narrows the category of eligible activities for R&D credit purposes in the following principal ways:

(i) First, the limitation of eligible R&D activities for credit purposes only to those directed toward functional improvements (e.g., function, performance, reliability, etc.) eliminates the entire category of style, cosmetic, taste, and seasonal design improvements often undertaken purely for marketing purposes and eliminates all improvements in which cosmetic changes dominate functional changes.

(ii) Second, by requiring that the new or improved characteristics be technological in nature, and by expressly excluding research relating to management techniques and management-based changes in production processes, the Act not only substantially limits the ability of the food, apparel, and retail and wholesale trade sectors to claim the R&D credit, but also bars most service industries, including banking and other financial and insurance services, from claiming the credit.

(iii) Third, by requiring that the product or process be developed by the process of experimentation, including the development, tasting, elimination, and refinement of hypotheses, the Act's revised definition for credit purposes excludes a whole range of product development activities in which the design alternative required to reach the desired result for the business component as a whole is readily discernible from the start and readily attainable without the significant uncertainty reflected in the process of testing and experimentation.

(iv) Fourth, the exclusions with respect to duplication (subsection (d)(2)(E)), activities after the beginning of commercial production generally (subsection (d)(2)(A)), planning for commercial production, and adaptation of an existing product to specific customer needs (subsection (d)(2)(C) will provide a clearer and more enforceable line which will foreclose a taxpayer from claiming the credit with respect to activities which no longer constitute product development but instead are part of the initial stages of commercial production or which constitute mere tinkering with or copying of a product already on the market.

(v) Finally, the Act seeks to ensure that software developed by the taxpayer for its internal use (other than in R&D, or a plant process) will qualify for the credit only where such internal software surmounts a high threshold of innovation, thereby drastically reducing the credit claimed by financial and service sectors, as well as significantly reducing the credit for software developed in-house for use in general and administrative (G&A) activities.

C. Availability of the R&D credit for start-up companies and joint research ventures (sec. 103)

1. The Act addresses the problem of the unavailability of the R&D credit under current law to start-up corporations which lack an active, ongoing business but which are undertaking research activities in an effort to create such a business. The Act provides that in-house and contract research expenses paid or incurred by a regular corporation (i.e., a corporation other than an S corporation, a personal holding company, or a service organization (such as an incorporated doctor)) will constitute qualified research expenses for credit purposes if the corporation undertakes the research with the intention to use the results thereof in the active conduct of a present or future trade or business. In this way, the credit would be made available to a start-up corporation as well as to an existing corporation participating in a new research endeavor seeking to expand and diversify beyond its existing trade or business.

2. The Act clarifies that, in general, in the case of research being conducted in partnership form, the trade or business test is applied at the partnership level, and the credit is apportioned among the partners in accordance with the provisions of section 704 which govern partnership allocations generally. However, the Act carves out two exceptions to this general rule: (1) in the case of a joint research venture comprised of regular corporations; and (2) where not all of the members of the joint venture are regular corporations, but each member's own trade or business would satisfy the "in carrying on" test with respect to the partnership's research expenditures. In situations in which either of these exceptions applied, the research expenses will flow through to the partners, with the trade or business test being applied, and the credit computation being made, at the partner level.

II. PROMOTION OF UNIVERSITY RESEARCH AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION (TITLE II)

A. Expansion of the credit for university basic research (sec. 201)

1. a. new flat rate credit

The proposed legislation creates a new tax credit equal to 20 percent of that portion of a corporation's payments to universities (and other qualified non-profit, tax-exempt organizations for basic research) which exceeds a fixed, historical "minimum university basic research" floor. These amounts which exceed the floor—termed "incremental university basic research amounts"—are made ineligible for the present R&D credit and are excluded from the corporate taxpayer's base year research expenses for purposes of calculating the corporation's R&D credit available under present law. The amounts which fall below the floor remain eligible for the present R&D credit and are included in the corporation's base period for purposes of calculating the present R&D credit.

b. floor for amounts eligible for flat rate credit

The fixed "minimum university basic research" floor for the new flat rate credit is defined as 1% of the annual average of the corporate taxpayer's combined qualified in-house research expenses, contract research expenses, and university basic research payments for the base period composed of the period from 1981 through 1983.

Example—

B Corporation makes total university basic research payments in 1985 of $400,000. For purposes of the new flat rate credit, the base period is 1981, 1982, and 1983. The corporation's annual average for these three years of its qualified research expenditures is $15,000,000. Accordingly, the "minimum university basic research" floor for purposes of the flat rate credit is $150,000 (1% of $15,000,000). The amount of 1985 university research payments in excess of this floor, $250,000, is eligible for the new 20% flat rate credit, for a total flat rate credit of $50,000. Sixty-five percent of the remaining portion of university payments that are below the floor is eligible, as under present law, for the 25% incremental R&D credit.

c. maintenance-of-effort requirement for non-research donations to universities by the taxpayer

The portion of a corporation's payments to universities for basic research that is eligible for the new flat rate credit is reduced to the extent that the corporation's general (i.e., not designated for research purposes) charitable giving to all universities falls below historical levels (the annual average of undesignated payments for three of the immediately preceding four years as selected by the taxpayer).

2. The proposed legislation adds to the category of qualified organizations to whom corporate payments for basic research are eligible for the credit an organization that is tax-exempt under section 501(c) (3) or (c) (6), is organized and operated primarily to promote university scientific research, and expends on a current basis substantially all of its funds through grants and contracts for such university basic research.

3. The proposed legislation limits the university basic research credit to transfers of cash, thereby making equipment donations ineligible for the credit.

B. Enhanced deduction in section 170 for corporate donations of scientific equipment to post-secondary schools (sec. 202)

The Act expands the present enhanced deduction in section 170 by means of the following:

Eligible uses of the property are expanded to include direct education as well as research and research training;

Donations of computer software are made eligible for the deduction;

Donations of state-of-the-art equipment used in the taxpayer's trade or business are made eligible for the deduction.

1. Eligible equipment

Scientific or technical equipment or apparatus that is new inventory in the hands of the taxpayer or is used in the taxpayer's business and is not more than three years old;

Computer software developed or purchased by the contributor;

Installation equipment and replacement parts.

2. Eligible uses

Substantially all of the use of the contributed property is for direct education of students and faculty, research or experimentation (within the meaning of section 174), or research training in the United States in mathematics, engineering, the physical or biological sciences, or advanced computer science.

3. Eligible donors

All regular corporations (non-pass-through entities).

4. Eligible recipients

Universities, colleges, junior colleges, post-secondary vocational schools, and an association of these institutions.

5. Amount of the allowable deduction

a. new scientific equipment, computer hardaware, and computer software

Fair market value, limited to the lesser of (i) the sum of basis and one-half of the ordinary income gain that would have been realized by the contributor had the new inventory property instead been sold or (ii) twice basis.

b. state-of-the-art scientific equipment used in the taxpayer's business

The lesser of (i) fair market value or (ii) 150 percent of basis (computed without regard to adjustments for depreciation) less accumulated depreciation.

C. Clarification of exclusion from income of scholarships, grants, and student loan forgiveness received by certain graduate students (sec. 203)

The Act clarifies that scholarships, grants, and student loan forgiveness received by graduate students in all fields will be excluded from such student's gross income, even though he or she is required to perform future teaching services for any of a broad class of institutions of higher education as a condition of receiving such scholarship, grant, or loan forgiveness.

III. EFFECTIVE DATES AND TRANSITION RULE

The amendments made by the proposed legislation are generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985. However, if the taxpayer so elects, the revised definition of qualified research may be applied in post-1985 determination years for purposes of determining base period research expenses for base period years beginning before January 1, 1986. In such case, the base period research expenses for pre-1986 base period years cannot be reduced below a level that would cause growth in qualified research expenses under the new definition to exceed the growth level that would have occurred had the old definition been applied in both the determination year and the base period year.

THE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT TAX CREDIT SHOULD BE EXTENDED AND MADE MORE COST-EFFECTIVE IN 1985

This paper explains why the research and development tax credit—Section 30 of the Internal Revenue Code—which is scheduled to expire at the end of 1985, should be extended, targeted, and strengthened in 1985:

The national interest requires U.S. industry to maintain world technological leadership through aggressive R&D.

Other nations, principally Japan, are vigorously challenging U.S. technological supremacy through tax incentives, subsidies, and other means of support.

Government promotion of innovation through R&D is necessary to offset systematic private R&D underinvestment. Private firms underinvest in R&D because of the fact that competitors, customers, and others will capture much of the gains generated by their own R&D expenditures.

Overall social benefits from R&D are much higher than the private gains of the individual company making a given R&D investment. The leading study put the average difference at a 56% social rate of return for R&D, compared to a 25% private rate of return.

Tax expenditures are superior to a massive direct government grant program as a means of offsetting market disincentives to R&D investment.

U.S. high technology industries are subject to effective corporate tax rates 50%-60% higher than the economy-wide corporate average—despite their importance to the nation's future and their comparatively great need for capital for investment and for R&D.

Even if a flat-tax, low-rate regime were adopted, the need would persist for specific tax incentives to counter private sector under-investment in R&D, and to counter competing nations' R&D subsidy and other promotional measures. The Treasury has retained the R&D credit in its reform plan.

THE R&D TAX CREDIT—WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT WORKS

A. Existing Law.

Originally adopted in the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, the R&D tax credit provisions in I.R.C. Section 30 provide for a credit against the Federal income tax of 25 percent of a taxpayer's expenditures on specified categories of research and development in excess of the average of the amount spent on R&D in the preceding three years. In other words, the benefit applies only to enterprises when and to the extent that their R&D spending increases over immediately previous levels.

As noted above, Section 30 expires at the end of 1985.

B. The Senate-Passed 1984 Refinement of the R&D Credit.

The Senate version of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 extended and strengthened the R&D credit. (The provision was adopted by the conference, however, on the ground that the House had not held harings on the issue and action could be postponed until 1985, since expiration of the existing provisions would not occur until the end of 1985.) The Senate made four changes in the existing credit, all of which make for a more cost-effective provision:

1. The credit was made permanent. This step is necessary to make the credit a genuinely stable incentive for corporate decision-makers considering R&D proposals. As the National Science Foundation has observed: "R&D is exceptionally risky for any individual company. Much R&D pays off only after five, ten years or more when current management may be long departed."

2. The definition of research and development expenditures qualified to generate a tax credit was tightened and targeted, as stated in the Senate Finance Committee Report, to include only "research and experimental activities designed to produce a technologically new or improved business component where the new or improved characteristics are functional rather than stylistic or cosmetic."

3. The requirement that R&D be used for the conduct of the taxpayer corporation's "trade or business" was modified to permit start-up companies to gain the credit from R&D directed at a trade or business they intend to carry on in the future.

4. Provisions relating to R&D grants to universities were modified to provide for a larger incentive for corporations to fund basic research in university laboratories than to conduct it on their own.

C. The Treasury Proposal to Extend the Credit.

The Treasury Department's modified flat-tax proposal eliminates many corporate tax credits and deductions. However, in recognition of the national interest in promoting technologically oriented R&D, the Treasury proposal includes a provision similar to that passed by the Senate earlier this year, discussed above, in which the credit "would be extended [but only] for three years and targeted more effectively toward productivity-enhancing innovations." The Treasury proposal does not include the Senate's enhanced incentive for corporate-funded university basic research.

I. THE NATIONAL INTEREST REQUIRES U.S. INDUSTRY TO MAINTAIN WORLD TECHNOLOGICAL LEADERSHIP THROUGH AGGRESSIVE R&D

The importance of maintaining U.S. industry's technological leadership is undisputed. As Congress' Office of Technology Assessment recently observed:

"[Staying] highly competitive in electronics and other technologically driven industries, with U.S. firms remaining leaders in innovation, in international trade, and in sales and profits [is] necessary if the United States is to maintain its standard of living, its military security, and if the U.S. economy is to provide well-paying and satisfying jobs for the Nation's labor force."

R&D is the key to keeping our technological lead and staying competitive; the Congressional Budget Office reported in its April 1984 study, Federal Support for R&D and Innovation, that:

"A strong R&D effort is characteristic of American industries that are effective international competitors, while industries with severe competitive problems invest significantly less in R&D."

Promoting R&D promotes the high technology sector, in which employment grew 50% faster during the 1970s than in the economy as a whole, and which accounted for 44% of total U.S. manufacturing exports by 1980.

In addition, the output of the high technology sector furnishes other, more traditional industries with the means to sustain or regain their own international competitiveness.

The Office of Technology Assessment has noted that high technology microelectronics products in particular "are probably distributed more widely through the rest of the U.S. economy than the output of any other industry."

The Japan Economic Journal has referred to semiconductors as "the crude oil of the 1980s."

The ultimate effects of R&D are impossible to measure. But, as William J. Baroody, Jr., President of the American Enterprise Institute, observed in introducing a recent AEI symposium:

"Many economists believe that a clear causal relationship links basic research, industrial innovation, productivity improvement, and economic growth. They point to the slowdown in spending on research and development . . . as a cause of the productivity slump of the 1970s . . . . Another slowdown in the performance of research and development could have serious implications for economic growth and employment through the end of this century."

II. OTHER NATIONS, PRINCIPALLY JAPAN, ARE VIGOROUSLY CHALLENGING U.S. TECHNOLOGICAL SUPREMACY THROUGH TAX INCENTIVES, SUBSIDIES, AND OTHER MEANS OF SUPPORT

According to a report prepared for the Cabinet Council on Commerce and Trade, the United States has lost world export market share in eight out of ten high technology industries over the past fifteen years. In the semiconductor industry, Japan has rapidly increased its share not only of world markets (from 33% to 38% in the last year), but of the U.S. market in particular (from 23% to 39% in the last year). In one important category, 64 kilobyte random access memory ("RAM") microchips, Japan succeeded in capturing 70% of the world market.

The drive of foreign nations to overtake the U.S. is managed everywhere by systematic programs of incentives, subsidies, trade barriers, and other forms of governmental support. Japan, for example, currently has in place an R&D tax credit similar to the U.S.—for which strengthening revisions are being considered—as well as large deductions and reserve allowances specifically for high technology developers and exporters. Taiwan, West Germany, France, the United Kingdom, and Canada all similarly provide R&D tax credits and various additional incentives.

The seriousness of this challenge cannot be ignored. As Data Resources, Inc. observed in a major 1984 Report on U.S. Manufacturing Industries directed by the late Otto Eckstein:

"In [high technology] fields [where one firm or one nation typically dominates world markets] it is very difficult to recapture market position if it is ever lost. Indeed, it is hard to find an example of a lead that was regained. . . . Once the lead is lost, profitability diminishes, resources shrink, and management is pressed into shortsighted, defensive, cost-cutting moves that soon produce a further loss of market share. A nation that casually surrenders leading industrial positions through policies of neglect will find it difficult to stage a comeback, particularly if the period of non-competitiveness stretches on for more than a few years."

III. GOVERNMENT PROMOTION OF INNOVATION THROUGH R&D IS NECESSARY TO OFFSET SYSTEMATIC PRIVATE R&D UNDERINVESTMENT

A. Private Firms Systematically Tend to Underinvest in R&D.

It is widely acknowledged that private firms tend to underinvest in R&D. The reasons are simple:

R&D is always risky and therefore more difficult to justify than an alternative investment;

Worse, even if a particular R&D project were to prove successful, an individual private firm can rationally anticipate that much of the benefits from the project will in effect be appropriated by its competitors, customers, and others.

The most comprehensive and probably the most respected of the several economic studies confirming the above underinvestment pattern found that:

The private rate of return for R&D investments averaged 25% pretax;

The social rate of return averaged 56%;

In high technology fields, with high rates of competition, innovation, and successful imitation of competitor's new products, the gap between private and social rates of return was much higher than the average.

In the United States, these factors inhibiting R&D are exacerbated by additional market circumstances. A recent study by Paine Webber Mitchell Hutchins, Inc. concluded that "[T]he average Japanese semiconductor company has a cost of capital that is at least 35% lower than its average . . . U.S. competitor. . . ."

B. The Current Structure of the U.S. Corporate Tax is Unfavorable to High Technology Enterprise.

In sharp contrast to the encouragement given innovation by our major competitor nations, the current structure of the U.S. corporate tax establishes an environment comparatively unfavorable to high technology enterprise:

The Accelerated Cost Recovery System (ACRS) does not generally assist companies in the high technology sector, because the rate of innovation in both products and manufacturing processes in high technology fields is so rapid that useful lives of plant and equipment are generally too short to gain ACRS benefits;

The Joint Committee on Taxation recently found that high technology companies averaged an effective tax rate approximately 60% higher than the average corporate taxpayer in 1982—even with the R&D credit in effect (without it, effective rates in the high technology field would have been 10 to 20% higher than they have been).

IV. TAX EXPENDITURES ARE SUPERIOR TO DIRECT GOVERNMENT GRANTS AS A MEANS OF OFFSETTING MARKET DISINCENTIVES TO R&D INVESTMENT

Of the two approaches available to government to increase the general level of productive civilian R&D, tax incentives are far preferable to a large grant program. As the National Science Foundation testified before the House Ways & Means Subcommittee on Oversight in August 1984:

"Using a mechanism that encourages increased industrial R&D, yet lets industry, not Government, decide where the increases will be directed is . . . sound. Federal officials cannot do as good a job at identifying the specific technologies and products likely to make the greatest economic contribution as America's numerous small and large businesses."

Similarly, CBO Director Rudolph Penner testified that "A grant program might also have the tendency to reward grantsmanship more than scientific originality and skill."

Representative Ed Zschau, Co-Chairman of the House Republican High Technology Task Force, put the point cogently:

"To suggest that some sort of government bureau or council will recognize [technical and market] opportunities better than the people on the firing line in the private sector is pure folly."

Moreover, apart from the comparative merits of direct government R&D funding versus R&D incentives, such government funding for civilian R&D as exists is declining. Pursuant to policies of the current administration, the overall level of Federal civilian R&D expenditures declined over 25% between FY 1980 and FY 1984, from $19.5 billion (in 1982 dollars) to an estimated $14.0 billion, according to CBO.

One purpose for the adoption of the R&D credit in 1981 was to take up the slack left by the administration's major cuts in Federal R&D direct spending. Given the fact that, in CBO's words, "the U.S. performance has been near the bottom" for two decades in the percentage of its GNP devoted to civilian R&D, it would be particularly anomalous to further cut support, by permitting the R&D credit to expire.

V. SINCE ITS ADOPTION IN 1981, THE R&D CREDIT HAS STRENGTHENED CIVILIAN R&D IN THE U.S.

Prior to 1981-82—which saw the most severe recession since the 1930s—R&D spending has, like all investment, dropped dramatically. But during this past recession, when R&D credit was in effect for the first time:

Total corporate R&D spending increased from $30.5 billion in 1980 to $35.4 billion in 1981 to $39.2 billion in 1983.[1]

During this period investment in plant and equipment dropped (consistent with normal recession behavior), by 4.8% in 1982, and in 1983 was still 3.7% below its 1981 level.

On basis of past relationships between GNP and R&D, by 1984 R&D spending exceeds GNP predicted levels by as much as $7.7 billion per year.

Since the credit has been in effect, the pace of American industry's R&D growth has generally matched that of its toughest international competitors—again, in contrast to the pattern of the late 1960s and 1970s. According to the Report on U.S. Manufacturing Industries recently issued by Data Resources, Inc., between 1965-67 and 1978-80, the percentage of sales revenue devoted to R&D by all U.S. manufacturing industries declined by more than 35%, while Japan and West Germany showed an increased percentage of GNP devoted to nondefense or space R&D.

Increases in R&D have been particularly dramatic in high technology fields. For example, a Smith-Barney survey of 25 randomly selected computer manufacturers showed that 22 of the companies increased their R&D spending as a percentage of sales revenue between 1980 and 1984. In the computer industry as a whole R&D outlays rose by 19.5% in 1983 compared to 1982, representing a total of almost 44% of pre-tax profits.

Of course, the tax aspects of a decision to invest in a given R&D project are but one of a number of factors. But the record contains substantial indications that the R&D credit played the stimulative role it would be expected to play in helping support the strong R&D spending of the past three years:

The General Accounting Office found that, of 86 companies it surveyed which claimed the credit, 56 were encouraged by the credit to initiate new research projects, and that these 56 companies spent 95% of the R&D expenditures of all 86 in the sample;

Numerous executives with major R&D responsibilities—from such enterprises as IBM, Hewlett-Packard, Digital Equipment Corporation, and several high technology trade associations gave specific testimony to the House Ways & Means Oversight Subcommittee about the contribution made by the credit to R&D decision-making.

The record is particularly impressive, in light of the economic circumstances, and limitations built into the R&D provisions to reduce its revenue impact, especially the feature limiting the credit to increments in R&D spending.

VI. QUESTIONS RAISED ABOUT THE EFFECT OF THE CREDIT DO NOT JUSTIFY BLOCKING ITS EXTENSION

Several questions have been raised about the effect of the R&D credit. These questions provide no basis for declining to extend the credit—though some of the questions do point to revising the existing credit provisions in Section 30 to make the section more targeted and stronger.[2] As noted above, the version passed in 1984 by the Senate made significant cost-effective improvements compared with current law. As concluded by the National Science Foundation, which sponsored most of the empirical work from which the bulk of these questions have arisen:

"Taking into consideration the structural problems with the present R&D credit and doubts about the cost sensitivity of R&D expenditures, the response to the credit thus far seems surprisingly strong."

In brief, here are the main questions that have been raised about the credit:

1. In one study sponsored by NSF, Professor Mansfield of the University of Pennsylvania has concluded that the data he collected indicate that, over the first half of the life of the existing credit provisions, the credit may have stimulated less R&D spending than the amount of revenue lost to the Treasury during the same period by the credit. However, as NSF explained, in reference to Professor Mansfield's observation:

"That the estimated R&D increases are lower than the estimated revenue losses should not surprise or discourage us. . . . The proper measure of success is whether the benefits accruing to the country from the increased industrial R&D outweigh the revenue losses of the credit by a sufficient margin."

NSF's analysis is particularly compelling, in light of the widely confirmed determination by academic and other experts that (a) returns on R&D are frequently very high, and (b) that the "social" return—all the benefits to all social elements affected by a particular innovation—are much higher than the private benefits captured by the

[1] Some observers have noted that the current upswing in U.S. corporate R&D actually began in 1979, two years before the credit was adopted. However, an NSF analysis concluded that a great deal of this pre-1981 increase was generated by the special late 1970s pressures for crash energy conservation programs and for compliance with new health, safety, and environmental regulations.

[2] At the House Ways & Means Oversight Subcommittee hearings held August 2-3, 1984, all of the numerous governmental and academic authorities who testified agreed that government financial promotion of civilian R&D is necessary, because of the public importance of R&D and because of the recognized pattern of private sector underinvestment.

company responsible for the particular R&D in question.[3]

As the intense and successful efforts of America's competitors show, it is well understood that the public benefits of R&D are far greater than the amount expended by individual companies on particular R&D projects.

2. A second question about the efficacy of the credit has been raised by Professor Robert Eisner, an advocate of direct government R&D grants rather than tax incentives. Professor Eisner's work was also sponsored by NSF. His point relates to the incremental structure of the credit. He notes that each R&D expenditure resulting in a credit also adds to the taxpayer's base for calculating future benefits, thereby reducing future benefits. Hence he concludes that the only value of the credit inheres in the time value of money, and that it is actually worth only about 4-6% of a given increment in R&D expenditures, rather than 25%.

Eisner's critique understates the value of the credit, especially to a corporate decisionmaker with an expectation of constantly rising R&D budgets. In any given year, the crucial fact about the credit from the standpoint of corporate decisionmakers is that it will reduce the net financial statement impact of a given R&D project in that year by 25%. Granted, that benefit will be partially offset by the addition to the corporation's R&D base for calculating the credit in future years. But the future offset cannot be precisely estimated.

Moreover, if the expectation is that R&D expenditures will continue consistently to grow, then at any given point in time, the credit will still appear to the decision-maker to have a meaningful positive impact on the cost/benefit analysis associated with a particular R&D decision.

3. A third question, also raised by Professor Eisner, is based on a comparison he made between the R&D activity performed by companies that claimed the credit on their 1981 tax returns and the amount of R&D performed by another group of companies that for were not eligible for the credit. Finding little difference between the amount of R&D performed by the two groups, Eisner concludes that the credit did not significantly affect aggregate R&D levels.

Eisner's analysis on this point is severely flawed, for several reasons. The most significant defect is that he takes no account of the generous (three-year) carryback and (fifteen-year) carryfordward features of the current credit provisions—which witnesses before the Oversight Subcommittee confirmed significantly influenced decisionmaking for companies not in a position to claim the credit for the tax years covered by Eisner's study (1981 and 1982).

[3] Apart from whether it focused on the right question, Professor Mansfield's analysis was based on survey data that may present an incompete picture and constitute an unreliable basis for his conclusions about the impact of the credit on R&D investment decisions. His study, based on questions directed to publicly unknown officials in unnamed companies, suggests a relatively small corporate response in some industries, but a significant response in others (e.g., instruments). However, his data on R&D spending for the computer, electrical, and electronics industries are inconsistent with actual industry numbers. Thus, it appears likely that his survey missed some major R&D-intensive companies, where the beneficial effects of the credit have been most apparent.

VII. WHAT IS NEEDED NOW: A PERMANENT, MORE COST-EFFECTIVE R&D CREDIT

The United States must keep its position at the cutting edge of industrial innovation. To do that, in the face of the formidable challenges from our competitors in Western Europe and especially the Far East, some measure of Federal support is necessary, in view of the aggressive governmental programs of other nations and in light of the demonstrated gap between private sector R&D and socially optimal levels. A tax incentive approach is clearly preferable to a large affirmative grant program.

What is needed now is to build on the initial experience of the past three years, to make the R&D tax credit more targeted and more productive. In 1984, the Senate made appropriate changes in the current R&D credit provisions—by limiting its application to functional and technologically oriented research and development, by creating a comparatively more generous credit for corporate basic research contracted out to universities, by making the credit available to start-up companies without an existing trade or business, and, most of all, by making the credit permanent. What is needed now is simply to enact a sharpened, cost-effective revision of existing Section 30. The 1984 Senate bill is a good beginning.

S. 58

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE; ETC.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "High Technology Research and Scientific Education Act of 1985."

(b) AMENDMENT OF THE 1954 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

TITLE I—THE CREDIT FOR INCREASING RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

SEC. 101. PERMANENT R&D CREDIT.

Section 221 of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 (Public Law 97-34), 95 Stat. 172, hereby is amended by striking in paragraph (1) of subsection (d) the words ", and before January 1, 1986." and by inserting a period immediately following the words "June 30, 1981" and is further amended by striking the last sentence in subparagraph (d)(2)(A).

SEC. 102. MODIFICATION OF THE DEFINITION OF QUALIFIED RESEARCH FOR CREDIT PURPOSES.

Subsection (d) of section 30 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) QUALIFIED RESEARCH.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified research' means—

"(A) a planned search or systematic investigation (including basic research) undertaken for the purpose of discovering information which may be useful in the development of a technologically new or improved business component of the taxpayer or a number of the same controlled group of corporations as the taxpayer, or

"(B) applying the results obtained from an activity described in subparagraph (A) or other knowledge to develop a technologically new or improved business component of the taxpayer or a number of the same controlled group of corporations as the taxpayer, including the conceptual formulation, design, and testing of hypotheses regarding elements of the business component and the design, construction, and testing of prototypes, models, and pilot plants.

"(2) EXCLUSIONS.—The term 'qualified research' does not include—

(A) any activity with respect to a technologically new or improved business component after the beginning of commerical production (as defined in paragraph (6)) of such component, except that otherwise qualified research undertaken to determine the safety of any product designed for human use and consumption or the efficacy of any product designed to promote public health and safety shall qualify under paragraph (1) regardless of when such research is performed;

"(B) any development of plant processes, machinery, or techniques for commercial production of a technologically new or improved business component, except where such process, machinery, or technique itself constitutes a technologically new or improved business component (within the meaning of paragraphs (3) and (4) of this subsection);

"(C) any adaptation of an existing business component to a particular customer's requirement or need as part of a continuing commercial activity where such adaptation will not result in a technologically new or improved business component;

"(D) any efficiency surveys, management studies, management techniques, market research, market testing and development (such as advertising or promotions), routine data collections (other than data collections relating to a process of experimentation as defined in paragraph (4)), or routine or ordinary testing or inspection of materials or business components for quality control;

"(E) any development or improvement of a business component where the predominant portion of any related activity which would constitute qualified research but for this subparagraph constitutes duplication;

"(F) except to the extent provided for by regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary, any activity with respect to computer software that is separately developed by or for the benefit of the taxpayer specifically for the internal use of such taxpayer other than for use in—

"(i) qualified research, or

"(ii) a production process that utilizes a business component with respect to which a credit is allowable under this section;

"(G) any activity conducted outside of the United States;

"(H) any activity in the social sciences, arts or humanities;

"(I) any activity to the extent funded by any grant, contract, or otherwise by any person (or any governmental entity) other than the taxpayer; and

"(J) any activity undertaken for the purpose of ascertaining the existence, location, extent, or quality of any deposit of ore or other mineral (including oil and gas).

"(3) TECHNOLOGICALLY NEW OR IMPROVED.—A business component of the taxpayer shall be treated as 'technologically new or improved' if—

"(A) the new or improved characteristics of such component are technological (as defined in paragraph (7)) in nature, and

"(B) substantially all of the activities undertaken in developing or improving such component that qualify under section 174 constitute elements of a process of experimentation (within the meaning of paragraph (4)) relating to such factors as new or improved function, performance, efficacy, reliability, quality, safety, or reduced cost, rather than to style, taste, cosmetic, or seasonal design factors.

Solely for purposes of subparagraph (B), any activities that are excluded under paragraph (2) or that relate to the duplication (as defined in paragraph (8)) of a business component by the taxpayer shall not be treated as an activity undertaken in developing or improving a business component of the taxpayer.

"(4) EXPERIMENTATION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'process of experimentation' shall mean a process in a field of science or technology involving steps of—

"(A) formulating technological objectives and specifications for a technologically new or improved business component,

"(B) developing hypotheses with respect to each of a sequence of interconnected design decisions because of uncertainty as to whether any particular design alternative for the business component as a whole that is ultimately produced from such sequence will fulfill the desired set of technological objectives and specifications,

"(C) testing and analyzing (such as modeling and simulation) the hypotheses to determine the ability of each to achieve the desired result with respect to the relevant design decision, and

"(D) refining or discarding such hypotheses and other hypotheses within the sequence of design decisions, or selecting alternative hypotheses, on the basis of the knowledge derived from the tests and analyses and documentation, if any, of such technological knowledge as to function and performance.

"(5) BUSINESS COMPONENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'business component' means a product, process, computer software, technique, formula, or invention to be offered for sale, lease, or license, or to be used by the taxpayer in a trade or business.

"(B) SUBSET OF ELEMENTS.—If the requirements of paragraph (3) are not met with respect to a product, process, or software but are met with respect to one or more elements thereof, the most significant set of elements of such product, process, or software with respect to which the requirements of paragraph (3) are met shall be treated as a business component.

"(6) BEGINNING OF COMMERCIAL PRODUCTION.—The term 'beginning of commercial production' means any activity after the business component has been developed to the point where it constitutes a finished business component which meets the functional and economic requirements of the taxpayer for such component and is ready for commercial sale or use. If the business component cannot be offered for sale or use in a particular country, jurisdiction, or other defined geographical area until approval is obtained from a governmental agency or other regulatory authority, the 'beginning of commercial production' shall be determined separately with respect to each area and shall not be deemed to commence with respect to such area prior to the date upon which such approval is obtained.

"(7) TECHNOLOGICAL.—The term 'technological' means pertaining to or predicated upon principles of the physical sciences, biological sciences, chemical sciences, engineering, or computer science.

"(8) DUPLICATION.—The term 'duplication' means any activity related to the reproduction of an existing business component of the taxpayer or of another taxpayer from a physical examination of the component itself or from plans, blueprints, detailed specifications, or publicly available information with respect to such component."

SEC. 103. AVAILABILITY OF THE CREDIT TO CORPORATIONS AND TO CERTAIN JOINT RESEARCH VENTURES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (b) of section 30 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(4) AVAILABILITY TO CORPORATIONS.—All in-house research expenses and contract research expenses paid or incurred by a taxpayer which is a regular corporation shall constitute qualified research expenses if, at the time such research expenses are paid or incurred, the principal purpose of such taxpayer is to use the results of the research in the active conduct of a present or future trade or business of the taxpayer or of a member of the same controlled group of corporations as the taxpayer.

"(5) TRADE OR BUSINESS REQUIREMENT AND ALLOCATION IN THE CASE OF PARTNERSHIPS.—

"(A) TRADE OR BUSINESS PARTNERSHIPS.—An in-house research expense or contract research expense paid or incurred by a partnership is a qualified research expense of the partnership if (i) the expense is paid or incurred by the partnership in carrying on a trade or business of the partnership as determined at the partnership level without regard to the trade or business of any partner, or (ii) each partner is a regular corporation (as defined in subsection (f)(6)) and the partnership meets the requirements of paragraph (4) as applied at the partnership level without regard to the trade or business of any partner. In the case of a partnership to which this subparagraph applies, the credit under this section shall be apportioned among the partners in accordance with section 704.

"(B) OTHER PARTNERSHIPS OF REGULAR CORPORATIONS.—In the case of an in-house research expense or a contract research expense that is paid or incurred by a partnership to which subparagraph (A) is inapplicable, where each partner is a regular corporation (as defined in subsection (f)(6)) such research expense shall be treated as paid or incurred directly by the partners for purposes of subsection (b) and shall be apportioned among the partners in accordance with the provisions of section 704.

"(C) OTHER PARTNERSHIPS OF TRADE OR BUSINESS PARTNERS.—In the case of an in-house research expense or a contract research expense that is paid or incurred by a partnership to which subparagraph (A) is inapplicable, where, if each partner had conducted directly the research conducted by or on behalf of the partnership all such research expenses paid or incurred by the partnership would have been paid or incurred by that partner in carrying on a trade or business of that partner, such expenses shall be treated as qualified research expenses (within the meaning of subparagraph (b)(1)) paid or incurred directly by the partners and shall be apportioned among the partners in accordance with the provisions of section 704.

(b) PASS-THRU.—Paragraph (2) of section 30(f) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) PASS-THRU IN THE CASE OF ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of subsection (d) of section 52 shall apply.".

(c) CONTROLLED GROUP OF CORPORATIONS.—Subparagraph (B) of section 30(f)(5) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) the determination shall be made without regard to subsection 1563(a)(4), subsection 1563(e)(3)(C), and, except for purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, subsection 1563(b)(2)(C)."

(d) REGULAR CORPORATION.—Subsection (f) of section 30 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(6) REGULAR CORPORATION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'regular corporation' means any corporation other than—

"(A) an S corporation,

"(B) a service organization (as defined in section 414(m)(3)), and

"(C) except to the extent provided in regulations, a personal holding company (as defined in section 542).".

SEC. 104. EFFECTIVE DATE; TRANSITION RULE.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by sections 101, 102, and 103 of title I of this Act generally shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985. However, the amendments made by section 102 shall not apply with respect to the determination of base period research expenses (as defined in section 30(c) of the Code) for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1986 except to the extent that the taxpayer makes an election pursuant to subsection (b).

(b) TRANSITION RULE.—If the taxpayer so elects, base period research expenses for each taxable year beginning before January 1, 1986 may be recomputed for determination years (as defined in section 30(c)(2)(A) of the Code) beginning after December 31, 1985 on the basis of the definition of qualified research expenses as applicable for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985. In such case, the qualified research expenses for any base period year beginning before January 1, 1986 shall be not less than an amount determined by multiplying the qualified research expenses for that base period year as computed under the definition applicable to taxable years beginning before January 1, 1986 by a fraction the numerator of which is qualified research expenses for the determination year as computed under the definition applicable for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985 and the denominator of which is qualified research expenses for the determination year as computed under the definition applicable for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1986.

TITLE II.—PROMOTION OF UNIVERSITY RESEARCH AND SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION

SEC. 201. EXPANSION OF THE CREDIT FOR UNIVERSITY BASIC RESEARCH.

(a) CREDIT FOR UNIVERSITY BASIC RESEARCH PAYMENTS IN EXCESS OF FIXED BASE.—Subsection (a) of section 30 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to—

"(1) 25 percent of the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the qualified research expenses for the taxable year, over

"(B) the base period research expenses; and

"(2) 20 percent of the amount of the incremental university basic research expenditures (as determined under subsection (e)).".

(b) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO PAYMENTS FOR UNIVERSITY BASIC RESEARCH.—Subsection (e) of section 30 is amended to read as follows:

"(e) PAYMENTS TO COLLEGES, UNIVERSITIES, AND CERTAIN QUALIFIED ORGANIZATIONS FOR BASIC RESEARCH.—

"(1) INCREMENTAL UNIVERSITY BASIC RESEARCH EXPENDITURES.—The amount of incremental university basic research expenditures taken into account under subsection (a)(2) shall be the amount by which the total university basic research payments of the taxpayer exceed the sum of—

"(i) the minimum university basic research amount, and

"(ii) the maintenance-of-effort amount.

"(2) DEFINITIONS RELATING TO UNIVERSITY PAYMENTS.—

"(A) TOTAL UNIVERSITY BASIC RESEARCH PAYMENTS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'total university basic research payments' means the sum of all amounts of money paid or incurred in any taxable year by a corporation to qualified organizations, pursuant to a written agreement between the corporation and such organization, for basic research which (except in the case of an organization that is described in subparagraph (C) or (D) of paragraph (e)(4)) is to be performed by such organization.

"(B) MINIMUM UNIVERSITY BASIC RESEARCH AMOUNT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'minimum university basic research amount' means an amount equal to 1 percent of the average of the sum of—

"(i) all in-house research expenses,

"(ii) all contract research expenses (other than amounts treated as contract research expenses under paragraph (3)(B)), and

"(iii) 65 percent of the total university basic research payments, for each of the three taxable years immediately preceding the taxable year beginning after December 31, 1983.

"(C) MAINTENANCE-OF-EFFORT AMOUNT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'maintenance-of-effort amount' shall mean the excess of—

"(i) the average of the undesignated donations paid or incurred by the taxpayer during those three of the immediately preceding four taxable years as are elected by the taxpayer, over

"(ii) the amount of undesignated donations paid or incurred by the taxpayer in the taxable year.

"(D) UNDESIGNATED DONATIONS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'undesignated donations' means the total of amounts paid or incurred by the taxpayer to all institutions of higher education (within the meaning of section 3304(f)) that are described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii)—

"(i) for which a deduction was allowable under section 170, and

"(ii) which were not designated by the taxpayer for use for the purposes described in paragraph (2)(A).

"(3) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) EXCLUSION FROM INCREMENTAL CREDIT CALCULATION.—For purposes of determining the amount of credit allowable under subsection (a)(1) of this section for any taxable year, the amount of incremental university basic research expenditures taken into account under subsection (a)(2) shall not be treated as a qualified research expense under subsection (a)(1)(A) and shall not be included in the computation of base period research expenses under subsection (a)(1)(B).

"(B) NON-INCREMENTAL UNIVERSITY BASIC RESEARCH AMOUNT.—65 percent of the amount that is determined by subtracting the amount of incremental university basic research expenditures taken into account under subsection (a)(2) from total university basic research payments (as defined in paragraph (a)(A)) shall be treated as a contract research expense.

"(C) TRADE OR BUSINESS QUALIFICATION.—Total university basic research payments shall be treated as an amount paid or incurred in carrying on a trade or business of the taxpayer in the taxable year in which it is paid or incurred (without regard to the provisions of subsection (b)(3)(B)).

"(4) QUALIFIED ORGANIZATION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified organization' means—

"(A) any educational organization which is described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) and which is an institution of higher education (within the meaning of section 3304 (f)),

"(B) any other organization which—

"(i) is described in section 501(c)(3) and is exempt from tax under section 501(a),

"(ii) is organized and operated primarily to conduct scientific research, and

"(iii) is not a private foundation, or

"(C) any organization which—

"(i) either is described in section 501(c)(3) and is not a private foundation or is described in section 501(c)(6),

"(ii) is exempt from tax under section 501(a),

"(iii) is organized and operated primarily to promote scientific research by qualified organizations (within the meaning of subsection (e)(4)(A)) pursuant to written research agreements, and

"(iv) expends on a current basis substantially all of its fund that is segregated and specially dedicated for the purpose of receiving and disbursing the amounts described in paragraph (2)(A), through grants or contracts for basic research by an organization described in subsection (e)(4)(A).

"(D) any organization not described in subparagraph (B) or (C) which—

"(i) is describe in section 501(c)(3) and is exempt from tax under section 501(a) and is not a private foundation,

"(ii) is established and maintained by an organization established before July 10, 1981, which meets the requirements of clause (i),

"(iii) is organized and operated exclusively for purposes of making grants pursuant to written research agreements to organizations described in paragraph (e)(4)(A) for purposes of basic research, and

"(iv) makes an election, revocable only with the consent of the Secretary, to be treated as a private foundation for purposes of this title (other than section 4940, relating to excise tax based on investment income).

"(5) BASIC RESEARCH.—The term 'basic research' means any original investigation for the advancement of scientific knowledge not having a specific commercial objective, except that such term shall not include—

"(A) basic research conducted outside of the United States, and

"(B) basic research in the social sciences or humanities.

"(6) CERTAIN CORPORATIONS NOT ELIGIBLE.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'corporation' (as defined in section 7701(a)(3)) shall not include—

"(A) an S corporation (as defined in section 1361(a)),

"(B) a personal holding company (as defined in section 542), and

"(C) a service organization (as defined in section 414(m)(3)).".

SEC. 202. DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN CONTRIBUTIONS OF SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNOLOGICAL PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 170 is amended—

"(1) by striking out paragraph (4) of subsection (e),

"(2) by redesignating subsections (i), (j), (k), and (l) as subsections (j), (k), (l), and (m), respectively, and

"(3) by inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

"(i) CONTRIBUTIONS OF SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNOLOGICAL PROPERTY FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.—

"(1) AMOUNT OF DEDUCTION.—In the case of a qualified research or education contribution, the amount of the deduction shall not be reduced under subsection (e) but shall be determined under paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(2) QUALIFIED RESEARCH OR EDUCATION CONTRIBUTION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified research or education contribution' means a charitable contribution by a corporation of qualified scientific property to—

"(A) an educational organization which—

"(i) is described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii), and

"(ii) is an institut'on of higher education (as defined in subsection (i)(7)(C)), or

"(B) is an association—

"(i) substantially all of the members of which are educational organizations described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii) that are institutions of higher education,

"(ii) which is described in section 501(c)(3) and is exempt from tax under 501(a), and

"(iii) which is not a private foundation.

"(3) QUALIFIED SCIENTIFIC PROPERTY.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified scientific property' means tangible personal property (including for purposes of this subsection computer software) (i) described in section 1221(1) or (ii) used in carrying on the trade or business of the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 1231(b)), but only if—

"(A) such contribution is made through the governing body of the donee,

"(B) such property is scientific or technological equipment or apparatus, replacement parts therefor, or computer software, substantially all of the use of which by the donee is for direct education of students or faculty, research and experimentation (within the meaning of section 174), or research training, in the United States in mathematics, the physical, biological, or chemical sciences, engineering, or advanced computer science,

"(C) such contribution is made—

"(i) in the case of tangible personal property described in section 1221(l), not later than 6 months after the date upon which the manufacture, construction, or assembly of the property is substantially completed, or

"(ii) in the case of tangible personal property used in a taxpayer's trade or business (as defined in section 1231(b)), not more than 3 years after the property is first placed in service,

"(D) in case of a contribution of tangible personal property that is described in section 1221(1), such property is manufactured or produced (within the meaning of section 954(d)(1)(A) and the regulations thereunder) by the taxpayer and the taxpayer is regularly engaged in the business of manufacturing or producing such property and selling or leasing such property,

"(E) in the case of a contribution of tangible personal property described in section 1221(1), the original use of such property is by the donee,

"(F) the property is not transferred by the donee in exchange for money, other property, or services within 5 years of the date of the original transfer to the donee,

"(G) the taxpayer receives from the governing body of the donee a written statement, executed under penalties of perjury, representing that—

"(i) the property meets the requirements of subparagraph (J), and

"(ii) the use and disposition of the property by the donee will be in accordance with the provisions of subparagraphs (B) and (F),

"(H) except in the case of property that is computer software or replacement parts, the fair market value of the property transferred exceeds $250,

"(I) such property is accompanied by the same warranty or warranties normally provided by the manufacturer in connection with a sale of the equipment or apparatus transferred, and

"(J) such property is functional and usable in the condition in which it is transferred for the purposes described in paragraph (3)(B), without the necessity of any repair, reconditioning, or other similar investment by the donee.

"(4) AMOUNT OF ALLOWABLE DEDUCTION.—The amount of the deduction allowable under paragraph (1) shall be—

"(A) in the case of tangible personal property described in section 1221(1), the fair market value of the property, limited to the lesser of (A) the sum of the taxpayer's basis in the property and one-half of the amount of gain which would not have been long-term capital gain if the property had been sold by the taxpayer at its fair market value (determined at the time of such transfer), or (B) twice the taxpayer's basis in the property; and

"(B) in the case of tangible personal property that is used in the taxpayer's trade or business (as defined in section 1231(b)), the lesser of—

"(i) the fair market value of the property, or

"(ii) 150 percent of the taxpayer's basis in the property (without regard to adjustments under section 1016) less any adjustments under section 1016(a).

"(5) PROPORTION OF PRODUCTS SOLD LIMITATION.—The deduction otherwise allowable under subsection (a) of section 170 shall not be allowed in the case of a contribution of otherwise qualified scientific property (excluding property used in the taxpayer's trade or business), where the taxpayer's total qualified research or education contributions of such property under this section in the taxable year, as determined on a product-by-product basis, exceed 20 percent of the number of units of each such product sold by the taxpayer in the ordinary course of its business in that taxable year.

"(6) SPECIAL RULE FOR LEASE RETURNS.—Solely for purposes of this section, tangible personal property used in carrying on the trade or business of the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 1231(b)) shall be deemed to include tangible personal property described in section 1221(1) that has been placed in service within the immediately preceding three taxable years by customers of a taxpayer who is described in subsection (i)(3)(d) of this section pursuant to lease arrangements with the taxpayer and which has been returned to the taxpayer pursuant to the terms of such lease arrangements.

"(7) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) SUBSTANTIALLY ALL.—The term 'substantially all' shall mean at least 80 percent.

"(B) CORPORATION.—The term 'corporation' shall not include—

"(i) an S corporation (as defined in section 1361(a)),

"(ii) a personal holding company (as defined in section 542), or

"(iii) a service organization (as defined in section 414(m)(3)).

"(C) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term 'institution of higher education' means an educational institution in any State which—

"(i) admits as regular students only individuals having a certificate of graduation from a high school, or the recognized equivalent of such a certificate,

"(ii) is legally authorized within such State to provide a program of education beyond high school,

"(iii) provides an educational program for which it awards a bachelor's or higher degree, or provides a program which is acceptable for full credit toward such a degree, or offers a program of training to prepare students for gainful employment in a recognized occupation, and

"(iv) is a public or other nonprofit institution.".

SEC. 203. EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME OF CERTAIN SCHOLARSHIPS, GRANTS, AND STUDENT LOAN FORGIVENESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part III of subchapter B of chapter I is amended by inserting after section 117 the following new section:

"SEC. 117A. SCHOLARSHIPS, FELLOWSHIP GRANTS, AND STUDENT LOAN FORGIVENESS RECEIVED BY CERTAIN GRADUATE STUDENTS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—In the case of a qualified individual, gross income does not include—

"(1) any amount received—

"(A) as a scholarship,

"(B) as a fellowship grant, or

"(C) as qualified student loan forgiveness, including the value of contributed services and accommodations; and

"(2) any amount received to cover expenses for—

"(A) travel,

"(B) research,

"(C) clerical help, or

which are incidental to such a scholarship or to a fellowship grant, but only to the extent that the amount is so expended by the recipient.

"(b) QUALIFIED INDIVIDUAL.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'qualified individual' shall mean a student who is attending a qualified educational organization, who possesses a bachelor's degree or its equivalent, and who is engaged in postgraduate study as a degree candidate.

"(c) QUALIFIED EDUCATIONAL ORGANIZATION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified educational organization' shall mean an educational institution which—

"(1) is described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(ii),

"(2) admits as regular students only individuals having a certificate of graduation from a high school, or the recognized equivalent of such a certificate,

"(3) is legally authorized within such State to provide a program of education beyond high school,

"(4) provides an educational program for which it awards a bachelor's or higher degree.

"(d) QUALIFIED STUDENT LOAN FORGIVENESS.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified student loan forgiveness' shall mean the forgiveness of a loan received by a qualified individual (as defind in subsection (b)) for the purpose of financing his postgraduate course of study, but only to the extent that—

"(1) the amount represented by the loan was expended for qualified tuition and related expenses (as defined in subsection (f)(2)),

"(2) such student is required in a written loan agreement, as a condition of receiving such forgiveness of the loan, to perform teaching services for any of a broad class of qualified educational organizations (as defined in subsection (c)) upon completion of his postgraduate course of study.

"(e) LIMITATION.—In the case of a qualified individual, subsection (a) shall not apply to that portion of any amount received which represents payment for teaching, research, or other services in the nature of part-time employment required during his postgraduate course of study as a condition of receiving the scholarship, the fellowship grant, or qualified student loan. If teaching, research, or other services are required of all candidates (whether or not recipients of scholarships, fellowship grants, or qualified student loans) for a particular degree at a qualified educational organization as a condition to receiving such degree, such teaching, research, or other services shall not be regarded as part-time employment within the meaning of this paragraph.

"(f) SCHOLARSHIPS AND FELLOWSHIP GRANTS NOT INCLUDABLE MERELY BECAUSE THERE IS A REQUIREMENT OF FUTURE SERVICE IN TEACHING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

"(A) an amount received by a qualified individual would be excludable under subsections (a) and (e) as a scholarship or fellowship grant, but for the fact that such individual is required to perform teaching services for any of a broad class of qualified educational organizations upon completion of his postgraduate course of study, and

"(B) the individual establishes that, in accordance with the terms of the scholarship or grant, such amount was used for qualified tuition and related expenses, gross income shall not include such amount.

"(2) QUALIFIED TUITION AND RELATED EXPENSES DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified tuition and related expenses' shall mean—

"(A) tuition and fees required for the enrollment or attendance of a qualified individual as a student at a qualified educational organization, and

"(B) fees, books, supplies, and equipment required for courses of instruction at a qualified educational organization.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 117 the following new item:

"SEC. 117A. SCHOLARSHIPS, FELLOWSHIP GRANTS, AND STUDENT LOAN FORGIVENESS RECEIVED BY CERTAIN GRADUATE SCIENCE STUDENTS.".

SEC. 204. EFFECTIVE DATE

The amendment made by sections 201, 202, and 203 of title II of this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1985.

By Mr. GOLDWATER:

S. 59. A bill to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to limit excessive expenditures and to provide for more timely and complete public reporting of campaign gifts and spending; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURE LIMITS ACT

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the most expensive election in U.S. history was completed 2 months ago. New funding records were set for Presidential and congressional candidates. Contributions by political action committees rose to a higher percentage of total congressional campaign receipts that ever before.

The problems of what this unprecedented rise in campaign spending means to the Nation and when it will end are lost in the rush to raise even more money to pay off old debts or begin campaign treasuries for the next election. Few people seem to care that present campaign law, as applied since the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court on January 30, 1976, in Buckley against Valeo, has opened the doors for virtually unchecked huge independent and personal political spending and that this spending threatens the very basis of the free election process. The Nation is now enduring what one legal commentator has called "the new Constitutional right to buy elections."

Mr. President, my concern is that unchecked, runaway campaign spending is corrupting the political process by making candidates vulnerable to special interest influence and creating the impression of undue influence even where it may not exist. Also, I believe that huge campaign spending is distorting campaigns by giving more and more control to consultants who specialize in the packaging and marketing of candidates and superficial issues.

Voting participation is bound to decline as public perception increases that only the voice of a big giver counts, not the vote of an individual citizen who cannot afford to make large political donations.

This mood will deny elected officials the public trust needed to sustain them in making difficult decisions for the good of the public at large. And the demands of the fundraising treadmill will force more and more office holders to neglect their duties to patronize big donors and PAC events around the Nation. The 3-day legislative week is already becoming commomplace in Washington, DC, so that Members can escape town to fulfill the never-ending quest for campaign funds.

Mr. President, I believe the answer to these dangers is simple. We must set a rational ceiling on total congressional and Presidential campaign spending by all sources, the candidates themselves, political parties, PAC's and individuals.

In the last Congress I introduced a bill, S. 1684, to amend the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 to limit excessive political expenditures. The need for tight spending limits is greater now than ever and I am today reintroducing the same legislative proposal.

My bill would restrict spending by each candidate in Presidential races to $15 million in primaries and $25 million in the general election, an adequate sum to get a candidate's message across. The cost of raising funds would count against these ceilings. These dollar limits would be reinforced by a prohibition against fundraising for the general election of the Presidential race until June 1 of the year of the election and by shortening the length of Presidential campaigns. The bill would cut down the time of the general election to 6 weeks by providing that no nominating convention can be held before the first Monday in September of the year of the election, instead of in July or August.

Senate campaign spending would be limited to no more than 12 cents per voting age citizen in primary elections and 22 cents in general elections, except that in smaller States a minimum of $150,000 in primaries and $250,000 in the final election would be permitted. Using current population data, the minimum would apply in 16 States.

Spending in House races would be limited to $100,000 in primaries and another $100,000 in general elections, with an exception for the six States which are single Member districts. The Senate statewide ceiling would apply in these States.

Spending by congressional candidates out of their own pockets would be included in computing the total expenditures allowed under the new law. Other individual spending, not under the control of a candidate, would be limited to $5,000 in each of the 535 legislative campaigns.

Also, the bill calls for more timely and complete public reports. A copy of all reports filed would be made available for inspection for the first time at each candidate's headquarters. An additional report not called for by present law before the election would have to be filed covering the now hidden period between 20 and 10 days prior to the election. Major categories of spending would have to be identified on all public reports for the first time and PAC's would be required to reveal their connections with associated groups in all fundraising letters.

Finally, the bill will repeal the public financing of Presidential elections. Not only am I skeptical about allowing control over huge sums of the taxpayers' dollars rest with possibly self-interested governmental administrators, but I doubt the effectiveness of public financing in light of the loophole which allows candidates to have millions and millions of dollars spent on their behalf by supposedly independent individuals and groups.

Mr. President, I believe strongly that the Nation is facing a crisis of liberty from unchecked campaign spending. We must prove to the people that elective office is not for sale. We must convince the public that elected officials are what the framers intended—agents of the sovereign people, not the hired hands of rich givers.

With the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution fast approaching, I can think of no better way we could return to the first principles on which our Republic was founded then to cleanse the political process of the taint of excessive campaign spending and of actual or perceived control by special interest groups.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 60. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide payments under Federal employee health benefits plans for services of mental health specialists and to provide mental health benefits and services under such plans; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE MENTAL HEALTH BENEFITS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Federal Employees' Health Benefit Program to ensure that the services of qualified clinical social workers will be readily available to Federal employees and their families.

The bill which I propose today would also expressly authorize the services of psychiatric nurse specialists.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 60

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8901 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (8);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(10) 'mental health specialist' means a psychiatrist, a clinical psychologist, a clinical social worker, or a psychiatric nurse specialist;

"(11) 'psychiatrist' means a physician who—

"(A) is described in paragraph (1) of section 1861(r) of the Social Security Act; and

"(B)(i) is certified by the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology; or

"(ii) has successfully completed not less than three years of graduate medical training in psychiatry approved by the Director of the Office of Personnel Management;

"(12) 'clinical psychologist' means an individual who—

"(A) is licensed or certified for private practice of psychology by the State in which the individual practices psychology;

"(B)(i) has been awarded a doctorate degree in psychology by an institution of higher education that is accredited by a nationally recognized regional accrediting agency or association; or

"(ii) in the case of any individual who was licensed or certified as described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph before January 1, 1978, has been awarded a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of providers of mental health services specializing in psychology which national register is recognized by the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

"(C) has not less than two years of supervised experience in providing health care services including at least one year of such experience after the date of the award of the degree referred to in the applicable clause of subparagraph (B) of this paragraph;

"(13) 'clinical social worker' means an individual who—

"(A) has been awarded a master's or doctorate degree in social work;

"(B) has performed at least two years of supervised clinical social work after the date of the award of such degree; and

"(C)(i) is licensed or certified as a clinical social worker by the State in which the individual practices social work; or

"(ii) in the case of a clinical social worker who practices in a State that does not license or certify clinical social workers, is listed in any national register of clinical social workers recognized by the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

"(14) 'psychiatric nurse specialist' means an individual who—

"(A) is licensed as a nurse by the State in which the individual practices nursing;

"(B) has been awarded a master's or higher degree with a specialization in psychiatric nursing or a related specialty by an institution of higher education accredited by a nationally recognized regional accrediting agency or association; and

"(C) is certified as a psychiatric nurse by a national professional nurse organization recognized by the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

"(15) 'State' includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the territories and possessions of the United States.".

SEC. 2. Section 8902(k) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "a clinical psychologist or optometrist, licensed or certified as such under Federal or State law, as applicable," and inserting in lieu thereof "an optometrist, licensed or certified as such under Federal or State law, as applicable, or a mental health specialist,"; and

(2) by striking out "such a clinical psychologist or optometrist" and inserting in lieu thereof "such an optometrist or mental health specialist".

SEC. 3. Section 8904 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following new item:

"(G) Mental health benefits."; and

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (2) the following new item:

"(G) Mental health services.".

SEC. 4. The amendment made by this Act shall take effect with respect to contracts or plans in effect under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, after December 31, 1985.

51-059 O-86-6 (Pt. 1)

By Mr. FORD:

S. 62. A bill to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 to exempt State law enforcement officers from such act; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AGE EXEMPTIONS FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing legislation to correct what I feel is an unintended consequence of legislation passed in 1974 which expanded coverage of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act [ADEA] to State and local employees. Until 1974, State law enforcement personnel were not covered by ADEA.

The legislation I am reintroducing today is identical to S. 2425, which I introduced last Congress. Although no action was taken on that bill in the 98th Congress, I am hopeful that the Senate Labor Subcommittee and the full Labor and Human Resources Committee will review this legislation early in the 99th Congress.

State law enforcement agencies were free to structure retirement policies for their officers which provided more generous retirement benefits in return for early mandatory retirement.

State law enforcement agencies have long recognized early retirement as necessary to both attract and maintain the youthful and vigorous work force which the hazards of the job demand. In light of recent lawsuits brought by EEOC under provisions of the ADEA, retirement policies of State law enforcement agencies across the Nation are being jeopardized. Because I do not believe that Congress intended to threaten the quality of State law enforcement protection when it expanded the ADEA to State employees, the legislation I am reintroducing today would exempt State law enforcement personnel from the act.

Since 1947, Congress has recognized the need for early retirement benefits for Federal law enforcement personnel and has provided special early retirement benefits to all Federal employees whose duties are primarily investigating, apprehending, or detaining persons suspected or convicted of committing Federal crimes.

Throughout the years, these same provisions have been extended to Federal employees of correctional institutions and Federal firefighters. By 1977, about 52,000 employees in various Federal agencies and the District of Columbia were covered under the special retirement program for Federal law enforcement and firefighters personnel, including employees in the FBI, Bureau of Prisons, Immigration and Naturalization Service, U.S. Customs Service, Internal Revenue Service, U.S. Secret Service, and the U.S. Postal Service.

Congress has consistently maintained that the need for early retirement policies for these employees has been to improve and maintain the quality, efficiency, and productivity of law enforcement activities by making it a "young man's service." In 1974, Congress passed Public Law 93-350 which established, effective January 1978, mandatory retirement at age 55, or upon completion of 20 years of covered service, for all covered Federal law enforcement and firefighting personnel. Congress emphasized in the legislative history of that bill that the special retirement provisions were necessary to insure a work force young enough to cope with the unusual physical and emotional requirements of those positions. Although there was no floor debate in the Senate on this issue, debate on the House floor clearly indicated the concern of Congress that the goal of mandatory retirement be met: To maintain a relatively young and vigorous staff of law enforcement and firefighting personnel capable of carrying out the demanding and hazardous duties of their positions by replacing older personnel who, because of the stringent physical requirements of their positions and the unusual mental and emotional stress associated with those positions, were no longer able to perform at top efficiency.

Mr. President, I contend that the goal of mandatory retirement provisions of State law enforcement agencies is no less necessary than that expounded by Congress for Federal law enforcement personnel. In fact, the need for special retirement provisions for Federal law enforcement personnel was justified based on State special retirement provisions. And although the need for special retirement benefits for Federal law enforcement and firefighting personnel has been questioned over the years, Congress has let those provisions firmly stand.

In 1978 during debate of legislation which amended the ADEA to raise the mandatory retirement age to 70 for non-Federal employees, the issue of early retirement for Federal law enforcement personnel was raised. Consequently, the House Subcommittee on Compensation and Employees Benefits, House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, held 6 days of hearings between September 27 and December 1, 1977, on special Federal retirement provisions. The overwhelming feeling of those who testified was that since 1947 Congress had consistently recognized the need for special retirement benefits for Federal law enforcement officials due to the hazardous and demanding duties of their positions and that those duties required a relatively young and vigorous work force which could best be maintained by encouraging early retirement.

Testimony at those hearings indicated that although factors other than age, such as the results of rigorous routine medical exams, might serve as an alternative basis for mandatory retirement, such alternative tests had not been satisfactorily developed by the medical community so as to be workable and dependable. Furthermore, such procedures would be costly to administer and produce unreliable results. Witnesses contended that until methods can be developed which reliably correlate the requirements of a special job and the measurable physical and emotional fitness of an individual employee, age is the only way of measuring fitness. Although age may seem to be an arbitrary measurement, it can be proved that after a certain age, physical ability and activity generally decline. The subcommittee took no action following those hearings to either narrow or repeal the mandatory retirement provisions for Federal law enforcement personnel.

When Congress expanded coverage of the ADEA to State and local employees in 1974, there was no indication of what effect this action might have on State law enforcement personnel either in the committee reports or during the floor debates in the House and Senate. But today, the effects of that extension are being felt in my home State of Kentucky, as well as in many other States which are suddenly finding themselves in court defending mandatory retirement policies for State law enforcement personnel.

There can be no doubt that the same concerns which have led Congress to uphold mandatory retirement for Federal law enforcement personnel apply equally to State law enforcement personnel. The duties of State law enforcement personnel are equally hazardous, equally demanding, and equally stressful. The duties of State law enforcement personnel similarly require a youthful and vigorous work force. The demands of State law enforcement personnel equally deserve the recognition that such hazardous service warrants special early retirement policies with generous benefits to compensate for both the rigorous effects of the duties performed and the financial needs of a relatively young retiree.

Unfortunately, by extending the ADEA to State employees, Congress unintentionally, and with no public debate on the consequences, also effectively eliminated the ability of State law enforcement agencies to structure effective special retirement policies for State law enforcement personnel.

The bill I am reintroducing to day seeks to rectify this consequence by exempting State law enforcement personnel from the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. I have been a long and ardent supporter of the act and the protection it affords older Americans in the work force. I do not, and would not, support a wholesale repeal of the act as it pertains to State and local employees. However, recognizing the historic importance Congress has given the special needs of Federal law enforcemnt personnel in exempting them from the ADEA, I can see no less need in exempting similar workers on the State level. Like the Federal exemption, my bill exempts only those State employees whose duties are primarily the investigation, apprehension, or detention of individuals suspected or convicted of offenses against the criminal laws of a State, or the enforcement of traffic laws of a State, or both. Like the Federal exemption, my bill also exempts these law enforcement employees who are transferred to a supervisory position.

The National Governors Association, at its August 1983 meeting, adopted a policy position urging the adoption of legislation to exempt State law enforcement officials from the ADEA. Similary, the National Association of Attorneys General adopted a resolution at its June 1983 meeting supporting legislation which would resolve this inconsistency in retirement coverage between Federal and State law enforcement officials. In September 1983, the National Troopers Coalition issued a resolution calling on Congress to enact legislation exempting State law enforcement officials from the ADEA. Finally, in April 1984, the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrations endorsed this legislation.

Clearly, there is a national need for such legislation and the bill which I am reintroducing is designed to address the legitimate needs of a limited sector of State employees. This bill is not intended to open the door to far-reaching repeal of the ADEA. It is not an indictment of the older worker nor does it purport to establish a precedent for early retirement. This bill does seek to recognize that in a very few occupations, age is a significant factor in job performance; and in the case of law enforcement personnel, is the only reasonably controllable factor. This bill does not seek to increase the kind or number of occupations exempted under ADEA, but simply addresses an inconsistency in the application of the ADEA between the identical needs of Federal and State law enforcement personnel and extends only to that specific State group.

Last Congress, several State Governors and administrators endorsed this legislation. Those supporting this legislation last Congress include Gov. Martha Layne Collins of Kentucky, Gov. Mark White of Texas, Gov. Toney Anaya of New Mexico, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts, Gov. James R. Thompson of Illinois, Gov. John Evans of Idaho, Gov. Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, Gov. Dick Thornburgh of Pennsylvania, Gov. Allen I. Olson of North Dakota, and Gov. Joe Frank Harris of Georgia. State administrators supporting this legislation in the 98th Congress included Commissioner Morgan T. Elkins of the Kentucky State Police, Col. John Dempsey, chief of the Colorado State Patrol, and Commissioner Gus A. Wood III of the Tennessee Department of Safety. I know that several of my colleagues received correspondence from these officials requesting their support of this legislation. I hope my colleagues will be able to review this legislation and join with me as cosponsors of it.

I will fight long and hard for the rights of older Americans to remain, free from discrimination, in this Nation's work force. At the same time, I will fight long and hard to ensure that the safety and well-being of all older Americans is preserved by young and vigorous State law enforcement personnel who are physically and emotionally capable of protecting not only the elderly but all citizens.

By Mr. GOLDWATER:

S. 63. A bill to encourage the rendering of in-flight emergency care aboard aircraft by requiring the placement of emergency first aid medical supplies and equipment aboard aircraft and by relieving appropriate persons of liability for the provision and use of such equipment and supplies; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

IN-FLIGHT MEDICAL EMERGENCIES ACT

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I send to the desk a bill designed to encourage in-flight emergency care aboard aircraft by requiring the placement of emergency equipment, supplies, and drugs aboard aircraft and by relieving appropriate persons of liability for the provision and use of such emergency equipment supplies and drugs. This bill, if enacted, will be cited as the In-Flight Medical Emergency Act.

Mr. President, I first introduced the proposal in May 1983 as S. 314. The bill I am introducing today is identical to the amended version reported by the Commerce Committee last May. Unfortunately, it never was acted upon by the full Senate.

The bill would basically direct the Federal Aviation Administration to devise a medical kit to be carried on board commercial aircraft for the treatment of in-flight medical emergencies that might arise. It would also, through a Good Samaritan clause, relieve appropriate persons from liability related to the use of the kit.

Current FAA regulations do require certain passenger-carrying aircraft to carry a first aid kit. These kits are very basic and are required only to contain bandages, splints, burn ointments, and other first aid items. The purpose stated in the regulations for such kits is to treat injuries likely to occur in flight or in a minor accident.

These basic kits are inadequate and outmoded, considering the types of life-threatening emergencies that might and have occurred during commercial flights. There have been many instances wherein individuals have suffered attacks which could have easily been treated by a physician or trained medical technician had the proper equipment been available. The whole idea behind this bill is to make available to a physician or other trained personnel the proper equipment and drugs in order to be able to treat a patient on an emergency basis until the aircraft can land where appropriate treatment is available.

Mr. President, this bill would direct the FAA to issue final rules requiring aircraft carrying passengers for compensation to carry sufficient first aid medical supplies and equipment for the rendering of emergency care aboard the aircraft in response to in-flight medical emergencies. It would also relieve licensed medical personnel, the airline, and the air crew from liability arising from the carriage and use of the kits, so long as they did not act recklessly or with gross negligence. This Good Samaritan clause is absolutely necessary in order to insure that physicians and medical technicians would voluntarily provide their services in such an emergency.

Mr. President, I think it is easy to see the need for such legislation. If only one life is saved as a result of these kits, then it will all have been worthwhile. The cost of these kits which is not likely to be significant should not even be considered when one thinks of the possibilities of the lifesaving potential they hold.

I think it is high time to get on with this idea and I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this legislation as soon as possible.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. LAXALT, and Mr. DECONCINI):

S. 64. A bill to amend title 35 of the United States Code for the purpose of creating a uniform policy and procedure concerning patent rights in inventions developed with Federal assistance, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOLE (for himself, and Mr. DANFORTH):

S. 65. A bill to improve the transfer of technology from Government laboratories to the public and for other related purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

UNIFORM PATENT PROCEDURES ACT AND THE FEDERAL LABORATORY TECHNOLOGY UTILIZATION ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, these two bills are designed to help promote productivity by clearing away many of the barriers that exist between federally funded research efforts and the commercialization of inventions resulting from those efforts.

Economic productivity is much like the weather: Everybody talks about it—corrective action is harder to come by. Some believe that the way to increase productivity is through more intervention by Federal planners. Others, like myself, have a sneaking suspicion that too much Federal bureaucracy has been a big part of the problem. I believe the answer lies not with more government, but with more reliance upon private entrepreneurship and academic experimentation. And we start by clearing away the unnecessary Federal legal and regulatory obstacles that crowd the path leading from a test tube, or a drawing board to the marketplace.

Five years ago, I was pleased to join our former colleague, Birch Bayh, in working to eliminate much of the tangle of bureaucratic brambles that impeded the ability of universities and small businesses to transform federally assisted research into a patented invention. Specifically, with the enactment of Public Law 96-517, we established, for the first time, a rule in favor of university and small business ownership of inventions developed. What's more, university and industry collaborative research is now at an all-time high, and whole new technologies, such as biotechnology, have flourished as a result.

Two years ago, President Reagan followed up with a memorandum instructing Federal agencies to apply the same criteria to all contractors, whenever possible. And I've returned to the field to propose the next logical step with the introduction of the Uniform Patent Procedures Act. Consistent with the President's directive, this bill would extend the principles of the 1980 law to large business contractors and repeal all existing laws which are inconsistent with those principles. Specifically, by establishing a clear and consistent presumption in favor of invention ownership for all contractors, the bill would eliminate once and for all the hodgepodge of agency patent requirements built up over the years and have the further effect, I believe, of luring research investments from large business with their specialized skills, technological expertise, and healthy respect for a dollar.

For a quarter of a century—just about as long as I've been in this city—efforts have been underway to develop a comprehensive, uniform Government patent policy. In this Congress, we have the opportunity to take the final major step by enacting this proposal which simply helps the free enterprise system to do what it does best: Produce new products the public seeks; create new jobs the public requires.

The impetus for the second bill I am introducing also derives from the 1980 Bayh-Doyle Act. Specifically, it is designed to enable the Federal laboratories to enter into the kinds of joint research and licensing arrangements that research universities have had such successful experiences with as a result of Public Law 96-517.

With about $17 billion going to the Federal laboratories, which employ nearly one-sixth of the Nation's research workers, there is broad agreement that ways must be found to increase the flow of technology from these labs to the private sector, yet as was indicated during hearings held last year by Senator MATHIAS' Subcommittee on Patents, Copyrights, and Trademarks on Government Patent Policy, too few labs are entering into the type of collaborative R&D arrangements with universities and business that are necessary to accomplish that goal. As Secretary Baldrige has emphasized, the basic stumbling block is that the labs perceive themselves as unable to enter into such joint efforts because of organizational and legal constraints.

As a consequence, this bill would expressly permit agency heads to authorize lab directors to undertake a wide range of cooperative R&D arrangements. The labs, for instance, could negotiate and issue patent licenses, assign ownership rights, and require outside parties to pay royalties for the right to use Government inventions. The bill also provides for direct payment of at least 15 percent of royalties so received to lab investors. The universities have found such royalty sharing to be a powerful incentive for inventors to contribute to commercialization efforts.

The labs would be able to keep royalties they receive after payments to investors, which should serve as an incentive for lab directors for outside collaboration on R&D leading to inventions of practical applications, consistent with the lab's mission.

The bill would further permit lab inventors to own their inventions if the Government has an insufficient interest in seeking its own patent. Finally, the bill would authorize the Secretary of Commerce to issue guidelines to help agencies make the best use of these new authorities.

Mr. President, America's future demands the liberation of her keenest intellects and broadest imaginations. Over and over, throughout our history, our system of free enterprise, with its incentives and rewards for the new and innovative, has replaced what was adequate for one generation with what is superior for the next. Far better than government, that system can explore new realms of possibility. But it cannot compete with foreign challenges with one hand tied behind its back. With these bills, I propose to untie a few knots.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 64

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that this Act may be cited as the "Uniform Patent Procedures Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. (a) Title 35 of the United States Code is amended by adding after chapter 18, as redesignated herein, a new chapter as follows:

"CHAPTER 19—PATENT RIGHTS IN INVENTIONS MADE WITH FEDERAL ASSISTANCE BY OTHER THAN SMALL BUSINESS FIRMS OR NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

"Sec.
"212. Policy and objective.
"213. Definitions.
"214. Responsibilities.
"215. Disposition of rights.
"216. March-in rights.
"217. Background rights.

"§ 212. Policy and objectives

"In addition to the policy and objectives set forth in section 200 of this title, it is the further policy and objective of the Congress to ensure that all inventions made with Federal support are used in a manner to promote free competition and enterprise.

"§ 213. Definitions

"As used in this chapter, the term—

"(1) 'Administrator' means the Administrator of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy or his or her designee;

"(2) 'contract' means any contract, grant, or cooperative agreement entered into between any Federal agency (other than the Tennessee Valley Authority) and any person other than a small business firm or nonprofit organization (as defined in section 201 of this title) where a purpose of the contract is the conduct of experimental, developmental, or research work; such term includes any assignment, substitution of parties or subcontract of any tier entered into or executed for the conduct of experimental, developmental, or research work in connection with the performance of that contract;

"(3) 'contractor' means any person or entity (other than a Federal agency, nonprofit organization, or small business firm, as defined in section 201 of this title) which is a party to the contract;

"(4) 'Federal agency' means an executive agency (as defined in section 105 of title 5, United States Code), and the military departments (as defined in section 102 of title 5, United States Code);

"(5) 'Government' means the Government of the United States of America;

"(6) 'invention' means any invention or discovery which is or may be patentable or otherwise protectable under this title, or any novel variety of plant which is or may be protectable under the Plant Variety Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 2321 et seq.);

"(7) 'practical application' means to manufacture (in the case of a composition or product), to practice (in the case of a processor method), or to operate (in the case of a machine or system), in each case, under such conditions as to establish that the invention is being utilized and that its benefits are, to the extent permitted by law or Government regulations, available to the public on reasonable terms or through reasonable licensing arrangements;

"(8) 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Commerce or his or her designee; and

"(9) 'subject invention' means any invention of a contractor conceived or first actually reduced to practice in the performance of work under a contract: Provided, That, in the case of a variety of plant, the date of determination (as defined in section 41(d) of the Plant Variety Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 2401(d)) must also occur during the period of contract performance.

"§ 214. Responsibilities

"(a) The Secretary shall issue regulations applicable to all Federal agencies implementing the provisions of the chapter, and the Secretary shall proscribe standard patent rights provisions for use under this chapter. The regulations and the standard patent rights provisions shall be subject to public comment before their issuance.

"(b) In order to obtain consistent practices under this chapter and chapter 18 of this title, the Secretary is authorized and directed (i) to consult with and advise Federal agencies concerning the effective and consistent implementation of these chapters, and (ii) to obtain from the agencies information and data relating to agency practices under these chapters.

"§ 215. Disposition of rights

"(a) Subject to subsection (c) of this section and to section 216 of this title, each contractor may elect to retain title, either worldwide or in such countries as it may choose, to any subject invention: Provided, however, That a Federal agency may, at the time of contracting, limit or eliminate this right, place additional restrictions or conditions on the contract that go beyond those set forth in subsection (c) of this section, expand the rights of the Government to license or sublicense, and alter or eliminate the contractor's right under paragraph (6) of subsection (c) of this section if—

"(1) it is determined by a Government authority which is authorized by statute or Executive order to conduct foreign intelligence or counterintelligence activities that this is necessary to protect the security of such activities;

"(2) it is determined that the contractor is not located in the United States or does not have a place of business located in the United States, or is subject to the control of a foreign government;

"(3) it is determined, on a case-by-case basis, that there are exceptional circumstances requiring such action to better promote the policies and objectives of sections 200 and 212 of this title;

"(4) it is determined that the contract includes the operation of a Government-owned contractor operated facility of the Department of Energy primarily dedicated to that Department's Naval nuclear propulsion or weapons related programs and all contract limitations under this subparagraph are limited to inventions occuring under the above two programs of the Department of Energy.

"(b)(1) Each determination required by subsection (a) of this section shall be in writing and, except in the case of paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of this section, the agency shall, within thirty days after the award of the applicable contract, file with the Secretary a copy of each such determination. In the case of a determination under subsection (a)(3) of this section, the statement shall include an analysis supporting the determination and justifying the limitations and conditions being imposed. If the Secretary believes that any individual determination or pattern of determinations is contrary to the terms, policy, or objectives of this Act, the Secretary shall so advise the head of the agency concerned and the Administrator and recommend corrective actions.

"(2) Whenever the Administrator has determined that one or more Federal agencies are utilizing the authority of paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a) in a manner that is contrary to the terms, policy, or objectives of this Act, the Administrator is authorized to issue policies, procedures, and guidelines describing classes of situations in which agencies may not utilize the provisions of paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (a).

"(c) In accordance with the regulations issued by the Secretary, each contract that the Government or any Federal agency acting on behalf of the Government may enter into shall employ a patent rights clause containing appropriate provisions to effectuate the following:

"(1) That the contractor disclose each subject invention to the Federal agency within a reasonable time after it becomes known to contractor personnel responsible for the administration of patent matters, and that the Federal Government may receive title to any subject invention not disclosed to it within such time.

"(2) That the contractor make a written election within two years after disclosure to the Federal agency (or such additional time as may be approved by the Federal agency) whether the contractor will retain title to a subject invention: Provided, That in any case where publication, on sale, or public use, has initiated the one year statutory period in which valid patent protection can still be obtained in the United States, the period for election may be shortened by the Federal agency to a date that is not more than sixty days prior to the end of the statutory period: and provided further, That the Federal Government may receive title to any subject invention in which the contractor does not elect to retain rights or fails to elect rights within such times.

"(3) That a contractor electing rights in a subject invention agrees to file a patent application prior to any statutory bar date that may occur under this title due to publication, on sale, or public use, and shall thereafter file corresponding patent applications in other countries in which it wishes to retain title within reasonable times, and that the Federal Government may receive title to any subject inventions in the United States or other countries in which the contractor has not filed patent applications on the subject invention within such times.

"(4) With respect to any invention in which the contractor elects rights, the Federal agency shall have a nonexclusive, nontranferable, irrevocable, paid-up license to practice or have practiced for or on behalf of the United States any subject invention throughout the world: Provided, That the funding agreement may provide for such additional rights; including the right to assign or have assigned foreign patent rights in the subject invention, as are determined by the agency as necessary for meeting the obligations of the United States under any treaty, international agreement, arrangement of cooperation, memorandum of understanding, or similar arrangement, including military agreement relating to weapons development and production.";

"(5) that the agency may require written reports on the commercial use or other forms of utilization or efforts toward obtaining commercial utilization made by the contractor or its licensees or assignees with respect to any subject invention to which the contractor elects title, pursuant to this section: Provided, That any such report, as well as any information on utilization of efforts toward obtaining utilization obtained as part of a proceeding under section 216 of this title, shall be treated by the Federal agency as commercial or financial information obtained from a person and privileged or confidential and not subject to disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. 552);

"(6) that the contractor, in the event a United States patent application is filed by or on its behalf or by any assignee of the contractor, will include within the specification of such application and any patent issuing thereon, a statement specifying that the invention was made with Government support and that the Government has certain rights in the invention;

"(7) that the contractor, in cases when it does not elect to retain title to a subject invention, shall retain a nonexclusive, royalty free, paid-up, worldwide license, including the right to sublicense affiliates, subsidiaries, and existing licensees to whom the contractor is legally obligated to sublicense in any subject invention to which the Government obtains title, which license shall be revocable only to the extent necessary for the Government to grant an exclusive license: Provided, however, That the contractor shall not be entitled to such a license if the contractor has fraudulently failed to disclose the subject invention; and

"(8) such other administrative requirements that the Secretary determines to be necessary to effectuate the rights of the Government as specified in this chapter, which are not inconsistent with this chapter.

"(d)(1) A Federal agency may, at any time, waive all or any part of the rights of the United States under this section or section 216 of this title to any subject invention or class of subject inventions made or which may be made under a contract or class of contracts if the agency determines that—

"(A) the interests of the United States and the general public will be best served thereby; or

"(B) the contract involves cosponsored, cost-sharing or joint venture research or development and the contractor or other sponsor or joint venturer is required to make a substantial contribution of funds, facilities, or equipment to the work performed under the contract.

"'(2) The agency shall maintain a record, which shall be available to the public and periodically updated, of determinations made under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(3) In making determinations under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the agency shall consider at least the following objectives:

"(A) encouraging wide availability to the public of the benefits of the experimental, developmental, or research programs in the shortest practicable time;

"(B) promoting the commercial utilization of such inventions;

"(C) encouraging participation by private persons (including the most highly qualified persons) in the Government-sponsored experimental, developmental, or research programs; and

"(D) fostering competition and preventing the creation or maintenance of situations inconsistent with the antitrust laws of the United States.

"(4) With respect to contracts in which an agency invokes paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (a) of section 215, a Federal agency may, after a subject invention has been identified, waive any limits or additional restrictions or conditions placed on a contractor beyond those set forth in sections 215 and 216 and may allow the contractor to retain the license rights set forth in subsection (c)(7) of this section if such license rights were otherwise limited in the contract.

"(e) If a contractor does not elect to retain worldwide title to a subject invention, the Federal agency may consider and, after consultation with the contractor, grant request for retention of rights by the inventor on such terms and conditions as the agency deems appropriate, subject to section 216 of this Act.

"(f) In any case when a Federal employee is a coinventor of any subject invention, the Federal agency employing such coinventor is authorized to transfer or assign whatever rights it may aquire in the subject invention from its employee to the contractor subject to the same conditions set forth in this title as are applicable to the rights the contractor derived through its own contract.

"§ 216. March-in-rights

"(a) Where a contractor has elected to retain title to a subject invention under section 215 of this title, the Federal agency shall have the right (unless waived under subsection (d) of section 215 of this title), pursuant to policies, procedures, and guidelines of the Secretary and subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, to grant or require the contractor or his assignee or exclusive licensee to grant a nonexclusive, partially exclusive, or exclusive license to a responsible applicant or applicants, upon terms reasonable under the circumstances, if the head of the agency or his designee determines that such action is necessary—

"(1) because the contractor, assignee, or licensee has not taken, or is not expected to take within a reasonable time, effective steps to achieve practical application of the invention;

"(2) to alleviate serious health or safety needs which are not reasonably satisfied by the contractor, his assignees or licensees; or

"(3) to meet requirements for public use specified by Federal regulation which are not reasonably satisfied by the contractors, his assignees or licensees.

"(b) A determination made pursuant to this section shall not be considered a contract dispute and shall not be subject to the Contract Disputes Act (41 U.S.C. 601 et seq.). Any contractor assigneee, or exclusive licensee adversely affected by a determination under this section may, at any time within sixty days after the date the determination is issued, file a petition in the United States Claims Court, which shall have jurisdiction to determine the matter de novo and to affirm, reverse, or modify as appropriate, the determination of the Federal agency.

"§ 217. Background rights

"(a) Nothing contained in this chapter shall be construed to deprive the owner of any background patent or of such rights as the owner may have under such patent.

"(b) No contract shall contain a provision allowing a federal agency to require the licensing to third parties of inventions owned by the contractor that are not subject inventions unless such provision has been approved by the agency head and a written justification has been signed by such agency head. Any such provision will clearly state whether the licensing may be required in connection with the practice of a subject invention, a specifically identified work object, or both. The agency head may not delegate the authority to approve such provisions or to sign the justification required for such provisions.

"(c) A Federal agency will not require the licensing of third parties under any such provision unless the agency head determines that the use of the invention by others is necessary for the practice of a subject invention or for the use of a work object of the contract and that such action is necessary to achieve practical application of the subject invention or work object. Any such determination will be made on the record after an opportunity for an agency hearing, and the contractor shall be given prompt notification of the determination by certified or registered mail.".

(b) The table of chapters for title 35, United States Code, is amended by adding immediately after the item relating to chapter 18 as redesignated herein the following:

"19. Patent rights in inventions made with Federal assistance by other than small business firms or nonprofit organizations.".

(c) Chapter 18 of title 35, United States Code is amended—

(1) by deleting everything in subsection 210(c) between the word "authorized" and the period at the end of that subsection.

(2) by adding the following new paragraph at the end of section 202:

"(g) A Federal agency may at any time waive all or any part of the rights of the United States under paragraphs (c)(4) through (8) of this section, section 203, and section 204 of this chapter, to any subject inventions made under a funding agreement or class of funding agreements if the agency determines (1) that the interests of the United States and the general public will be best served thereby; or (2) the funding agreement involves cosponsored, cost sharing or joint venture research or venturer is required to make or has made a substantial contribution of funds, facilities, or equipment to the work performed under the funding agreement. The agency shall maintain a record, which shall be available to the public and periodically updated, of determinations made under this paragraph. In making such determinations under clause (A) of this paragraph, the agency shall consider at least the following objectives:

"(1) encouraging the wide availability to the public of the benefits of the experimental, developmental, or research program in the shortest practicable time;

"(2) promoting the commercial utilization of such inventions;

"(3) encouraging participation by private persons, including the most highly qualified persons, in Government-sponsored experimental, developmental, or research programs."; and

SEC. 3. (a) Section 205(a) of the Act of August 14, 1946 (7 U.S.C. 1624(a)), is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

(b) Section 501(c) of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 (30 U.S.C. 951(c)) is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

(c) Section 106(c) of the National Traffic and Motor Vehicle Safety Act of 1966 (15 U.S.C. 1395(c)) is repealed.

(d) Section 12(a) of the National Science Foundation Act of 1950 (42 U.S.C. 1871(a)) is repealed.

(e)(1) Section 152 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2182) is repealed: Provided, however, That such section shall continue to be effective with respect to any application for a patent in which the statement under oath referred to in such section has been filed or requested to be filed by the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks prior to the effective date of this Act.

(2) The item relating to section 152 in the table of contents of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 152. Repealed".

(f) The National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2451 et seq.) is amended by—

(1) repealing subsections (a)-(h) and (j) of section 305 thereof (42 U.S.C. 2457): Provided, however, That subsections (c), (d), and (e) of such section shall continue to be effective with respect to any application for patents in which the written statement referred to in subsection (c) of such section has been filed or requested to be filed by the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks prior to the effective date of this Act;

(2) striking out in section 306(a) thereof (42 U.S.C. 2458(a)), "(as defined by section 305)", and by striking "the Inventions and Contributions Board, established under section 305 of this Act" and inserting in lieu thereof "an Inventions and Contributions Board which shall be established by the Administrator within the Administration"; and

(3) striking out in section 203(c) thereof (42 U.S.C. 2473(c)), the following: "(including patents and rights thereunder)".

(g) Section 6 of the Act of July 7, 1960 (30 U.S.C. 666), is repealed.

(h) Section 4 of the Helium Act Amendments of 1960 (50 U.S.C. 167b) is amended by striking out all after "utilization" and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

(i) Section 32 of the Arms Control and Disarmament Act (22 U.S.C. 2572) is repealed.

(j) Subsection (e) of section 302 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 (40 U.S.C. App. 302(e)) is repealed.

(k) Subsections (a) through (k), (m), and (n) of section 9 of the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5908) are repealed.

(l) Section 5(d) of the Consumer Product Safety Act (15 U.S.C. 2054(d)) is repealed.

(m) Section 3 of the Act of April 5, 1944 (30 U.S.C. 323), is repealed.

(n) Section 8001(c)(3) of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6981(c)(3)) is repealed.

(o) Section 6(e) of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3705(e)) is repealed.

(p) Section 10(a) of the Act of June 29, 1935 (7 U.S.C. 427i(a)) is amended by striking the last sentence thereof.

(q) Section 427(b) of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 937(b)) is amended by striking the last sentence thereof.

(r) Section 306(d) of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 (30 U.S.C. 1226(d)) is amended by striking the first two sentences thereof.

(s) Section 21(d) of the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974 (15 U.S.C. 2218(d)) is repealed.

(t) Section 6(b) of the Solar Photovoltaic Energy Research, Development, and Demonstration Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C 5585(b)) is amended by striking "7, 8, and 9" and inserting in lieu thereof "7 and 8".

(u) Section 12 of the Native Latex Commercialization and Economic Development Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. 178j) is repealed.

(v) Section 408 of the Water Research and Development Act of 1978 (42 U.S.C. 7879) is repealed.

(w)(1) Section 173 of the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 8773) is repealed.

(2) The item relating to section 173 in the table of sections of the Energy Security Act (42 U.S.C. 8701 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 173. Repealed.".

SEC. 4. Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to convey to any person immunity from civil or criminal liability, or to create any defense to actions, under any antitrust law of the United States.

SEC. 5. (a) This Act shall take effect six months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) After the effective date of this Act, each Federal agency is authorized, notwithstanding any other law governing the disposition of rights in subject inventions, to allow a contractor or an inventor to retain title to subject inventions made under contracts awarded prior to the effective date of this Act, subject to the same terms and conditions as would apply under this Act had the contract been entered into after the effective date of this Act.

SEC. 6. Within twenty-four months after the date of enactment of this Act and every two years thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce shall submit to Congress a report of the implementation of chapters 18 and 19 of title 35, United States Code, including any recommendations for legislative or administrative changes to better achieve the policies and objectives of such chapters.

S. 65

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Federal Laboratory Technology Utilization Act of 1985."

SEC. 2. Cooperative research and development arrangements.

Each Federal agency is authorized to permit laboratories of the agency to—

(a) enter into cooperative research and development arrangements (subject to such review procedures as the agency deems appropriate) with other Federal agencies, units of State or local government, industrial organizations, universities, or other persons including licensees of inventions owned by the Federal agency or general partners of research and development limited partnerships. Under such arrangements the laboratory may—

(1) accept funds, services, and property from collaborating parties and provide services and property to collaborating parties;

(2) grant or agree to grant in advance to a collaborating party, without regard to the provisions of 35 USC 208 and 209 patent licenses or assignments, or options thereto, in any invention made by a government employee under the arrangement, retaining such rights as the Federal agency deems appropriate;

(3) waive, in whole or in part, any right of ownership which the Government may have under any other statute to any inventions made by a collaborating party or employee of a collaborating party under the arrangement; and

(b) negotiate licensing agreements under 35 USC 207 or other authorities for government owned inventions made at the laboratory and other inventions of Federal employees that may be voluntarily assigned to the government.

SEC. 3. Distribution of royalties.

(a) Any royalties or other income received by the laboratory from the licensing or assignment of inventions under section 2 of this Act or under 35 USC 207 or other authority shall be disposed of as follows:

(1) At least 15 percent of the royalties or other income received each year by the laboratory on account of any invention shall be paid to the inventor or co-inventors if they were employees of the agency at the time the invention was made; provided that payments made under this subsection are in addition to the regular pay of the employee and to any awards made to that employee, and such payments shall not affect the entitlement to or limit the amount of the regular pay or other awards to which the employee is otherwise entitled or eligible.

(2) The balance of any royalties or related income earned during any fiscal year may be retained by the laboratory up to an amount equal to 5 percent of the budget for that year of the laboratory involved; provided that these funds must be used or obligated by the end of the fiscal year subsequent to the one in which they are received either (A) for mission-related research and development of the laboratory, (B) to support development and education programs for employees of the laboratory, (C) to reward employees of the laboratory for inventions of value to the Government that will not produce royalties, (D) to further scientific exchange to and from the laboratory, or (E) for payment of patenting costs and fees and other expenses incidental to the administration and licensing of inventions, including the fees or costs for the services of other agencies or other persons or organizations for invention management and licensing services. Any funds not so used or obligated by that time shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States. If the balance for any laboratory exceeds 5 percent of the annual budget of the laboratory, then 75 percent of the excess shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States and the remaining 25 percent shall be used for the purposes listed in (A)-(E), above, by the end of the fiscal year subsequent to the one in which they were received, and any funds not so used or obligated by that time shall be paid to the Treasury of the United States.

(3) In the event the invention was one assigned to the agency either (i) by a contractor, grantee, or the holder of a cooperative agreement of the agency or (ii) by an employee of the agency that was not working in a laboratory at the time the invention was made, then for purposes of this section the agency unit that funded or employed the assignee shall be considered to be a laboratory.

(b) Agencies shall report annually to the appropriate oversight and appropriations committees of the Senate and House of Representatives detailing the amount of royalties or other income referred to in subsection 3(a) received and the expenditure of such royalties or income.

SEC. 4. Duties of the Secretary.

(a) The Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with other Federal agencies, shall—

(1) develop and disseminate to appropriate agency personnel techniques and procedures for Federal laboratories and agencies to use on a voluntary basis to aid in the early determination of the commercial potential of new technologies generated in performance of Federal laboratory research;

(2) develop and administer training courses and materials to increase the awareness of laboratory researchers regarding the commercial potential of inventions and to educate laboratory personnel in methods and options for commercialization which are available to the Federal laboratories, including research and development limited partnerships;

(3) develop and disseminate to appropriate agency personnel model provisions for use on a voluntary basis in cooperative research and development arrangements; and

(4) upon request, furnish advice and assistance to laboratories concerning their cooperative research and development programs and projects.

(b) Two years after the date of enactment of this Act, and every two years thereafter the Secretary shall submit a report to the President and the Congress on the use by the agencies and the Secretary of the authorities under this Act. Other Federal agencies shall cooperate with the Secretary in providing information necessary to prepare the reports.

SEC. 5. Employee activities.

(a) It shall be the policy of the Government to encourage the efforts of Government employees or former employees to obtain commercialization of inventions made by them while they were in the service of the United States, and it shall not be a violation of the provisions of 18 USC 207 for former employees or the partners of employees to negotiate licenses or cooperative research and development arrangements relating to such inventions with Federal agencies, including the agency with which the employee is or was formerly employed. Federal employees or former employees who receive royalty payments or participate (whether as a principal of, a consultant to, or an employee of an organization that is attempting to commercialize the invention, or otherwise) in efforts to commercialize their inventions shall not, because of such receipt or participation, be deemed to be in violation of section 201, 203, 205, 207, 208, or 209 of Title 18 of the United States Code. In the case of an active employee of the Government, this section is not intended to negate any requirements which the agency may have concerning the need for approval of outside employment to prevent substandard levels of performance.

(b) Upon the request of a Government employee or former employee who made an invention during the course of his employment with the Government to which the Government has the right of ownership, the agency shall allow the inventor to retain title to the invention (subject to reservation by the Government of a nonexclusive, nontransferable, irrevocable, paid up license to practice or have practiced the invention throughout the world by or on behalf of the Government) unless the agency intends to file for a patent application in order to promote commercialization of the invention. However, such a request need not be granted if this would be inconsistent with the obligations of the Government to other parties under a cooperative research and development arrangement or otherwise or if the agency intends to transfer its ownership rights to another party that was a co-inventor or which employed a co-inventor of the invention. In addition, the agency may condition the inventor's title on the timely filing of a patent application or statutory invention registration in cases when the Government determines that it has or may have a need to practice the invention.

(c) For purposes of this section, Federal employees include "special Government employees" as defined at 18 USC 202.

SEC. 6. Definitions.

As used in this Act—

(1) "cooperative research and development arrangement" means any agreement, but not a procurement contract as that term is used at 31 USC 6303, between one or more Federal agencies and one or more non-Federal parties under which the agency (or agencies collectively) through one or more laboratories provides personnel, services, facilities, equipment, or other resources (but not funds to non-Federal parties) and the non-Federal parties provide funds, personnel, services, facilities, equipment, or other resources towards the conduct of specified research or development efforts which are consistent with the missions of the agency.

(2) "Federal agency" means any executive agency as defined at 5 USC 105 and the military departments as defined at 5 USC 102;

(3) "invention" means any invention or discovery which is or may be patentable or otherwise protectable under Title 35 of the United States Code, or any novel variety of plant which is or may be protectable under the Plant Variety Protection Act (7 USC 2321 et. seq.);

(4) "laboratory" means a facility or group of facilities owned, leased, or otherwise used by a Federal agency, a substantial purpose of which is the performance of research and development by Government employees;

(5) "made" when used in conjunction with "inventions" means conceived or first actually reduced to practice; and

(6) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Commerce or his or her designee or delegee.

SEC. 7. Relationship to other laws.

Nothing in this Act is intended to limit or diminish existing authorities of any agency.

By Mr. GOLDWATER:

S. 66. A bill to amend the Communication Act of 1934 to eliminate willful or malicious interference with communications; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

ELIMINATION OF WILLFUL INTERFERENCE WITH COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing a bill to statutorily prohibit willful or malicious interference to radio communications.

NEED FOR LEGISLATION

The Federal Communications Commission [FCC] recently has noted a signficant increase in the number of complaints alleging willful or malicious interference to radio signals. I have personally listened to some of this interference on my own equipment. Just one individual can prevent effective communications by many other persons.

There is a great demand for radio spectrum, and only a limited amount available. We must ensure that we use it wisely and in the public interest. Unfortunately this errant behavior increasingly prevents effective use of the frequencies in a number of different services. Sometimes the objectionable interference is created by an operator intentionally transmitting on a channel when another operator is already using it. At other times whistles, tapes, records, or other types of obnoxious noises are transmitted for the sole purpose of interrupting or preventing other uses of the frequency.

All too often this type of interference can be heard on amateur, citizen's band, marine, and other frequencies. But that is not all. This type of interference increasingly is appearing on frequencies used by private land mobile services, public safety services such as police and fire departments, and Government communications networks such as those of the Federal Aviation Administration and the Department of Defense.

Enactment of this bill is needed because the present law is neither comprehensive nor clear. Section 303(m)(1)(E) of the Communications Act authorizes the FCC to suspend the licenses of persons who cause willful or malicious interference, but application appears to be limited to FCC licensees, and sanctions limited to suspension of the operator's license. The FCC does have regulations which specifically prohibit willful or malicious interference by commercial, amateur, and citizen band radio operators (47 CFR sec. 13.69, 95.413(a)(3), 97.125 [1983]), but the penalty for such operation is just $500 under section 502 of the Communications Act. By prohibiting this activity on the face of the Communications Act, a violation will be subject to the greater penalties provided by section 501 of the act.

Also, interference which can be received outside the United States is prohibited by article 18 of the International Radio Regulations Treaty (Geneva, 1979), which is annexed to the International Telecommunication Convention. The United States ratified the latest version of this treaty in September 1983. This bill would further insure that our obligations under this treaty are carried out to the maximum extent possible. I think that the reported increase in willful and malicious interference indicates that the present provisions just aren't enough. This interference to authorized communications simply must be stopped in order to insure the reliability of the authorized public interest and safety uses of the radio waves.

ANALYSIS OF PROVISIONS

The purpose of this bill is to clarify and strengthen present law that prohibits willful and malicious interference on the radio waves. Such activities would be absolutely prohibited and penalties for such behavior significantly increased in order to deter such harmful behavior.

Section 1. This is merely a technical amendment to correct a section number of the Communications Act. It would renumber one of two identically numbered sections passed 3 years ago.

Section 2. The term "willful or malicious interference" is the same as is already used at section 303 of the Communications Act and in FCC regulations, referred to above. Examples of what I mean by this term are set forth in the following FCC opinions:

First, transmissions, including those of unmodulated carriers, recorded material, music, and threats, purposefully made directly over the ongoing transmissions of other operators, Harold R. Claypoole, 95 F.C.C.2d 331 (1983).

Second, long, continuous transmissions of computer voice synthesized audio signal or ticking clock on a frequency known by defendant to be that used as a repeater input frequency without monitoring the repeater output frequency to determine whether others were using it, without regard to requests that a different frequency be used for defendant's "tests," and transmissions initiated when others were on the frequency, Henry C. Armstrong III, 92 F.C.C.2d 485 (1983).

Third, initiation of transmissions when others were already using the frequency, including changes in frequency which coincided with changes made by parties attempting to evade the interference, Kenneth L. Gilbert, 92 F.C.C.2d 126 (1982).

Fourth, whistling on frequency for a long period of time for jamming purposes, Donald E. Miller, 69 F.C.C.2d 1740 (1978).

By citing these particular cases by no means do I intend to limit the definition of the bill's terms to just the activities described in these examples. These are but examples of some of the types of interference to which this legislation is addressed.

The term "radio communication" as used in this bill is to be liberally construed within the definition presently set forth at section 153(b) of the Communications Act. The term is there defined and I intend it as used in this bill to encompass all signals. The bill's prohibition applies to interference with any authorized use of the radio spectrum, including noncommunicative uses, such as authorized radar signals. "Signals" and "communication" are not to be narrowly construed as in some State court opinions, such as those in People v. Faude, 388 N.Y.S.2d 562 (1976) and People v. Moore, 401 N.Y.S.2d 440 (1978).

On the other hand, interference not directly caused by transmission is not addressed by this bill. For example, some stereo amplifiers, television sets, and telephones malfunction when they are near an operating radio transmitter. More often than not the problem is caused by the improper design of the consumer equipment experiencing the interference.

In 1982 Congress approved section 108 of Public Law 97-259, which authorizes the FCC to establish minimum performance standards for home electronic equipment and systems to reduce their susceptibility to radio frequency energy. This bill is not addressed to this type of interference problem, nor are its provisions to be construed as applying to interference caused by susceptibility of equipment to radio frequency energy. In such cases the interference problem is not caused by or solvable at the transmitter.

This bill solely applies to purposeful interference caused to be radiated by the violator. Such radiation may include that of the fundamental, harmonic, or other radiated frequencies.

Introduction of this bill is not to be construed as evidence that such activities are not now prohibited under both domestic and international law. Willful and malicious interference is now prohibited, but enactment of this bill is needed to clarify and strengthen present law.

Section 1362 of title 18 of the United States Code prohibits interference with facilities owned or operated by the U.S. Government. This bill also would apply in any case of willful or malicious interference with the communications of Government facilities. Often FCC assistance is required to investigate interference to Government communications. Enactment of this bill would provide a statutory basis of the Commission to investigate such incidents and seek prosecution by the U.S. Attorney based upon violation of both the Criminal Code and the Communications Act.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I think that enactment of this bill would substantially assist the Commission in curtailing willful and malicious interference. It would elevate such activity to a criminal offense pursuant to section 501 of the Communications Act, which provides both for a fine of up to $10,000 and for imprisonment of up to 1 year for the first offense, and the same fine and up to 2 years' imprisonment for repeated offenses. Under the Sentencing Reform Act of October 1984, the fine was increased to a maximum of $25,000 for misdemeanors and $250,000 for felonies.

As I mentioned above, section 502 presently makes violations of the Commission's regulations or international treaty provisions a crime, but the maximum penalty is $500. Section 503 provides for substantial civil money penalties, up to $5,000 per case, but requires completion of detailed administrative proceedings during which the interference may continue. This legislation would enable the FCC to seek immediate judicial action to stop the interference, make such purposeful interference a criminal matter, and provide for significant penalties and even imprisonment in appropriate cases.

Mr. President, I hope that word of this legislation, and its passage, will be sufficient to convince those that engage in these objectionable activities to cease doing so. Otherwise I expect the Commission to use these provisions aggressively to eliminate the increasing number of willful or malicious interference problems which are seriously impairing communications. If this still is inadequate, I am prepared to introduce even tougher legislation to authorize forfeiture of the equipment used to cause interference and to require disqualification of those convicted from being licensees in the future. But I sincerely hope and expect that the provisions of this bill will be sufficient to significantly reduce if not eliminate this type of interference.

The FCC has informed me that this amendment would not have a significant impact on present or projected Commission budgetary requirements.

By Mr. GORE:

S. 67. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 to prohibit the importation of tobacco which has been grown or processed using pesticides and other chemicals whose use has been prohibited in this country for health reasons; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

TOBACCO IMPORTS LEGISLATION

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to accomplish the modest objective of prohibiting the importation of tobacco into this country which has been grown using pesticides and other chemicals whose use has been prohibited for health reasons in the United States. I am introducing the bill at this time so that this issue will be on the agenda for discussion early this year. The legislation is similar to a proposal offered by Congressman CHARLIE ROSE in the past, and he deserves a great deal of credit for initiating the proposal. It is identical to H.R. 6418, which I introduced in the House of Representatives in the 98th Congress.

The bill is designed to protect both the American farmer and the health of the American people. It will give American farmers an opportunity to compete more fairly with their foreign competitors.

In recent years, the amount of foreign tobacco imported into this country has increased dramatically. Currently, close to one-third of the tobacco in American cigarettes is imported. In 1969 the United States imported only 9 million pounds of foreign-grown tobacco. By 1983 we were importing 240,000 metric tons of tobacco annually, an increase of 1,900 percent over 1969 and 30 percent over 1982 alone. By 1983, imports of unmanufactured tobacco let into this country exceeded $743 million.

In the United States tobacco farmers are required to abide by strict regulations which prohibit the use of a number of pesticides and other chemicals, such as paraquat, DDT, dieldrin, endrin, toxaphene, and others, all of which have been banned for health reasons. Yet, we have imposed absolutely no such restrictions on tobacco being imported into the United States.

In fact, no agency of the Federal Government knows or keeps track of what pesticides or other chemicals are used on tobacco being imported into the United States despite the potential health hazard posed by this problem and despite the extraordinary disadvantage this puts American farmers at in competing with their foreign counterparts.

Our failure to act harms America's tobacco farmers seriously and jeopardizes the 50 to 54 million Americans who smoke. Six hundred billion cigarettes a year are smoked by Americans, one-third of the tobacco in those cigarettes comes from foreign producers, yet we have no information about what hazardous substances contaminate that tobacco. We do not even have records of the countries from which we import and have never attempted to determine what their policies are with regard to substances banned for use in the United States. How can the American farmer compete? How can the American consumer protect himself or herself, if we do not even collect this vital information?

There is serious reason for concern. Turkey, Bulgaria, Lebanon, and Zimbabwe are all large suppliers of imported tobacco leaf; yet, the only survey ever done about the use of pesticides and other chemicals used abroad, a survey conducted last year by the State Department, produced no information about the chemicals used in those countries. What the survey did reveal is that many countries do permit the use of pesticides banned from use in the United States. For example, tobacco from Thailand is imported into the United States; but we know that Thailand permits the use of DDT, dieldrin, endrin, and paraquat, each of which has been banned in this country for health reasons. In the Philippines, the only chemical banned is DDT. In New Zealand and Australia, DDT is used to treat the soil. Unfortunately, what we know about this issue is less than what we do not know.

To some, the bill may appear to be motivated by protectionist concerns. Nothing could be further from the truth. This bill only seeks to place foreign producers of tobacco on the same ground as our American farmers. The United States not only has a right to impose these health and safety restrictions on imported products, it has an obligation to its citizens to do so. There is no reason for imported tobacco to be exempt from these requirements. What this bill does with regard to tobacco, we already do for most products imported into the United States. For example, we require importers of foreign automobiles to meet our pollution and safety standards. Importers of all machinery and consumer products are required to comply with health and safety standards applicable to all products sold in the United States. We already also require cigarette packages imported into the United States to comply with the labeling provisions of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act. The United States is not the first country to impose the requirements I am proposing. West Germany has gone even further by prohibiting the importation of tobacco containing any chemical or additive not on an approved list.

In conclusion, the bill represents a cautious, reasonable approach to a potentially serious problem. It is legislation that directly benefits both the American farmer and the American consumer.

By Mr. HART (for himself and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 68. A bill to prohibit the use of appropriated funds for the production of lethal binary chemical weapons; to express the sense of the Congress on achieving an international agreement to ban the production and stockpiling of chemical weapons; and to express the further sense of the Congress encouraging the improvement of defenses against the effects of the use of chemical weapons on the Armed Forces of the United States; to the Committee on Armed Services.

SENSE OF THE CONGRESS—LETHAL BINARY WEAPONS

Mr. HART. Mr. President, today, together with my colleague Senator PRYOR, I am introducing legislation to prohibit all funding for the production of a new generation of binary weapons. In my judgment, the legislation we have crafted represents both good national security policy and a means for reducing defense expenditures. This bill also expresses the sense of the Senate that the Defense Department should place the highest priority the improvement of American capabilities to defend against the effects of chemical weapons. It further calls upon President Reagan to intensify ongoing efforts with the Soviet Union and other nations, to achieve a mutual and verifiable ban on the production and stockpiling of chemical weapons.

A major new, costly chemical weapons initiative will not make this Nation or our allies more secure. Improvement of defensive measures against chemical attack and the maintenance of our existing stockpile are essential, but the construction of new binary chemical weapons is a needless waste of national resources.

The United States already possesses a large and usable chemical arsenal which more than meets our essential military requirements. There is simply no justification for producing new chemical weapons which would duplicate our existing capabilities.

Moreover, U.S. forces will remain a target for attack—despite the size of our chemical arsenal—until they are as well trained and well equipped to fight in a contaminated environment as the forces of the Warsaw Pact and the Soviet Union. Improved American defensive capabilities are the key to eliminating any incentive an adversary might have to use chemical weapons first in combat.

Finally, Mr. President, the production of new binary chemical weapons will be expensive. Cost estimates run as high as $2 to $3 billion over the coming decade. In light of the extraordinary need for fiscal restraint, we must ensure that all defense expenditures are essential to our national security. New binary chemical weapons do not meet that requirement. Efforts to improve our defenses against chemical attack do.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 68

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) notwithstanding any other provision of law, an agency of the Government may not obligate or expend appropriated funds after the date of enactment of this Act for the production of lethal binary chemical munitions.

(b) As used in subsection (a), the term "lethal binary chemical munitions" shall have the same meaning given such term in section 818(b) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1976 (Public Law 94-106; 50 U.S.C. 1519).

SEC. 2. It is the sense of the Congress that the President should intensify ongoing efforts to achieve an agreement with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the governments of other countries establishing a mutual and verifiable ban on the production and stockpiling of chemical weapons.

SEC. 3. It is, further, the sense of the Congress that the Department of Defense should, on a priority basis, improve the capabilities of the Armed Forces of the United States to detect the use of chemical weapons in attacks on the Armed Forces and to protect members of the Armed Forces against the effects of the use of such weapons.

By Mr. HART:

S. 69. A bill to designate certain additional lands in the State of Colorado as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

COLORADO WILDERNESS ACT OF 1985

Mr. HART. Mr. President, today I am pleased to reintroduce legislation to protect nearly 770,000 acres of the most spectacular, unspoiled Federal lands in Colorado's Rocky Mountains. This legislation, the Colorado Wilderness Act of 1985, will create 11 new wilderness areas, adding exceptional diversity to the existing wilderness system lands in Colorado. The bill also expands seven existing wilderness areas, adding new landforms and ecosystems, enlarging several areas to accommodate heavy usage from surrounding population centers, and establishing more geographically manageable boundaries for certain areas designated in previous years.

This legislation marks the final step in the U.S. Forest Service comprehensive review of public lands in Colorado. Following study of nearly 6.5 million acres during the RARE I and RARE II process, Congress in 1980 added 1.4 million acres to the wilderness system in Colorado. The 1980 Colorado Wilderness Act brought total wilderness acreage in the State to 2.6 million acres. In addition, the 1980 act established 18 study areas and directed the Forest Service to review each of these during the ensuing 3-year period to determine their suitability for inclusion in the wilderness system. At this time, the Forest Service has completed its final review and recommendations for 15 of the areas proposed in this legislation.

Thus, the legislation I am introducing today is necessary to complete final action on the areas set aside for further study in 1980. Yet, this legislation is more than a simple conclusion of the Forest Service wilderness process in our State.

This legislation offers us an opportunity to eliminate documented threats to several of Colorado's pristine and undisturbed mountain areas. These lands are best suited for wilderness preservation, but are threatened by various exploration and development activities. This activity threatens to permanently foreclose thousands of acres from wilderness designation if pending leases for exploration and development are acted upon before passage of this bill. These areas, unroaded and undisturbed by human activities, deserve the full protection afforded by wilderness designation in order to preserve their outstanding natural characteristics.

At the same time, I recognize the value and importance of many competing uses of our national forest lands, many of which are incompatible with wilderness designation. Our national forests provide opportunities for skiing, motorized recreation, energy, timber, and water resource development. In developing this legislation, I have sought to balance these competing interests and eliminate many potential conflicts.

This bill is the product of more than 2 years of work by many Coloradans. The process began with a review of Forest Service data on characteristics of each of the so-called study areas—information about their wilderness, resource and recreational attributes. This information was augmented by Coloradans living near the areas, and reports developed by my staff after careful onsite inspection of each of the areas. Next, I sought the advice and recommendations of numerous Coloradans and organizations representing a variety of interests. State and local government officials provided vital economic impact information and helped identify competing interests which proved helpful in proposing the most appropriate management recommendation for the parcel of land involved.

Not surprisingly, the wide variety of participants in the development of this wilderness proposal identified a number of conflicts, including existing and proposed energy and mineral development activities, ski area development and management, private lands, established motorized recreation, proposed timber management, and development of existing water rights. To accommodate these and other conflicts, boundaries have been adjusted to preserve alternative use options.

In short, this legislation reflects the best efforts of many Coloradans who have commented and worked together during the past 2 years, to balance our many competing interests in the public lands. There is perhaps no more important place for us to seek balance than in the allocation and management of public lands. Balance in development. Balance in preservation, and balance which enables us to make the wisest use of this Nation's great natural wealth—both for ourselves and future generations.

As lengthy as this process has been, it is not yet over. Many more legitimate, existing conflicts are likely to be identified during consideration of this and other Colorado wilderness proposals. I am encouraged, however, by the spirit of cooperation demonstrated by members of the Colorado congressional delegation during consideration of this very matter last year.

A great deal of progress was made toward eventual enactment of a Colorado wilderness bill during the 98th session of Congress. The House of Representatives considered and passed legislation recommending 580,000 acres as wilderness. In addition, the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee held hearings in order to seek comment from numerous Coloradans and a variety of organizations representing different interests. With their suggestions, and the progress made late last year, I am confident a solid consensus can be established and the fate of many beautiful untouched areas in Colorado determined once and for all during the 99th Congress.

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today is a simple addition to and modification of the present wilderness lands system in Colorado. This legislation does not alter any of the important land management provisions of the 1980 Colorado Wilderness Act with respect to release for multiple use, grazing, insect control, buffer zones or other decisions made during consideration of that act.

It was suggested late last year that another management provision be included in the Colorado wilderness legislation; namely, the existence and extent of Federal reserved water rights in wilderness areas. The provision suggested specified that neither already designated wilderness areas in Colorado nor those proposed for designation have any reserved Federal water rights arising from their wilderness status.

This is an issue—the relationship between wilderness designations and reserved Federal water rights—which Congress has never explicitly addressed.

The issue has arisen in Colorado as the United States has begun to quantify in State court the extent of its reserved water rights—the rights to unappropriated water within Federal lands which Congress has reserved from the public domain. In its claims for reserved rights to the national forest lands in Colorado, the Forest Service did not seek any additional quantity of water for national forest lands reserved as wilderness. The Sierra Club has filed suit in U.S. district court, seeking an order that the Forest Service should assert additional water rights for the wilderness areas. The court recently ruled against the U.S. preliminary motion to dismiss the case.

I have not included a reserved water rights provision in this legislation, but look forward to consideration and resolution of this important and controversial matter. I believe a sweeping renunciation of any and all Federal reserved water rights in wilderness areas amounts to an overreaction to a lawsuit whose full dimensions have not emerged since neither of the parties involved has yet filed their briefs. Further, and much more troubling, I believe inclusion of this provision in Colorado wilderness legislation could effectively create two separate classes of wilderness—one for our State and one for all other States.

Mr. President, Colorado is impressive in may respects, but most people think first of our mountains when they think of our State. As our cities become more crowded and as competition for diminishing natural resources increases, the value of the relatively few untouched areas becomes more important to people. This has been proven by increasing use of our mountain areas for recreation and growing pressure to protect those areas while they remain pristine.

Although our interests and needs in the national forests are varied, the 11 national forests in Colorado are vast enough to accommodate many competing interests. This legislation will protect the most magnificent of those lands, lands which are for the most part unspoiled by human intrusion. It also leaves those lands with the most promising economic potential, as identified by the Forest Service and others, free for nonwilderness uses. No mineral resources have been locked away which are not readily available today and in the foreseeable future. Prime timber has been left for potential harvesting for commercial and fuelwood purposes. No planned or potential water development will be hindered by this legislation. No lands included in the bill have vast proven petroleum potential. And finally, no proposed development or expansion of existing ski areas will be impaired by the proposed wilderness in this legislation. Moreover, I have made every effort to eliminate most established, existing motorized recreational use areas, including snowmobile and trailbike trails, and four-wheel drive vehicle roads.

Mr. President, political and economic pressure to develop energy and other resources on our lands continues to mount. Increasing needs for secure domestic supplies of energy will ensure much of Colorado's lands are devoted to energy and related development in the future. At the same time, population growth in Colorado and other parts of the West points to a growing demand for wilderness recreation.

Fortunately our public lands are vast enough that preserving additional untouched and pristine areas in Colorado will not prevent us from meeting other needs, including energy, water, and mineral development. I believe this legislation strikes a careful balance between many competing needs, preserving the best of what is special and unique about Colorado, while not inhibiting legitimate development of needed resources.

As the 99th Congress opens today, I urge all concerned Coloradans to once again renew their efforts and work with our congressional delegation to resolve the few remaining wilderness questions in Colorado.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a description of the proposed wilderness areas, and the text of this bill be included in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FACT SHEET: 1985 COLORADO WILDERNESS BILL

The 1985 Colorado wilderness bill is necessary to determine the status of eighteen Colorado areas set aside by Congress for further study following passage of the 1980 Colorado Wilderness Act. These areas include:

Twelve areas designated by Congress as Wilderness Study Areas. Congress directed the U.S. Forest Service to review and report to Congress within three years the suitability or unsuitability of these areas for wilderness designation.

Six Further Planning Areas identified by the Forest Service during the RARE II process for further study for possible inclusion in the wilderness preservation system.

The 1985 Colorado wilderness bill proposes creation of ten new wilderness areas and modifies and expands the boundaries on seven established wilderness areas. The legislation proposes the addition of approximately 770,000 acres to the wilderness system in the State of Colorado.

The legislation is subject to existing provisions of law, agreed upon by the 1980 Colorado Wilderness Act, pertaining to release of lands not found suitable for wilderness, grazing in wilderness, and buffer zone language.

Decisions on each area are the result of careful review of existing and potential conflicting uses, including recreational vehicle use, mineral, oil, gas, water and timber.

Numerous Coloradans and a wide variety of organizations have commented on the proposed areas, including conservationists, local and county officials, the oil and gas, and mineral extraction industries. These participants have identified certain conflicts and boundaries have been adjusted in order to preserve alternative use options. For example, portions preserve certain established trail bike and four wheel drive roads. Boundary adjustments were made in other areas to exclude certain known mineralized pockets and prevent obstacles to the development of potential ski areas and existing water rights in the proposed Williams Fork and St. Louis Peak Wilderness areas.

Service Creek: Included in the bill is a wilderness area of 50,540 acres in the Routt National Forest, Routt County, Colorado. This area is located ten miles southeast of Steamboat Springs, Colorado, and on the northernmost portion of the Gore Mountain Range. This area is home to large numbers of elk and popular for hiking, cross country skiing and other outdoor activities. This area was designated for further study in the 1980 Colorado Wilderness Act.

Buffalo Peaks: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 57,430 acres in the Pike-San Isabel National Forest, in Lake, Chafee and Park counties, Colorado. This area is located ten miles southeast of Leadville and one of the most productive bighorn sheep areas in the State of Colorado.

Cannibal Plateau: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 63,700 acres in the Gunnison National Forest, Hinsdale County, Colorado. This area is two miles northeast of Lake City, Colorado, and contains the largest alpine tundra area south of Alaska in addition to many bird and animal species.

Davis Peak: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 22,340 acres in the Routt National Forest, Routt County, Colorado. This area is located north of Steamboat Springs, Colorado, and a logical addition to the established Mt. Zirkel Wilderness Area.

Fossil Ridge: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 55,560 acres in the Gunnison National Forest, Gunnison County, Colorado. This area is located eight miles northeast of Gunnison, Colorado, and characterized by high peaks and stream-fed alpine lakes. It is located in proximity to several population centers and provides home for many species of wildlife including elk, mountain goats, golden eagles and peregrine falcons.

Greenhorn: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 22,360 acres in the San Isabel National Forest, Pueblo County, Colorado. This area is located on the southern end of the Wet Mountain Range and approximately 20 miles southwest of Pueblo, Colorado. This area serves as a readily accessible and popular recreation area for south central Colorado and provides home for an abundant population of wildlife including but not limited to deer, Pine Marten, bighorn sheep, elk, and greenback cutthroat trout.

Lost Creek: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 11,000 acres in the Pike-San Isabel National Forest, Park County, Colorado. This area is located southwest of Denver and is a geographically logical addition to the established Lost Creek Wilderness Area.

Oh Be Joyful: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 5,500 acres in the Gunnison National Forest, Gunnison County, Colorado. This area is located four miles northwest of Crested Butte, Colorado, and is a logical addition to the existing Raggeds Wilderness Area. This area is known for its glacial alpine meadows and valleys and provides home for an abundant population of wildlife.

Piedra: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 49,180 acres in the San Juan National Forest, Archuleta and Hinsdale Counties, Colorado. This area is 30 miles west of Pagosa Springs, Colorado, and provides important migration routes between summer and winter range for elk and deer as well as serving as an important watershed for nearly 41,000 acre feet of water.

St. Louis Peak: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 13,000 acres in the Arapaho National Forest, Grand County, Colorado. This area is approximately 60 miles west of Denver and nine miles south of Fraser, Colorado, and consists of high rugged timberline peaks.

Vasquez Peak: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 13,000 acres in the Arapaho National Forest, Grand and Jackson Counties, Colorado. This area is approximately nine miles south of Fraser, Colorado, and adjacent to the proposed St. Louis Peak Wilderness Area.

Sangre de Cristo: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 248,000 acres in the Pike-San Isabel National Forest, Saguache, Alamosa and Custer Counties, Colorado. This mountain range is five miles south of Salida, Colorado, and 30 miles northeast of Alamosa, Colorado. This area of the state is among the most prized recreational ranges and provides home for many wilderness species including black bear, cougar, elk, bighorn sheep, peregrine falcons and eagles.

Spruce Creek: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 8,000 acres in the White River National Forest, Pitkin County, Colorado. This area is located northeast of Aspen, surrounded on three sides by the existing Hunter-Fryingpan wilderness. It is a roadless tract, providing critical migrating routes between summer and winter range for deer and elk; in addition, Spruce Creek is the home of the declining Colorado cutthroat trout. Other reported wilderness species in the area include the mountain lion, lynx, white tailed ptarmigan, and hairy woodpecker and others. The tourist attractions of the clean air and water of this area are essential to the local economy. Aspen and Pitkin counties are supportive of wilderness designation for Spruce Creek.

West Needles and Weminuche Additions: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 33,000 acres in the San Juan National Forest, San Juan County, Colorado. This area is located between the towns of Durango and Silverton, adjoining the western boundary of the existing Weminuche Wilderness Area. Split by the Narrow Gauge Railroad running through the Animas River Gorge, the area's pristine beauty is enjoyed by tourists marvelling at the rugged slopes of the Animas River Gorge. Hikers, backpackers, hunters and fishermen also enjoy the popular hiking trails and the spectacular views of the San Juan Range. The state flower of Colorado, the Colorado Columbine, grows in abundance with other wildflowers on the slopes.

South San Juan: Included in this bill is a wilderness addition of 32,800 acres in the San Juan and Rio Grande National Forests, Archuleta, Mineral and Rio Grande Counties, Colorado. The V-Rock and Montezuma Peak areas are additions to the established South San Juan Wilderness Area, located some 50 miles south and east of Alamosa, Colorado, and characterized as among the wildest and primitive areas of the state.

Spanish Peaks: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 19,250 acres in the San Isabel National Forest, Las Animas County, Colorado. This area is located 20 miles southwest of Walsenburg, Colorado, and best known for twin volcanic peaks rising nearly 6,000 feet in elevation above the surrounding plains. This area is important to fish and wildlife populations, recreation and important drainage.

Wheeler: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 29,350 acres in the Rio Grande National Forest, Mineral County, Colorado. This area is an addition to the established La Garita Wilderness near Creede, Colorado, and best known for the Wheeler Geologic Study Area containing unusual and spectacular rock formations.

Big Blue: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of 1,500 acres in the Bureau of Land Management Gunnison Basin Resource Area, Ouray County, Colorado. This area is an addition to the established Big Blue Wilderness Area approximately 15 miles west of Lake City, Colorado. This addition to the existing wilderness will protect the high altitude portion of the Big Blue watershed.

Williams Fork: Included in this bill is a wilderness area of approximately 40,000 acres in the Arapaho National Forest, Summit County, Colorado. This area is characterized by high alpine peaks and located in proximity to a growing population center and the Interstate 70 corridor from Denver.

S. 69

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Colorado Wilderness Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. (a) In furtherance of the purposes of the Wilderness Act, the following lands in the State of Colorado are hereby designated as wilderness and, therefore, as components of the National Wilderness Preservation System:

(1) certain lands in the San Isabel National Forest, which comprise approximately fifty-seven thousand four hundred and thirty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Buffalo Peaks Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(2) certain lands in the Arapaho National Forest, which comprise approximately eleven thousand one hundred sixty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "St. Louis Peak Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(3) certain lands in the Uncompaghre National Forest and in the Bureau of Land Management Gunnison Basin Resource Area, which comprise approximately sixty-three thousand seven hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Cannibal Plateau Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(4) certain lands in the Gunnison National Forest, which comprise approximately fifty-five thousand five hundred and sixty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Fossil Ridge Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(5) certain lands in the San Isabel National Forest, which comprise approximately twenty-two thousand three hundred and sixty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Greenhorn Mountain Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(6) certain lands in the White River National Forest, which comprise approximately eight thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Hunter-Fryingpan Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated November 1983; and which are hereby incorporated in and shall be deemed a part of the Hunter-Fryingpan Wilderness as designated by Public Law 95-327;

(7) certain lands in the Rio Grande National Forest, which comprise approximately twenty-nine thousand three hundred fifty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "La Garita Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated November 1983; and which are hereby incorporated in and shall be deemed a part of the La Garita Wilderness as designated by Public Law 88-577;

(8) certain lands in the Routt National Forest, which comprise approximately twenty-two thousand three hundred and forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Mt. Zirkel Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated November 1983, and which are hereby incorporated in and shall be deemed a part of the Mt. Zirkel Wilderness as designated by Public Law 88-577;

(9) certain lands in the San Juan National Forest, which comprise approximately forty-nine thousand one hundred and eighty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Piedra Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(10) certain lands in the Gunnison National Forest, which comprise approximately five thousand five hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Raggeds Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated November 1983, and which are hereby incorporated in and shall be deemed a part of the Raggeds Wilderness as designated by Public Law 96-560;

(11) certain lands in and adjacent to the Rio Grande and San Isabel National Forests, which comprise approximately two hundred forty eight thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Sangre de Cristo Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(12) certain lands in the Routt National Forest, which comprise approximately fifty thousand five hundred and forty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Service Creek Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(13) certain lands in the San Juan National Forest, which comprise approximately thirty-two thousand eight hundred acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "South San Juan Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated November 1983, which are hereby incorporated in and shall be deemed a part of the South San Juan Wilderness as designated by Public Law 96-560;

(14) certain lands in the Arapaho National Forest, which comprise approximately thirteen thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Vasquez Peak Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(15) certain lands in the San Juan National Forest, which comprise approximately thirty-three thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Weminuche Wilderness Additions—Proposed", dated November 1983, and which are hereby incorporated and shall be deemed a part of the Weminuche Wilderness as designated by Public Law 93-632;

(16) certain lands in the San Isabel National Forest, which comprise approximately nineteen thousand two hundred and fifty acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Spanish Peaks Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983;

(17) certain lands in the Pike National Forest, which comprise approximately eleven thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Lost Creek Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983, and which are hereby incorporated in and shall be deemed a part of the Lost Creek Wilderness as designated by Public Law 96-560;

(18) certain lands in the Arapaho National Forest, which comprise approximately forty thousand acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "Williams Fork Wilderness—Proposed", dated June 1984, and which shall be known as the Williams Fork Wilderness; Provided, however, That subject to valid existing rights, the Williams Fork Further Planning Area as generally depicted on said map shall be managed, until Congress determines otherwise, to maintain its presently existing wilderness character and potential for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System; Provided, further, That no right, or claim of right, to the diversion and use of water from the Williams Fork Further Planning Area by the Board of Water Commissioners of the City and County of Denver shall be prejudiced, diminished, altered, or affected by this section, and this section shall not be construed to impair, impede, or interfere with the exercise of such rights in a manner affecting the Williams Fork Further Planning Area's presently existing wilderness character and potential for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System; and

(19) certain lands in the Bureau of Land Management Gunnison Basin Resource Area, which comprise approximately one thousand five hundred and five acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled "American Flats Wilderness—Proposed", dated November 1983, and which are hereby incorporated in and shall be deemed a part of the Big Blue Wilderness as designated by Public Law 96-560.

(b) The lands depicted on the map referred to in subsection (a)(19) which are within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior and managed through the Bureau of Land Management are hereby transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture and incorporated in and deemed to be a part of the Uncompahgre National Forest.

(c) As soon as practicable after this Act takes effect, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior, as appropriate shall file the maps referred to in subsection (a) and legal descriptions of each wilderness area designated by subsection (a) with the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, United States Senate, and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, United States House of Representatives, and each such map and legal description shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act: Provided, however, That correction of clerical and typographical errors in such legal descriptions may be made. Each such map and legal description shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, or the Director of the Bureau of Land Management, Department of Interior, as appropriate.

SEC. 3. Subject to valid existing rights, each wilderness area designated by this Act shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior, as appropriate, in accordance with the provisions of the Wilderness Act (Public Law 88-577, 78 Stat. 892) governing areas designated by that Act as wilderness areas, except that, with respect to any area designated in this Act, any reference in such provisions to the effective date of the Wilderness Act shall be deemed to be a reference to the effective date of this Act.

SEC. 4. (a) Section 2(e) of Public Law 95-237 and sections 105 and 106 of Public Law 96-560 are repealed.

(b) Section 107 of Public Law 96-560 is amended to read:

"SEC. 107. (a) The Congress finds that—

"(1) the Department of Agriculture has completed the second roadless area review and evaluation program (RARE II);

"(2) the Congress has made its own review and examination of National Forest System roadless areas in Colorado and of the environmental impacts associated with alternative allocations of such areas.

"(b) On the basis of such review, the Congress hereby determines and directs that—

"(1) without passing on the question of the legal and factual sufficiency of the RARE II final environmental statement (dated January 1979) with respect to National Forest System lands in States other than Colorado, such statement shall not be subject to judicial review with respect to National Forest Systems lands in the State of Colorado;

"(2) with respect to the National Forest System lands in the State of Colorado which were reviewed by the Department of Agriculture in the second roadless area review and evaluation (RARE II) and those lands referred to in subsection (d), except those lands remaining in wilderness study upon enactment of this Act, that review and evaluation or reference shall be deemed for the purposes of the initial land management plans required for such lands by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976 (Public Law 94-588), to be an adequate consideration of the suitability of such lands for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System and the Department of Agriculture shall not be required to review the wilderness option prior to the revisions of the plans, but shall review the wilderness option when the plans are revised, which revisions will ordinarily occur on a ten-year cycle, or at least every fifteen years, unless, prior to such time the Secretary of Agriculture finds that conditions in a unit have significantly changed;

"(3) areas in the State of Colorado reviewed in such final environmental statement or referenced in subsection (d) and not designated wilderness or remaining in wilderness study upon enactment of this Act shall be managed for multiple use in accordance with land management plans pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976: Provided, That such areas need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation prior to or during revision of the initial land management plans;

"(4) in the event that revised land management plans in the State of Colorado are implemented pursuant to section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, and other applicable law, areas not recommended for wilderness designation need not be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation prior to or during revision of such plans, and areas recommended for wilderness designation shall be managed for the purpose of protecting their suitability for wilderness designation as may be required by the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, and other applicable law; and

"(5) unless expressly authorized by Congress, the Department of Agriculture shall not conduct any further statewide roadless area review and evaluation of national forest system lands in the State of Colorado for the purpose of determining their suitability for inclusion in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

"(c) As used in this section, and as provided in section 6 of the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended by the National Forest Management Act of 1976, the term—revision—shall not include an amendment to a plan.

"(d) The provisions of this section shall also apply to National Forest System roadless lands in the State of Colorado which are less than five thousand acres in size".

Mr. INOUYE (for himself, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. SYMMS, and Mr. WARNER):

S. 70. A bill to establish a temporary program under which parenteral diacetylmorphine will be made available through qualified pharmacies for the relief of intractable pain due to cancer; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

COMPASSIONATE PAIN RELIEF ACT

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, although, over the past two decades, a great deal of progress has been made in treating cancer, this year an estimated 800,000 Americans will be diagnosed as having cancer, and over 400,000 will die from this disease. It has been estimated that about 20 percent of terminal cancer patients suffer significant pain, and that about 10 percent of them do not obtain relief from currently prescribed medications. In human terms, these precentages mean that as many as 8,000 Americans may die in agony this year because of the intractable pain associated with terminal cancer.

Health care providers across America feel that if the best analgesic known to man, diacetylmorphine, or heroin, were available, as it is in Great Britain and many other countries around the world, for terminal cancer patients, that relief could be obtained for many of these patients. Their arguments are summed up in the New England Journal of Medicine of August 23, 1984, in an article by Dr. Allen M. Mondzac. In brief, Dr. Mondzac points out that British doctors have prescribed heroin for 30 percent of terminal cancer patients in pain, and in hospices, that figure is as high as 80 percent. Some of the ways that heroin is broken down and becomes effective in the human brain have never been studied. When given by mouth it is not much more effective than morphine, but when injections are needed because of persistent vomiting or general inability to take medication by mouth, heroin is markedly different from morphine and has unique and superior properties, both in terms of effectiveness and in terms of the relatively small amounts of material that must be injected into the emaciated body of a cancer victim.

Research completed at Georgetown University's Vincent T. Lombardi Cancer Research Center has confirmed that heroin is an effective analgesic for the control of cancer pain. Onset of action is more rapid than for morphine, giving relief of pain and a sense of well-being sooner. It is particularly appropriate in the terminal phase of cancer, in which patients frequently cannot take medication by mouth, need increasingly large doses, and have little body tissue into which to give large injections.

The American Nurses Association, representing those professionals who attend most closely at the bedside of dying patients, has gone on record as supporting the availability of heroin for prescription for these patients. The Canadian Medical Association has asked its Government to change its regulations so that terminal cancer patients may have heroin under medical supervision.

Mr. President, there is a great fear of narcotics in America today and, of course, it is a fear that is justified, because addiction to drugs has caused untold misery for hundreds of thousands of people, and for society itself. This fear has led physicians, in the opinion of many, to be overly conservative in prescribing pain relievers for dying cancer patients. The same fear that prevents adequate use of available medications serves as a basis for opposition to prescribed heroin for the small segment of humanity that concerns us now.

Is it necessary that this pitiful group of people, dying in agony, make a sacrifice because of our narcotics addiction problem? The proposed legislation which Senators DECONCINI, HOLLINGS, SYMMS, MATSUNAGA, RIEGLE, and I are introducing today has rigorous safeguards to prevent the drug from being introduced to the general public.

Prof. Arnold Trebach, director of the Institute on Drugs, Crime, and Justice at American University, has calculated that if all the heroin estimated to be needed in this country for our program were somehow simultaneously taken from pharmacies all across the land, it would constitute less than 3 percent of the 8 tons of illicit heroin already on the street annually. Professor Trebach has said also:

[We] seem to be saying that cancer patients must suffer so that we can keep this drug away from dope fiends. In practical terms, this position represents a cruel irony because our massive interdiction and enforcement programs are failing, utterly, to keep heroin out of the veins of street addicts. In ethical terms, this position is a perversion of every moral principal that rests close to the gentler hearts of people. It is time the moral perversion stopped.

William F. Buckely, Jr., in an editorial supporting the availability of heroin for terminal cancer pain, also noted this irony:

The irony is that anybody in a major city can acquire the knowledge necessary to buy heroin from a dirty little pimp, but licensed doctors may not administer the identical drug to men and women—and children—literally dying from excruciating pain.

The American Psychiatric Association has made an official statement endorsing the—Principle that the effectiveness of relief of pain in terminal cancer patients should take priority over a concern about "addiction" of the terminal cancer patient and should take priority over a concern about medication diversion to addicts.

Mr. President, the Washington Post, the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times, and dozens of other newspapers across the country, have all given thoughtful editorial support to legislation to provide merciful relief for these cancer patients. We ask that representative editorial support to legislation to provide merciful relief for these cancer patients. We ask that representative editorials from the Washington Post of March 26, 1984, entitled "An Act of Mercy"; from the Los Angeles Times of November 9, 1983, entitled "Relief for the Terminally Ill"; and from the New York Times of July 23, 1984, entitled "The Value of Heroin," as well as Mr. Buckley's column of March 25, 1982, entitled "Heroin for the Terminally Ill," be printed in the RECORD.

Would that it were possible to insert in the RECORD a segment on CBS "Sixty Minutes" of December 2, 1984, entitled "Just What the Doctor Ordered." It shows the faces of British patients in hospitals and hospices, most of whom died within weeks after they were filmed, as they describe the agony they had suffered and the relief they had been given by doctors and nurses able to use heroin. If our distinguished colleagues could see those faces, we have no doubt that they would feel urgently that Americans in pain should have the same hope.

The bill being offered today provides for limited prescription of heroin, by physicians, for terminal cancer patients in hospitals, with more than adequate safeguards against diversion, for a 5-year trial period. It is intended to reflect a determination on the part of the U.S. Senate that prevention of pain in terminal cancer patients be given a very high priority in our Nation.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the test of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the materials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 70

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Compassionate Pain Relief Act".

SEC. 2. The Congress finds the following:

(1) Cancer is a progressive, degenerative, and often painful disease which afflicts one out of every four Americans and is the second leading cause of death.

(2) In the progression of terminal cancer, a significant number of patients will experience levels of intense and intractable pain which cannot be effectively treated by presently available medication. The effect of the pain often leads to a severe deterioration in the quality of life of the patient and heartbreak for the patient's family.

(3) The therapeutic use of parenteral diacetylmorphine is not permitted in the United States but extensive clinical research has demonstrated that it is a potent, highly soluble painkilling drug when properly formulated and administered under a physician's supervision.

(4) Making parenteral diacetylmorphine available to patients through controlled channels as a drug for the relief of intractable pain due to terminal cancer is in the public interest. Diacetylmorphine is successfully used in Great Britain and other countries for relief of pain due to cancer.

(5) The availability of parenteral diacetylmorphine for the limited purposes of controlling intractable pain due to terminal cancer will not adversely effect the abuse of illicit drugs or increase the incidence of pharamacy thefts.

(6) The availability of parenteral diacetylmorphine will enhance the ability of physicians to effectively treat and control intractable pain due to terminal cancer.

(7) It is appropriate for the Federal Government to establish a temporary program to permit the use of pharmaceutical dosage forms of parenteral diacetylmorphine for the control of intractable pain due to terminal cancer.

SEC. 3. (a) Not later than three months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") shall issue regulations establishing a program under which parenteral diacetylmorphine may be made available to hospital pharmacies and other such pharmacies as may be prescribed by the Secretary for dispensing pursuant to written prescriptions of physicians to individuals for the relief of intractable pain due to terminal cancer (hereinafter in this section referred to as "the program"). For purposes of the program, an individual shall be considered to have terminal cancer if there is histologic evidence of a malignancy in the individual and the individual's cancer is generally recognized as a cancer with a high and predictable mortality. It is the intent of Congress that the Secretary primarily utilize hospital pharmacies for the dispensing of diacetylmorphine, but it is also recognized that humanitarian concerns might necessitate the availability of diacetylmorphine to other than hospital pharmacies provided that a significant need is shown and that adequate protection against diversion is available.

(b) The Secretary shall provide for the manufacture of parenteral diacetylmorphine for dispensing under the program using adequate methods in, and adequate facilities and controls for, the manufacturing, processing, and packing of such drug to preserve its identity, strength, quality, and purity.

(c) Under the program parenteral diacetylmorphine may only be made available, upon application, to pharmacies registered under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act that also meet such qualifications as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe. An application for parenteral diacetylmorphine shall—

(1) be in such form and submitted in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe; and

(2) contain assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that—

(A) the applicant meets special requirements as the Secretary may prescribe respecting the storage and dispensing of parenteral diacetylmorphine; and

(B) parenteral diacetylmorphine provided under the application will be dispensed through the applicant upon the written prescription of a physician registered under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act to dispense controlled substances in schedule II of such Act.

(d) Requirements prescribed by the Secretary under paragraph (b) and (c)(2)(A) shall be designed to protect against the diversion into illicit channels of parenteral diacetylmorphine distributed under the program.

(e) A physician registered under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act may prescribe parenteral diacetylmorphine for individuals for the relief of intractable pain due to terminal cancer. Any such prescription shall be in writing as prescribed by the Secretary by regulations.

(f) The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and titles II and III of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 shall not apply with respect to—

(1) the importing of opium,

(2) the manufacture of parenteral diacetylmorphine, and

(3) the distribution and dispensing of parenteral diacetylmorphine, in accordance with the program.

SEC. 4. (a) Not later than the second month beginning after the date of the enactment of this section and every third month thereafter until the program is established under section 3, the Secretary shall report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate on the activities undertaken to implement the program; and each year after the program is established and while it is in effect, the Secretary shall report to such committees on the activities under the program during the period for which the report is submitted.

(b) Upon the expiration of fifty-six months after the date the program is established, the Comptroller General of the United States shall report to the committees referred to in subsection (a) on the activities under the program during such fifty-six months.

SEC. 5. The program established under section 3 shall terminate upon the expiration of sixty months after the date the program is established.

SEC. 6. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(1) on the extent of research activities in the management of pain which have received funds through the National Institutes of Health,

(2) on the ways in which the Federal Government supports the training of health personnel in pain management, and

(3) recommendations for expanding and improving the training of health personnel in pain management.

SEC. 7. The Secretary may at any time six months after implementation of the program modify or terminate the program if in the Secretary's judgment it is no longer needed or to prevent substantial diversion of the diacetylmorphine.

[From the Washington Post, Mar. 26, 1984]

AN ACT OF MERCY

Chances are that Congress won't accomplish much in this presidential election year, but there is one piece of business that it should not fail to complete. It should pass legislation—with an impressive and growing bipartisan list of sponsors in both houses—that would legalize the carefully controlled use of heroin in the treatment of cancer patients dying in intractable pain.

One of the curiosities of medical practice in this country is that hundreds of billions are spent to prolong life, but relatively little attention is paid to making sure that patients survive in a tolerable degree of comfort and alertness. Modern medicine keeps promising better painkillers, and new methods of administration may offer patients more continuous relief from currently available drugs. But—as experts testifying recently before Chairman Henry Waxman's health subcommittee strongly asserted—many patients now die in needless agony because they are denied access to heroin, the one drug that could relieve their pain.

Heroin has come into increasing use as a painkiller in Great Britain in recent years because of its demonstrated superiority in treating certain cancer patients. Heroin acts faster than morphine and other widely used painkillers, and it can also be administered in smaller doses—an important consideration in treating emaciated patients. Moreover, unlike other potent drugs, it does not make the patient comatose, depressed, nauseous or hallucinatory. As a result, patients are able to remain alert, communicate with other family members and, because anxiety and depression are relieved, may also live longer.

Heroin was banned from medical practice in this country in 1924 because of fears that it would be diverted to illegal street use—an unwarranted fear that still motivates opponents of the proposed legislation. Since only very small quantities of the drug would have to be kept by hospitals—most cancer patients do not suffer intractable pain—the same precautions used to guard other street-valuable drugs would be adequate to prevent misuse. To be on the safe side the proposed legislation adds still further controls.

Right now hundreds, perhaps thousands, of cancer patients are racked with pain while their families watch in despair. In testifying before the Waxman committee, Dr. Allen Mondzac, chairman of the D.C. Medical Society's Cancer Committee, noted that "right now, in America, we know of a drug which is the most potent, effective, soluble and rapidly active narcotic ever created. It is not available. I do not understand this." Neither do we.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Nov. 9, 1983]

RELIEF FOR THE TERMINALLY ILL

Abhorrence of heroin and the national commitment to eradicate its abuse have led to an unreasonable resistance to legislation that would permit the use of this drug in the one justifiable form—to relieve the agony of terminally ill cancer patients. There is now an opportunity to correct that, and to open to hundreds of Americans a relief from the terrible pain that responds to no other analgesic.

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye (D-Hawaii) has taken the lead with the support of 15 other senators, Republicans and Democrats, brought together by the overwhelming evidence that doctors require this added tool if they are to relieve the otherwise intractable pain of many cancer patients. One of the group, Sen. Dennis DeConcini (D-Ariz.), is now planning to offer the proposal as an amendment to the National Institutes of Health reauthorization act. It deserves the support of all members of Congress.

Under present regulations, doctors must rely on morphine in controlling pain. It has proved effective in most cases. Tests in the United States, reported last year in scientific journals, found the two drugs of equal effectiveness. But many patients develop a tolerance to morphine over a prolonged period, and the drug loses its effectiveness. Heroin has proved effective in these cases. In Great Britain, where doctors have the option of morphine or heroin, the use of heroin is increasing rapidly because of its demonstrated superiority in certain cases. Forty-seven nations now permit the medical use of heroin.

One advantage of heroin is its potency. "A small subgroup of patients requiring large, intramuscular injections could benefit from heroin because it is more water-soluble as well as more potent than morphine," it was reported in Medical News. In cases of this sort, more massive injections of morphine forced into the emaciated bodies of the dying patient can be a source of additional severe pain.

Nothing in the proposed legislation can address a fundamental problem in the United States. That problem is the failure of many physicians to comprehend pain control, now a highly developed specialization in the medical profession. Ignorance of new techniques and reliance on programs geared to timetables rather than to the comfort of patients have left many people unnecessarily in intractable pain, according to experts.

The proposed legislation would limit heroin to terminal cancer patients in licensed hospitals, with peer review required for any doctor's decision to use it. That may prove unreasonably restrictive, particularly because it would deny applications in the home-oriented hospice program how being funded by Medicare. But it is a start. And Inouye's staff is convinced that the understandable horror of heroin abuse precludes going farther at this time.

"We have to take whatever we can get," according to Judith H. Quattlebaum, president of the National Committee on the Treatment of Intractable Pain. To do less would be a cruel rejection of this additional tool for controlling acute suffering.

THE VALUE IN HEROIN

Heroin is a curse for otherwise healthy addicts. But it is also a potent analgesic, valued by many physicians in treating the pain of terminally ill cancer patients. That is why Representative Henry Waxman's bill authorizing strictly limited use in hospitals and hospices deserves support.

First synthesized in Britain in 1874, heroin replaced morphine as the most popular injectable painkiller. It was legally used—and abused—in the United States until 1924, when Congress outlawed its import and manufacture.

Since then, dozens of other powerful analgesics have been synthesized, most of them addicting. But in Britain, heroin remains the painkiller of choice whenever addiction risk is a secondary consideration, and for good reason.

According to Dr. Allen Mondzac, director of the Warwick Cancer Clinic at George Washington University, heroin's high potency combined with its solubility make it the most efficient drug for controlling pain in extremely ill patients. In addition, the euphoric effect that so attracts addicts counteracts the depression experienced by chronic users of other painkillers.

The Reagan Administration, fearing that the drug would be diverted to the illegal market, opposes Government manufacture of heroin and distribution through hospital and hospice pharmacies. There is undoubtedly some risk that a trickle of Government heroin would be added to the river of illegally imported narcotics. But as long as physicians believe that heroin is better than any other drug for easing the trauma of dying cancer patients, that risk ought to be worth taking

HEROIN FOR THE TERMINALLY ILL

(By William F. Buckley, Jr.)

Finally, somebody has got around to introducing an amendment to the Controlled Substances Act, designed to make it possible to administer heroin to some patients dying of cancer. The hero in the case is Sen. Daniel Inouye of Hawaii, and the word "hero" is not used flippantly, because inevitably there will be those who accuse the senator of adding to the drug problem. A little thought, and a little patience, will dispose of these charges, but not everyone is willing to give a little thought, or to show a little patience, in discussing the problem of heroin. What would be ideal is to bring together the critics of Mr. Inouye's bill and some human beings who, as I write, are screaming (I do not use a metaphor) with pain.

Here are some interesting figures brought out by Sen. Inouye in his speech introducing S. 2013. There are 400,000 Americans alive today who within the next 12 months will die of cancer. Eighty thousand of those condemned will suffer "significant" pain. And of these, 8,000 will experience agony that is not mitigated by such prescriptions as are currently allowed. After a while, morphine just doesn't work with some people.

Why it took so long to come through with a medically reliable experiment is something to wonder about, inasmuch as the use of heroin has been outlawed since 1924. Anyway, thanks to the Vince Lombardi

Cancer Research Institute of Georgetown, an experiment was conducted. Forty-eight cancer patients suffering serious pain were injected, one-half with heroin, one-half with morphine, by nurses who did not know which substance they were administering. It transpired that the patients rated heroin as two and one-half times more effective than morphine in bringing relief.

This experiment, together with accumulated testimony from Great Britain and from 37 other countries that tolerate carefully supervised use of heroin brought an endorsement from the New England Journal of Medicine and subsequently from the American Psychiatric Association.

Senator Inouye's bill, backed now by 15 members of the Senate, an ideologically uncolored coalition ranging from left (Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich.) to right (Sen. Steven Symms, R-Idaho), is cautious in several wholly understandable respects. The medical doctor in charge of a patient for whom the use of heroin might be appropriate must first himself recommend the drug's use and then submit his recommendation to a medical review board. If the recommendation is there sustained, the hospital will dispense the heroin from supplies made available by the Department of Health and Human Services from the abundant heroin now confiscated under current laws.

A strict accounting is envisioned, so that the amount of heroin released must correspond with the amount administered. Moreover, Senator Inouye's bill calls for reconsideration of the program after five years. It is difficult to think of anything he left out, save possibly a provision that anyone receiving the heroin and not dead within 90 days must be given an overdose.

It is difficult, Mr. Inouye having stepped forward and broken the taboo, to imagine Congress not acting favorably on this proposal. If it does so, although the legislative credit goes to Mr. Inouye, the moral credit goes to Mrs. Judith Quattlebaum, the president of the National Committee on the Treatment of Intractable Pain (9300 River Road, Potomac, Md. 20854).

She has fought for this bill for five years. During that period, 40,000 Americans have died in needlessly aggravated pain. She has dogged legislators, accumulated scientific evidence, written to newspapers (the bill has received a number of editorial endorsements, including a most vigorous one from the Detroit News and the Federal Times).

Almost every week, an additional senator steps forward to associate himself with the Inouye bill. So will it prove, I think, popular in the House.

It has been remarked that nothing is easier to get used to than other people's pain. This is unhappily correct, and perhaps necessarily so, because if one were as much involved in mankind as John Donne said we should be, there could be no happiness, ever. With Mrs. Quattlebaum we'll be entitled to such happiness as is due to those helpful in relieving the misery of others.

IN DEFENSE OF THE REINTRODUCTION OF HEROIN INTO AMERICAN MEDICAL PRACTICE AND H.R. 5290—THE COMPASSIONATE PAIN RELIEF ACT

(By Allen M. Mondzac, M.D.)

Heroin has been in continuous use since its creation in England by Wright in 1874. The drug was synthesized by acetylating morphine and is therefore a semisynthetic narcotic. Its chemical name is diacetylmorphine, or diamorphine. It was named heroin by the Bayer Company of Germany, which first marketed it widely, in 1898. The drug met with great success and was used as a narcotic analgesic, antitussive, and antidyspnea agent. Heroin was widely prescribed, and many users became addicted. This result was inevitable since little was understood about narcotics and drug addiction.

In what can be described as a panic reaction of the federal government to curb the growing problem of opiate addiction in America, the manufacture and importation of heroin was banned in the United States by the Harrison Narcotics Act of 1924. The legislation was intended to supplant the 1914 Harrison Act, which restricted the use of cocaine and opiates to medical purposes and required a licensed physician's prescription to obtain the drugs. After passage of the 1924 law, although use was not prohibited, it dropped off considerably. In 1956 all hospitals and private physicians who had retained heroin had to relinquish it. Jefferson Hospital in Philadelphia obtained permission from the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs to keep its supply, which it had used judiciously since 1924, until it relinquished the remainder in 1960. Since that time there has been no legal heroin in the United States. It should be noted that in Britain the medical use of heroin continued despite the American legislation and has increased, especially for pain control. In 1970 Congress passed Public Law 91-513, which gave the Office of the Attorney General power to move heroin from schedule I to schedule II, if it so desired.

Since 1974 a grass-roots movement led by the National Committee for the Treatment of Intractable Pain, headed by its founder, Judith Quattlebaum, has been trying to make heroin available again in the United States for pain control The Compassionate Pain Relief Act (H.R. 5290), introduced by the Honorable Henry Waxman in February 1984, is the culmination of 10 years of work by the committee. The bill provides a mechanism for the reintroduction of heroin into American medicine.

I would like to discuss the chemical and pharmacologic properties of heroin that make it unique, and then the benefits of H.R. 5290 and how its passage into law will help American society.

Heroin has been studied very little, considering that it has been used for 100 years. Scientists have seemed afraid to tamper with this strong opiate. Most studies have compared it with morphine.[1-3] They have shown that diacetylmorphine has an earlier onset of action than morphine, causes less nausea and vomiting, and induces more sedation.[4] When heroin is given orally it is rapidly and completely absorbed and deacetylated promptly in the liver to morphine and 6-alpha-mono-acetylmorphine. It acts as a pro-drug for morphine.[3] Most researchers consider oral heroin to be the same as morphine, although the pharmacokinetics of an important metabolite of heroin, 6-acetylmorphine, have never been studied in human beings.[3] The absorption of oral heroin is 1.5 times greater than that of morphine, and the potency of heroin is 2.5 times greater. Increasing the dose of oral morphine can abolish this difference in potency, but it is assumed that the increased dose will be tolerated. These facts have not been addressed in the literature. Furthermore, in the most widely cited study comparing oral heroin and morphine and showing them to be equal, both treatment groups received other medications for pain (steroids, phenothiazines, antidepressives, and benzodiazepines).[1] The author of this study[1] questioned his findings and suggested that other results might be obtained if the narcotics were used in a purely single-drug study. This observation has been ignored by workers who have used these data to demonstrate the similarity of heroin to morphine. Therefore, oral heroin, which has not been adequately studied, may be more than just a pro-drug for morphine and may yet have an important role in pain relief.

When given parenterally, heroin is markedly different from morphine. Both heroin and acetylated morphine are detectable in the blood after injections.[3] The rapid organ clearance and uptake by the brain, limited only by blood flow, allow high levels of heroin to be reached in the brain, where the drug is hydrolyzed to 6-acetylmorphine and morphine and where these metabolites are retained. This phenomenon is undoubtedly due to the chemical structure of heroin and to plasma binding and lipid solubility.[5] These data irrefutably distinguish heroin from morphine and account for the unique and superior properties of parenteral heroin: rapidity of onset, power to sedate, lack of nausea, increased potency (2.5 times greater than morphine),[4] and high potential for addiction.

Although trials comparing long-term oral heroin administration with long-term oral morphine administration have been carried out,[1] such studies have not been performed with parenteral heroin and morphine. Twycross, who reportedly showed the similarity of the two oral drugs in his self-admittedly flawed study,[1] denies the feasibility of a similar comparison of the parenteral drugs. He states "it has never been suggested that morphine is better than diamorphine [heroin] and . . . results would still leave diamorphine with the practical advantage of being more soluble."[4] This high solubility is one of heroin's other unique chemical properties; up to 120 mg can be given in an injection of 0.2 ml, and the average therapeutic dose can be dissolved in less than 0.1 ml. Because of the limited solubility of morphine, doses including equivalent analgesia would require a 20-ml injection—an unwieldy and painful procedure if the injection is given subcutaneously or intramuscularly. Twycross estimates that, excluding patients who receive heroin for less than 24 hours, 10 to 19 percent of cancer patients in a hospice setting may need the drug, when only solubility and injection size are used as criteria for need.[4] The solubility of heroin, combined with its rapid onset, short duration of effect, little or no induction of nausea, and high analgesic potency make it the drug of choice when parenteral narcotics are needed.

Unfortunately research in the United States that compares parenteral morphine with parenteral heroin has been limited to single-dose studies in postoperative patients[2] or patients with chronic pain.[3,6] These widely cited studies show no clinical difference between parenteral morphine and heroin. This conclusion is very misleading because these studies have no relation to the repeated use of heroin for chronic pain. There has been no study in cancer patients that has evaluated regular use of parenteral heroin for chronic pain.

Because of the unique properties that heroin possesses, one can easily agree with researchers in the field who state that even with the present, limited knowledge of narcotic actions, there is a group of patients who will require heroin because of its solubility [4] and unique properties [7] and because of the biovariability in response to narcotics that may exist among patients with cancer.[8,9]

Because of its solubility, Dilaudid (hydromorphone) has been proposed as a substitute for heroin.[7,10] A new ultrasoluble form of hydromorphone, called Dilaudid-HP, has been marketed by Knoll Pharmaceuticals. Although Dilaudid has been shown to be more potent than morphine, there are unfortunately no studies comparing Dilaudid or Dilaudid-HP with heroin in clinical situations. The one available study, which compares single-dose Dilaudid with heroin for preoperative patients, indicated that Dilaudid has more side effects and less analgesic efficacy than heroin.[11] Because of the well-recognized individual variations in drug tolerance and analgesic response, the place of Dilaudid-HP in the analgesic armamentarium is unclear. It is not acceptable as a substitute for heroin at present.

H.R. 5290—The Compassionate Pain Relief Act—provides a means to reintroduce heroin into American medicine. If this measure becomes law, American doctors will join their British colleagues in having a choice about the right analgesic for their patients. Physicians in this country will be given the freedom and responsibility to provide heroin to patients who need it—those who are not helped by the available drugs for pain.

The Waxman bill provides a comprehensive and intelligent system for distributing heroin. Since all evidence seems to point to the superiority of parenteral to oral heroin, the bill provides for the availability of the parenteral form only. H.R. 5290 also states specifically that heroin would be available only to patients with cancer in "situation where conventional analgesics are ineffective or contraindicated," which would limit the number of potential users and the amount of heroin that would be in circulation or in any pharmacy at a given time. Fear of criminal diversion of even this limited amount of heroin to addicts has clouded the thinking of the Department of Health and Human Services, the American Medical Association, and the American College of Physicians. All these institutions are opposed to reintroducing heroin into medical practice because of this fear. In the light of the pioneer work of Beaver [7] and Twycross,[12] the fear of addiction and dependency among patients should no longer be an issue. In fact, the widely accepted narcotics Dilaudid and morphine have a potential for addiction that is identical to that of heroin.

The Waxman bill as amended and approved in March 1984 by the Committee on Energy and Commerce would allow distribution of heroin by prescriptions written by physicians registered under Section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act, and then only through hospice or hospital pharmacies. This would drastically limit the number of pharmacies that would stock heroin, and should quiet the fears of those who say that there will be widespread thefts of legal heroin. Hospital pharmacies have always stocked morphine, Dilaudid, barbiturates, and amphetamines. Indeed, some now stock marijuana (delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol) tablets for nausea, which are distributed through hospital pharmacies under a program of the National Cancer Institute and the Drug Enforcement Administration. Data from the Drug Enforcement Administration for 1982 show that robberies at retail pharmacies accounted for 96 percent of robberies for drugs, but that robberies of hospital pharmacies represented only 3 percent of robberies in the same period.[13] In the United Kingdom, where heroin consumption for pain is rising (from 51 kg in 1971 to 150 kg in 1982),[14] theft from pharmacies is not a problem. Chief Inspector H. B. Spear of the Home Office (Great Britain) submitted testimony to the Waxman committee, stating that "the lawful availability of heroin poses no greater security threat than for other similar drugs." He also noted that when thefts did occur, they involved the whole stock of drugs, not just heroin. In the Waxman bill, the rules for physicians writing prescriptions for heroin would be more stringent than those in effect in Britain, since British doctors can prescribe both oral and parenteral forms for the treatment of any medical condition except addiction (for which only specifically appointed doctors may prescribe).

Since one could argue that the crime-ridden, lawless, frontier-style, gun-slinging, amoral United States is not like well-behaved, decorous Great Britain, opponents of the bill believe that criminal diversion would occur here in spite of police surveillance of hospital and hospice pharmacies stocking heroin. Professor Arnold Trebach, a noted criminologist, has pointed out some interesting data in his testimony before the Waxman committee, on the projected impact of such criminal diversion. Taking the ratio of morphine use to heroin use in Britain (7:3) and applying it to the use of morphine in the United States in 1982, he estimated that the amount of heroin that might be used under the Waxman bill would be 228 kg per year. After quoting estimates by government agencies that 4 to 10 metric tons of illegal heroin come into the United States every year, he assumed that if through some disaster the 228 kg of legal heroin were diverted by criminals and added to the amount on the street, it would account for only 4 per cent of the total amount of illegal heroin in the United States. This startling statistic indicates how unimportant the problem of criminal diversion is as compared with actual heroin use. Furthermore, it shows that under controlled distribution, the Waxman bill would not cause any major increase in existing addiction problems, pharmacy thefts, or criminal activity.

The bill wisely calls for a review of heroin use every three months by the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the House Health Subcommittee and also sets up a trial period of four years. These provisions would allow ongoing review to provide guidelines for the future.

Since I have stated what the bill would not do, I will now state its most important effects and why I am in favor of it. (1) It would give American doctors a wider choice of analgesics to use. (2) It would remove from American doctors the stigma and the terror laid on the profession by the 1924 Harrrison Narcotics Act, which held that doctors could not safely and prudently prescribe a potent narcotic like heroin. (3) It would end the antiquated posture of the drug-enforcement bureaucracy, which prevents cancer patients from receiving a narcotic that they may need medically. (4) It would allow creative researchers of pain relief to stop trying to prove that heroin is not good and to discover why it is good and to use that knowledge constructively. It would enable them to understand why during the largest evaluation of heroin in vivo—the British experience since 1874—doctors gave heroin to 30 percent of all cancer patients in hospices. (5) Finally, the bill shows that the government would accept addicting and potent narcotics and trust physicians and patients with them. In this atmosphere, new ideas, new drugs, and new approaches would develop.

The "heroin movement" created in 1974 by the National Committee for the Treatment of Intractable Pain has fostered the atmosphere that now exists in the United States, where pain research, terminal care, and studies on the comfort of patients are beginning. Now, pain control is discussed openly on rounds; nurses and doctors are starting to be concerned, not about addiction, but about giving enough of the right narcotic to the suffering patient. American medicine is ready to have heroin again.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the Compassionate Pain Relief Act, designed to relieve the suffering of terminally ill cancer patients whose disease is accompanied by severe, intractable pain. This bill will create a temporary program through which diacetylmorphine, more commonly known as heroin, will be made available for this limited purpose. Although heroin is generally recognized as one of the most effective and potent analgesics known, it is by law not currently available for medical use.

The medical use of heroin for terminally ill cancer patients is needed to relieve a particular type of pain suffered by these patients. That is intractable pain—pain that cannot be controlled by available drugs and conventional techniques. It is pain so intense and unrelenting that the patients who suffer from it often cannot sleep, eat, or have any sort of normal existence because of the debilitating nature of their agony. The pain is omnipresent, and the suffering patient endures it without relief throughout the final days of his or her life. In one horrible and graphic case, an elderly woman was in such agony that she literally ate her bottom lip completely off from clenching her teeth so tightly.

Mr. President, cancer touches everyone's lives. Statistics show that 1 out of every 4 Americans and 1 out of every 3 families will be affected by cancer, which is this country's second leading cause of death. This year alone, more than 400,000 persons will die from cancer. Of these 400,000, approximately 1 in 10 will encounter extreme pain, but most will, thankfully, have this pain controlled by available drugs such as dilaudid and morphine. Nevertheless, estimates are that about 8,000 people will suffer through their last days in intractable pain. They will live in unrelievable pain because the medications available to them under present law do not have the capacity to adequately relieve that pain. In many cases, however, diacetylmorphine could effectively reduce their suffering.

The medical value of heroin is well known and its medical use is permitted in over 40 foreign countries. It is available and widely used by physicians in England for the treatment of pain due to cancer. In fact, use of heroin in England for the treatment of pain has risen threefold in recent years. In the United States, however, there is still considerable difference of opinion regarding the value of heroin. For example, a representative of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration has testified in the House that heroin offers no unique advantages over other available analgesics. Many distinguished oncologists and physicians, however, such as Dr. William Regelson of the Medical College of Virginia, Dr. Allen M. Mondzac of George Washington University, Dr. Herbert Berger of the New York Medical College, and Dr. William Beaver of the Lombardi Cancer Institute at Georgetown University recognize heroin as one of the most effective analgesics known to medical science, and advocate its use in the treatment of terminally ill cancer patients who cannot obtain relief from currently available pain killers.

In addition to these physicians, a growing and diverse list of people and organizations support the use of heroin to treat intractable pain resulting from cancer. Last year 19 U.S. Senators ranging across partisan lines and political philosophies cosponsored a similar bill. They were Senators INOUYE, GOLDWATER, LEAHY, MATSUNAGA, PELL, Randolph, RIEGLE, SYMMS, Tsongas, WARNER, GLENN, ABDNOR, LEVIN, HATFIELD, PACKWOOD, DOMENICI, HOLLINGS, and MCCLURE. In addition, there were 31 cosponsors of a companion bill on the House side. That bill, H.R. 5290, sponsored by Congressman WAXMAN, received unanimous approval of the House Subcommittee on Health and Environment on March 21 and was passed by the full Energy and Commerce Committee on April 12, 1984. It was defeated on the House floor in September 1984.

Others who have spoken out in favor of this humane use of heroin include columnists William F. Buckley, Jr., Stephen Rosenfeld, and Smith Hempstone; newspapers such as the Washington Post, the Los Angeles Times, the Arizona Daily Star, and over 50 others; noted theologians such as the Reverend John Sheehan of Marquette University; and, of course, the thousands of people who are members of the National Committee on the Treatment of Intractable Pain.

The national committee—a private organization of physicians, nurses, lawyers, clergymen, and scholars, as well as cancer patients and their families—has worked diligently for this merciful change in the law. The American Psychiatric Association has endorsed the idea that relief from the intractable pain of cancer should take precedence over concern that the dying patient might become addicted or that medical heroin might be diverted to illicit purposes.

These and a growing number of people and groups support the use of diacetylmorphine to treat terminally ill cancer victims whose bodies are wracked by pain that other analgesics cannot relieve. I know that there are Members of this Senate who would hesitate in voting for such legislation because they have been assured that there are currently analgesics available that would provide the same relief as heroin. There is considerable evidence, however, that for many cancer patients this is not the case. Heroin possesses certain inherent characteristics that make it a superior analgesic for certain patients suffering from intractable pain.

First, heroin has a more rapid onset of relief than other drugs.

Second, while heroin gives the same maximum analgesic effect as morphine, milligram for milligram it is 2 to 2½ times as potent. It is also highly soluble. Since less volume is therefore required for intramuscular injection, this means a significant decrease in the discomfort of patients who are suffering from muscle wasting and who are unable to tolerate frequent, high volume injections of morphine.

Third, heroin produces less side effects, such as nausea and depression, than many other analgesics.

Fourth, heroin may provide new pain relief to certain terminal cancer patients who have built up a very high tolerance to other analgesic drugs.

Finally, use of heroin, the speedy and consistent action of which not only relieves pain but reduces anxiety, can be a major step in treatment that keeps patients alert and enjoying life for a significant time, protected from the pain and despair of their illness.

The temporary program established by this amendment would not only provide relief to many patients whose suffering is currently unrelievable, but would also allow an objective evaluation of the true value of diacetylmorphine as a treatment for the pain caused by terminal cancer.

Mr. President, the only possible objection to this amendment can come from those who are concerned about the potential diversion of diacetylmorphine into illegal channels. Such fears are not only groundless, but they also display a cruel irony. As William F. Buckley has noted, "The irony is that anybody in a major city can acquire the knowledge necessary to buy heroin from a dirty little drug pimp, but licensed doctors may not administer the identical drug to men and women—and children—literally dying from excruciating pain."

Mr. President, for my colleagues who have shared my initial concern about possible diversion of medical heroin into the streets, let me assure them that I firmly reject this as an argument against the amendment. I assure my colleagues that I did not lightly reach that conclusion. As cochairman of the Senate Drug Caucus, as a former prosecutor who made a name for myself in the narcotics interdiction effort, and as a legislator who has fought throughout my career in the Senate in opposition to illicit drug use, it is clear that I will never endorse a proposal which might have a favorable impact on illegal drug dealing.

This bill has adequate safeguards to reasonably guard against diversion. First, the amendment does not legalize the use of heroin or change its status as a schedule I drug under the Controlled Substances Act. Rather, it simply creates a temporary program through which the drug is made available under tight controls to a limited number of pharmacies. Heroin will be made available to terminally ill cancer patients primarily through hospital pharmacies approved under section 302 of the Controlled Substances Act; it will not be available at the corner drugstore. In addition, the Secretary of Health and Human Services is given the authority to promulgate such additional regulations as are necessary to assure the safe manufacture, processing, packing and distribution of the heroin to assure its quality, purity, and distribution within legitimate channels. The Secretary will also report regularly to the Congress on implementation of the program and results. Finally, the program automatically sunsets in 5 years or at the discretion of the Secretary before then.

Significantly, Mr. President, burglaries of hospital pharmacies have not been a problem in practice. Hospital pharmacy burglaries represent only 2.5 percent of all pharmacy burglaries. These pharmacies already carry morphine, dilaudid and other narcotic drugs; the addition of heroin will not significantly increase the incidence of burglaries. In addition, most illegal diversion involves oral formulations of drugs. This amendment specifically limits heroin availability to parenteral, or intramuscular, form.

To encourage continuing research into alternatives for the relief of intractable pain, the amendment provides that the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to committees of the House and Senate on the extent of pain management research funded through the National Institutes of Health, on the manner of Government support of the training of health personnel in pain management, and on recommendations for improving such pain management training.

The 5-year period this temporary program is in effect will allow an objective evaluation of whether diacetylmorphine has a place in medical pain-relief techniques in America. Such a temporary program has ample precedent. In fact, for many years the National Cancer Institute [NCI] has operated a drug development program through its Division of Cancer Treatment. The NCI's so-called "Group C" program provides a variety of medications—drugs such as THC, the active ingredient in marijuana, that can give therapeutic benefits to certain patients—to cancer physicians for use in treatment. This "Group C" drug development program provides an appropriate model for implementing and controlling the distribution of diacetylmorphine.

Mr. President, heroin is by no means a panacea. It will not cure cancer nor will it eliminate all of the problems related to pain management. It will not automatically be the proper choice for treating the majority of cancer patients and it will not even be uniformly effective in all cases of intractable pain. What it will do, however, is offer desperately needed relief to many of the 8,000 patients who currently die after constant and excruciating suffering. The availability of diacetylmorphine under careful medical control, while allowing virtually no chance for illicit diversion, will provide hope to many of those men, women, and children who must now face their final days of life with only the prospect of unending agony.

Mr. President, this bill is the opportunity for each Member of this body to assure that hope—to help end the needless suffering of thousands of Americans. With its passage, we will have made a clear statement about our and the country's concern for the dying and about the treatment of pain generally. We will also have overcome the misplaced priorities that for so many years have precluded the legitimate use of a drug that, despite its potential for abuse, also has the potential for medical relief of otherwise intractible human suffering. I urge my colleagues to join me in helping relieve a horrible and unnecessary tragedy, and in restoring a measure of comfort and dignity to the lives of many terminal cancer patients and their families.

By Mr. DOLE:

S. 71. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to clarify the application of the imputed interest and interest accrual rules; to the Committee on Finance.

IMPUTED INTEREST AND INTEREST ACCRUAL RULES CLARIFICATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to make permanent changes in the imputed interest rules of the Tax Code. These changes would accomplish two important goals. First, they will enable legitimate, nonabusive business transactions to use seller financing, and avoid imputed interest, on substantially more favorable terms than would be allowed under the permanent rules of the Tax Reform Act of 1984.

Second, they will ensure that abusive tax shelters and aggressive, tax motivated deals will not be able to gain undue and unintended tax benefits, from understating the interest element of deferred payment transactions or from arranging for an intentional mismatch of interest income and interest deductions.

The bill I am introducing today contains the same provisions approved by the Senate late last year as an amendment to H.R. 5361. That amendment was worked out with the cooperation and support of the distinguished Senator from Montana, Senator MELCHER, who had expressed serious objections to the original rules proposed by the Treasury Department and included in the 1984 Tax Act. It was also supported by the Treasury Department and a broad coalition of business and real estate associations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a copy of a letter of support for the amendment that was signed on October 3, 1984, by seven major business and real estate associations as well as the bill.

Mr. President, unfortunately the Senate amendment was not accepted by the House of Representatives. The other body was not eager at that time to consider permanent legislation in this area, and so a temporary measure was agreed to as a compromise. That temporary measure will not apply to transactions after June 30, 1985.

I believe that permanent changes are needed in this area, and that the compromise agreed to by the Senate last year should be the basis for such changes. I know that there were some concerns raised about the complexity of the Senate compromise, and there may be room for improvements in that regard. I look forward to working with all parties concerned with this important area of the tax law, and hope that a good bill can be enacted in the next few months.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 3, 1984.

The undersigned organizations support the Dole Compromise with respect to the OID and imputed interest rules regarding seller-financed property. The Compromise addresses major problems affecting the abilty of Americans to buy and sell residential and commercial real estate and small businesses and farms. The Compromise addresses areas of concern to the U.S. Treasury while protecting the legitimate needs of our members and the public. We believe that if these changes are enacted and properly implemented there should be no further need for major legislative changes in this area during this or the next Congress. Therefore, we unequivocally urge you to support the Dole Compromise.

S. 71

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TAX TREATMENT OF CERTAIN DEFERRED PAYMENTS.

(a) REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES UNDER SECTION 483.—Section 483 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to interest on certain deferred payments) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (f), (g), and (h) as subsections (h), (i), and (j), and

(2) by striking out subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"(e) REDUCED RATE OF INTEREST IN CASE OF CERTAIN SALES OF RESIDENCES, FARMS, OR TRADES OR BUSINESSES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any debt instrument arising from a sale or exchange to which this subsection applies, the discount rate under subsection (b) or (c)(1)(B) shall be the rate prescribed by the Secretary in regulations but shall not be greater than 10 percent and 9 percent, respectively.

"(2) SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH THIS SUBSECTION APPLIES.—This subsection shall apply to any of the following sales or exchanges:

"(A) RESIDENCES.—Any sale or exchange of a residence by an individual, an estate, or a testamentary trust, but only if—

"(i) either—

"(I) such residence on the date of such sale or exchange (or in the case of an estate or testamentary trust, on the date of death of the decedent) was the principal residence (within the meaning of section 1034) of the individual or decedent, or

"(II) during the 2-year period ending on such date, no substantial portion of such residence was of a character subject to an allowance under this title for depreciation (or amortization in lieu thereof) in the hands of such individual or decedent, and

"(II) during the 2-year period ending on such date, no substantial portion of such residence was of a character subject to an allowance under this title for depreciation (or amortization in lieu thereof) in the hands of such individual or decedent, and

"(ii) such residence was not at any time, in the hands of such individual, estate, testamentary trust, or decedent, described in section 1221 (1) (relating to inventory, etc.).

"(B) FARMS.—Any sale or exchange by a qualified person of—

"(i) real property which was used as a farm (within the meaning of section 6420 (c)(2)) at all times during the 3-year period ending on the date of such sale or exchange, or

"(ii) tangible personal property which was used in the active conduct of the trade or business of farming on such farm and is sold in connection with the sale of such farm, but only if such property is sold or exchanged for use in the active conduct of the trade or business of farming by the transferee of such property.

"(C) TRADES OR BUSINESSES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Any sale or exchange by a qualified person of any trade or business.

"(ii) APPLICATION WITH SUBPARAGRAPH (E).—This subparagraph shall not apply to any sale or exchange of any property described in subparagraph (B).

"(iii) NEW SECTION 38 PROPERTY.—This subparagraph shall not apply to the sale or exchange of any property which, in the hands of the transferee, is new section 38 property.

"(3) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) shall apply to any debt instrument to the extent that the sales price does not exceed the applicable limit with respect to such sale or exchange.

"(B) APPLICABLE LIMIT DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'applicable limit' means the limit determined in accordance with the following table:

"If the transaction is described in:	The limit is:
Paragraph (2)(A)	$250,000
Paragraph (2)(B)	2,000,000
Paragraph (2)(C)	1,000,000

"(4) BLENDED RATE WHERE SALES PRICE EXCEEDS APPLICABLE LIMIT.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which this subsection applies with respect to which the sales price exceeds the applicable limit—

"(A) TEST RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (c)(1)(B) shall, in lieu of the rate under paragraph (1), be equal to the sum of—

"(i) 9 percent, multiplied by a fraction the numerator of which is the applicable limit and the denominator of which is the sales price, and

"(ii) 110 percent of the applicable Federal rate, multiplied by a fraction—

"(I) the numerator of which is the sales price minus the applicable limit, and

"(II) the denominator of which is the sales price.

In the case of a transaction described in paragraph (2)(A), clause (ii) shall be applied by substituting '100 percent' for '110 percent'.

"(B) IMPUTED RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (b) shall, in lieu of the rate under paragraph (1), be equal to the rate determined under subparagraph (A) by substituting '10 percent' for '9 percent' and, except in the case of any transaction described in paragraph (2)(A), '120 percent' for '110 percent' each place it appears.

"(C) RATES AS ADJUSTED.—For purposes of this paragraph, if the Secretary prescribes, pursuant to paragraph (1), a lower discount rate under subsection (c)(1)(B) or (b) than the maximum rate allowed under paragraph (1), such lower rate shall apply in lieu of '9 percent' or '10 percent' in subparagraphs (A)(i) or (B), respectively.

"(5) AGGREGATION AND ALLOCATION RULES.—For purposes of this subsection, except as provided in regulations—

"(A) DEBT INSTRUMENTS.—All debt instruments arising from a transaction (or any series of related transactions) shall be treated as 1 debt instrument.

"(B) SALES AND EXCHANGES.—All sales and exchanges which are part of the same transaction (or a series of related transactions) shall be treated as 1 sale or exchange.

"(C) PRORATION OF APPLICABLE LIMIT WHERE MORE THAN ONE PERSON HOLDS AN INTEREST.—In the case of a sale or exchange of any property (or a trade or business) described in paragraph (2) with respect to which there is more than 1 owner, the applicable limit under paragraph (3) shall be apportioned among each owner on the basis of the ratio which the fair market value of such owner's interest bears to the fair market value of all interests of such owners.

"(6) APPLICATION WITH SUBSECTION (h).—In the case of any qualified sale (as defined in subsection (h)(2)), the applicable limit determined under paragraph (3) shall be reduced by the amount of any debt instrument to which subsection (h)(1) applies.

"(7) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) QUALIFIED PERSON DEFINED.—The term 'qualified person' means—

"(i) a person who—

"(I) is an individual, estate, or testamentary trust,

"(II) is a corporation which immediately prior to the date of the sale or exchange has 35 or fewer shareholders, or

"(III) is a partnership which immediately prior to the date of the sale or exchange has 35 or fewer partners,

"(ii) is a 10-percent owner of a farm or a trade or business,

"(iii) pursuant to a plan, disposes of—

"(I) an interest in a farm or farm property, or

"(II) his entire interest in a trade or business and all substantially similar trades or businesses, and

"(iv) the ownership interest of whom may be readily established by reason of qualified allocations of the type described in section 168 (j)(9)(B), one class of stock, or the like).

"(B) 10-PERCENT OWNER DEFINED.—The term '10-percent owner' means a person having at least a 10-percent ownership interest, applying the attribution rules of section 318 (other than subsection (a)(4)).

"(C) SALES PRICE DEFINED.—The term 'sales price' means the sum of—

"(i) money and fair market value of property received in the sale or exchange, plus

"(ii) the stated principal amount of any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange.

"(D) TRADE OR BUSINESS DEFINED.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'trade or business' means any trade or business, including any line of business, qualifying as an active trade or business within the meaning of section 355.

"(ii) RENTAL OF REAL PROPERTY.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the holding of real property for rental shall not be treated as an active trade or business.

"(f) SPECIAL TEST RATES FOR SALES OR EXCHANGES INVOLVING CERTAIN REAL PROPERTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which this subsection applies, subsection (c)(1)(B) shall be applied by substituting—

"(A) '80 percent' for '110 percent' in the case of any debt instrument described in paragraph (3), and

"(B) '100 percent' for '110 percent' in the case of any debt instrument described in paragraph (4).

"(2) SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH THIS SUBSECTION APPLIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.— Except as provided in this paragraph, this subsection applies to any sale or exchange of—

"(i) land, or

"(ii) real property described in subparagraph (D) or (F) of subsection (c)(2) of section 168 (whether or not such property is of a character subject to an allowance under this title for depreciation (or amortization in lieu thereof) in the hands of the purchaser), including de minimis amounts of tangible personal property associated with such real property.

"(B) CERTAIN PROPERTY NOT INCLUDED.—This subsection shall not apply to any sale or exchange—

"(i) of new section 38 property, or

"(ii) with respect to which the transferor and transferee are related persons.

"(3) DEBT INSTRUMENTS TO WHICH 80 PERCENT RATE APPLIES.—A debt instrument is described in this paragraph if—

"(A) the term of the instrument (determined with regard to any extension or renewal) is not greater than the lesser of—

"(i) 12 years, or

"(ii) in the case of a debt instrument issued in exchange for recovery property, ⅔ of the shortest recovery period under section 168 for such property, and

"(3) the total deferred payments under such instrument, when added to the sum of the total deferred payments under all other debt instruments issued in connection with the sale or exchange—

"(i) to which this paragraph applies, and

"(ii) which were issued before such instrument was issued,

do not exceed $4,000,000.

"(4) DEBT INSTRUMENTS TO WHICH 100 PERCENT RATE APPLIES.—A debt instrument is described in this paragraph if—

"(A) the rate of interest stated in the instrument is not less than the applicable Federal rate,

"(B) such instrument provides for—

"(i) the conditional payment each year of at least 80 percent of the interest so stated, or

"(i) after the close of the 2-year period beginning on the date such instrument was issued the instrument provides the unconditional payment each year of all interest accruing thereunder for that year, and

"(C) such instrument is not described in paragraph (3).

"(5) SPECIAL RULES FOR DETERMINATION OF DISCOUNT RATES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the applicable Federal rate determined under section 1274 (d) for any period after June 30, 1985 (other than the Federal short-term rate) exceeds by more than 2 percentage points such rate for the preceding period as limited by this paragraph, such applicable Federal rate shall not exceed the greater of—

"(i) the sum of—

"(I) such applicable Federal rate for such preceding period, plus

"(II) one-half of such excess, or

"(ii) the highest such applicable Federal rate during the 2-year period before the period for which such determination was made after the application of this paragraph.

"(B) SPECIAL RULES FOR 1985 AND 1986.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, in the case of any sale or exchange with respect to which a binding contract was entered into during 1985 or 1986—

"(i) TEST RATE.—The discount rate for purposes of applying subsection (c)(1)(B) to any debt instrument described in paragraph (3) shall not be greater than the rate determined in accordance with the following table:

"For contracts entered into during the period:	The rate is:
Jan. 1–June 30, 1985	10.5
July 1–Dec. 31, 1985	11
Jan. 1–June 30, 1986	11.5
July 1–Dec. 31, 1986	12.

For purposes of applying subsection (c)(1)B) to any debt instrument described in paragraph (4), the discount rate shall not be greater than the rate determined in accordance with the table, plus one-half percentage point.

"(ii) IMPUTED RATE.—The discount rate for purposes of applying subsection (b) to any debt instrument described in paragraph (3) or (4) shall not be greater than the rate determined under clause (i), plus 1 percentage point.

"(6) AGGREGATION.—For purposes of this subsection, all sales and exchanges which are part of the same transaction (or a series of related transactions) shall be treated as 1 sale or exchange.

"(7) RELATED PERSON DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection and subsection (g), the term 'related person' means a person who is related (within the meaning of section 267(b) or section 707(b)(1)) to another person other than a qualified 5-percent or less partner (within the meaning of section 267(e)(5)(B)).

"(g) SPECIAL RULES FOR APPLICATION OF THIS SECTION.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) APPLICATION OF SUBSECTIONS (E) AND (F).—In the case of any sale or exchange, either subsection (e) or subsection (f) may be applied, but not both.

"(2) TREATMENT OF ASSUMPTIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if, after December 31, 1984, any person—

"(i) assumes any debt obligation issued after October 15, 1984, or described in subparagraph (C), in connection with the sale or exchange of any property, or

"(ii) takes such property subject to any such debt obligation, and the terms and conditions of such debt obligation are not changed, then this section shall apply only to the person assuming, or taking property subject to, such obligation and the obligation shall be treated as issued by the purchaser to the seller in the transaction in which such obligation was assumed or the property taken subject to such obligation.

"(B) OTHER ASSUMPTIONS.—In the case of any assumption to which subparagraph (A) does not apply, the rules regarding assumptions as in effect prior to the enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 shall apply.

"(C) OBLIGATIONS DESCRIBED IN THIS SUBPARAGRAPH.—A debt obligation is described in this subparagraph if such obligation—

"(i) was issued on or before October 15, 1984, and

"(ii) was assumed (or property was taken subject to such obligation) in connection with the sale or exchange of property (including a deemed sale under section 338(a)) the sales price of which is greater than $100,000,000.

"(D) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be appropriate to effect the purpose of this subsection, including regulations relating to tax-exempt obligations, government subsidized loans, or other similar instruments.

"(E) CERTAIN EXEMPT TRANSACTIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations under which any transaction shall be exempt from the application of this paragraph if such exemption is not likely to significantly reduce the tax liability of the purchaser by reason of the overstatement of the adjusted basis of the acquired asset.

"(3) FAIR MARKET VALUE RULE IN POTENTIALLY ABUSIVE CASES.—In the case of any potentially abusive situation (within the meaning of section 1274(b)(3)(B)), the principal amount of any debt instrument received in any sale or exchange of property to which this section applies shall be the fair market value of such property adjusted to take into account other consideration involved in the transaction.

"(4) SALE-LEASEBACKS.—Subsections (e) and (f) shall not apply to any sale or exchange if, pursuant to a plan, the transferor or any related person leases such property.

"(5) RULES NOT TO APPLY WHERE PREPAYMENT PROHIBITED.—Subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any obligation arising from a loan from a third-party creditor, pursuant to which the obligor is not permitted to pay the instrument prior to maturity.

"(6) NO IMPUTATION RATE WHERE RESTRICTIONS ON STATED INTEREST APPLY.—Except as otherwise provided in regulations, in any case in which State law applicable to a transaction prohibits the parties from stating interest sufficient to satisfy the applicable rate under subsection (c)(1)(B), the rate under subsection (b) shall be considered equal to the rate so applicable under subsection (c)(1)(B).".

(b) INTEREST INCOME AND DEDUCTIONS COMPUTED ON CASH BASIS IN CERTAIN CASES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1274 of such Code (relating to determination of issue price in the case of certain debt instruments issued for property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH INTEREST RULES OF SECTION 483 APPLY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subpart—

"(1) TRANSACTIONS TO WHICH SECTION 483(e) APPLIES.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which section 483(e) applies—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), any inclusion in income or deduction under this title with respect to interest on any debt instrument issued in connection with such sale or exchange shall be computed on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(B) SALES PRICE EXCEEDS APPLICABLE LIMITS.—In any case in which the sales price exceeds the applicable limit under section 483(e)(3)—

"(i) except in the case of any transaction to which section 483(e)(2)(A) applies, subparagraph (A) shall not apply, and

"(ii) the discount rates under subsections (c)(3) and (b)(2)(B) shall be equal to the rates determined under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 483(e)(4).

"(2) TRANSACTIONS TO WHICH SECTION 483(f) APPLIES.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which section 483(f) applies—

"(A) TRANSACTIONS WITH 80 PERCENT TEST RATE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), any inclusion in income or deduction under this title with respect to interest on any debt instrument described in section 483(f)(3) shall be computed on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(ii) SPECIAL RULE FOR TRANSACTIONS NOT QUALIFYING FOR 80 PERCENT TEST RATE.—Clause (i) shall not apply to any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange if, in addition to such instrument, a debt instrument not described in section 483(f)(3) is issued in such sale or exchange.

"(B) TRANSACTIONS TO WHICH SUBPARAGRAPH (A) does not apply.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except in the case of property described in subsection (e)(2)(A) of section 483, if subparagraph (A) does not apply to any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange, subsection (c)(3) shall be applied—

"(I) in the case of any debt instrument described in section 483(f)(4), by substituting '100 percent' for '110 percent', and

"(II) in the case of any debt instrument described in section 483(f)(3), by substituting '80 percent' for '110 percent'.

"(ii) SPECIAL RULES FOR 1985 AND 1986.—In the case of any debt instrument to which clause (i) applies issued during 1985 or 1986, the discount rate under subsection (c)(3) shall not be greater than the rate determined under section 483(f)(5).

"(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR HOLDING AND TRANSFER OF DEBT OBLIGATION.—

"(A) Paragraphs (1)(A) and (2)(A) shall apply to the holder of a debt obligation only if such obligation is—

"(i) held by the first obligee of such obligation or such obligee's spouse or estate, and

"(ii) secured by the property sold or exchanged in the transaction in which such obligation is issued.

"(B) Except as otherwise provided in regulations, in the case of a transfer of property by the obligor in which the obligation is not satisfied and the transferee does not become liable to pay such obligation to the first obligee, any deduction for interest on any indebtedness paid or incurred by the transferee to the immediate transferor attributable to such obligation shall be deferred until such time as such deduction would have been allowed if such obligation had been assumed by the transferee.

"(C) In any case in which the transferee assumes or takes property subject to any obligation under subparagraph (A) or is considered to do so under subparagraph (B), the transferee shall compute the amount of the deduction for any interest on such obligation on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(4) SUBSECTION ALSO TO APPLY TO DEBT USED TO CARRY OBLIGATIONS.—In any case in which an obligor of a debt obligation to which paragraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) applies pays or incurs interest on indebtedness to carry such debt obligation, and deduction for such interest shall be deferred to the extent necessary to achieve a proper matching of interest income and expense.

"(5) REGULATIONS TO PREVENT ABUSE OF REQUIRED CASH ACCOUNTING.—The Secretary may by regulation prescribe rules to prevent the mismatching of interest income and interest deductions in connection with obligations on which interest is computed on the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

"(6) OTHER RULES APPLY.—For purposes of this subsection, rules similar to the rules under subparagraphs (B) and (D) of section 483(g)(2) shall apply.".

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR ASSUMPTIONS.—Paragraph (4) of section 1274(c) of such Code (relating to debt obligations to which section applies) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(G) TREATMENT OF ASSUMPTIONS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Except in the case of property described in subsection (e)(2)(A) of section 483, if, after December 31, 1984, any person—

"(I) assumes any debt obligation issued after October 15, 1984, or described in clause (ii) in connection with the sale or exchange of any property, or

"(II) takes such property subject to any such debt obligation, and the terms and condition of such debt obligation are not changed, then this section shall apply only to the person assuming, or taking property subject to, such obligation and the obligation ahall be treated as issued by the purchaser to the seller in the transaction in which such obligation was assumed or the property taken subject to such obligation.

"(ii) OBLIGATION DESCRIBED IN THIS CLAUSE.—A debt obligation is described in this clause if such obligation—

"(I) was issued on or before October 15, 1984, and

"(II) was assumed (or property was taken subject to such obligation) in connection with the sale or exchange of property (including a deemed sale under section 338(a)) the sales price of which is greater than $100,000,000.

"(iii) CERTAIN EXEMPT TRANSACTIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations under which any transaction would be exempt from the application of this subparagraph if such exemption would not significantly reduce the tax liability of the purchaser by reason of the overstatement of the adjusted basis of the acquired asset.

"(iv) OTHER ASSUMPTIONS.—In the case of any assumption to which subparagraph (A) does not apply, the rules regarding assumptions as in effect prior to the enactment of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 shall apply.

"(v) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be appropriate to effect the purpose of this subsection, including regulations relating to tax-exempt obligations, government subsidized loans, or other similar instruments.".

(c) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN SALES OR EXCHANGES OF RESIDENCES BY DEALERS IN SUCH PROPERTY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1274 of such Code is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN SALES OR EXCHANGES OF RESIDENCES BY DEALERS IN SUCH PROPERTY.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subpart—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any debt instrument described in paragraph (4) arising from a sale or exchange to which this subsection applies—

"(A) subsection (c)(3) shall be applied by substituting '80 percent' for '110 percent', and

"(B) subsection (b)(2)(B) shall be applied by substituting '110 percent' for '120 percent'.

"(2) SALES OR EXCHANGES TO WHICH THIS SUBSECTION APPLIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—This subsection applies to any sale or exchange of any residence by a dealer who holds such residence as section 1221(1) property to a person who intends to occupy such residence if the sales price of such residence does not exceed $250,000.

"(B) PRORATION OF APPLICABLE LIMIT WHERE MORE THAN ONE PERSON HOLDS AN INTEREST.—In the case of a sale or exchange of any property described in subparagraph (A) with respect to which there is more than 1 owner, the applicable limit under subparagraph (A) shall be apportioned among each owner on the basis of the ratio which the fair market value of such owner's interest bears to the fair market value of all interests of such owners.

"(3) BLENDED RATE WHERE SALES PRICE EXCEEDS $250,000.—In the case of any sale or exchange to which this subsection would otherwise apply with respect to which the sales price exceeds $250,000—

"(A) TEST RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (c)(3) shall, in lieu of the rate under paragraph (1)(A), be equal to the sum of—

"(i) 80 percent, multiplied by a fraction the numerator of which is $250,000 and the denominator of which is the sales price, and

"(ii) 100 percent of the applicable Federal rate, multiplied by a fraction—

"(I) the numerator of which is the sales price minus $250,000, and

"(II) the denominator of which is the sales price.

"(B) IMPUTED RATE.—The discount rate under subsection (b)(2)(B) shall be the rate under paragraph (1)(B).

"(4) DEBT INSTRUMENT.—A debt instrument is described in this paragraph if it provides conspicuous notice to the obligor in a matter prescribed by regulations that if the obligor of such instrument places the residence in service in a trade or business the depreciation rules under section 168(f)(16) shall apply.

"(5) SALES PRICE DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'sales price' means—

"(i) money and fair market value of property received in the sale or exchange, plus

"(ii) the stated principal amount of any debt instrument issued in such sale or exchange.

"(6) RULES RELATING TO INTEREST TO CARRY DEALER OBLIGATIONS ARISING UNDER THIS SUBSECTION.—

"(A) EXCESS DEDUCTIONS DISALLOWED.—For each year the interest expense paid or incurred on any debt incurred or continue to carry any dealer obligation shall be disallowed to the extent such expense exceeds interest income includable with respect to such dealer obligation for such year.

"(B) DISALLOWED INTEREST EXPENSE ALLOWED IN SUBSEQUENT YEARS.—For any year the amount of disallowed interest expense shall be allowed as a deduction with respect to any dealer obligation in an amount equal to the disallowed interest expense as of the close of such year (not including any amount previously allowed under this subparagraph) multiplied by a fraction—

"(i) the numerator of which is the sum of the principal payments of such dealer obligation made in such year, and

"(ii) the denominator of which is the total amount of principal outstanding on such dealer obligation at the beginning of such year.

"(C) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) DEALER OBLIGATION DEFINED.—The term 'dealer obligation' means an obligation arising pursuant to a transaction to which paragraph (1) of this subsection applies.

"(ii) DISALLOWED INTEREST EXPENSE DEFINED.—The term 'disallowed interest expense' means the aggregate amount of interest expense disallowed under subparagraph (A) with respect to any dealer obligation.

"(D) NO INFERENCE.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to imply that any transaction described in this paragraph is or is not subject to the rules of section 453B, and any determination of such issue shall be made as if this paragraph had not been enacted.".

"(d) RULE WHERE SPECIAL STATE LAW APPLIES.—Section 1274 of such code is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) NO IMPUTATION RATE WHERE RESTRICTION ON STATED INTEREST APPLY.—Except as otherwise provided in regulations, in any case in which State law applicable to a transaction prohibits the parties from stating interest sufficient to result in an adequate stated interest in the transaction, a rule similar to the rule of section 483(g)(6) shall apply."

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Paragraph (4) of section 1274(c) of such Code (relating to certain excepted debt instruments) is amended—

(1) by striking out subparagraphs (A) and (B),

(2) by striking out "section 483(e)" and "SECTION 483(e)" in subparagraph (F) and the heading to subparagraph (F), respectively, and inserting in lieu thereof "section 483(i)" and "SECTION 483(i)", respectively, and

(3) by redesignating subparagraphs (C), (D), (E), and (F) as subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D), respectively.

(f) DEPRECIATION.—Subsection (f) of section 168 of such Code (relating to accelerated cost recovery system) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph—

"(16) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN RESIDENCES.—In the case of any debt instrument described in section 1274(f)(1), the original principal amount of the debt instrument shall be deemed to be the lesser of—

"(A) the stated principal amount, or

"(B) the imputed principal amount determined by applying section 1274(f) using a discount rate of 110 percent of the applicable Federal rate at the time the debt was issued.".

(g) FAIR MARKET VALUE IN POTENTIALLY ABUSIVE SITUATIONS.—Subparagraph (B) of section 1274(b)(3) of such Code (relating to fair market value rule in potentially abusive situations) is amended in clause (ii), by striking out "or" at the end of subclause (III), by redesignating subclause (IV) as subclause (V), and by adding after subclause (III) the following new subclause:

"(IV) deferred interest, or".

(h) DETERMINATION OF APPLICABLE FEDERAL RATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 1274(d) of such Code (relating to determination of applicable Federal rate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) AUTHORITY FOR SECRETARY TO DETERMINE RATE MORE FREQUENTLY.—If there is a significant decrease in any applicable Federal rate following any 6-month test period referred to in subparagraph (B), the Secretary may determine the applicable Federal rate on the basis of a more recent period (not less than 30 days) as he determines appropriate to reflect such decrease.".

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1984.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any debt instrument issued during the first 6 months of 1985 pursuant to a sale or exchange for which a binding contract was entered into during 1984, the applicable Federal rate for purposes of sections 483 and 1274 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 shall be 10 percent.

(B) PARAGRAPH NOT TO APPLY.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any debt instrument to which section 483 (e) or (f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended by this section, applies.

(i) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect as if included in the amendments made by section 41 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

S. 72. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that mental health counselor services shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation in order to amend our Nation's Medicare and Medicaid Programs in order to ensure that a new breed of mental health practitioner, the mental health counselor, will be recognized as an autonomous provider under these two important Federal health programs.

Mr. President, individuals who are licensed by the various States as mental health counselors, typically possess a master's or doctoral degree in counseling, mental health counseling, community counseling, or a similar degree. Further, under the provisions of my bill, for these practitioners to be autonomously reimbursed, we would require that after obtaining such a degree, the individual must have at least 2 years of supervised clinical counseling experience.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 72

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (H);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (I); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(J) mental health counselor services;".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Mental Health Counselor Services

"(ee)(1) The term 'Mental Health Counselor services' means services performed by a mental health counselor (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the mental health counselor is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not the mental health counselor is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'mental health counselor' means an individual who—

"(A) possesses a master's or doctor's degree in counseling, mental health counseling, community counseling, or similar degree title,

"(B) after obtaining such a degree has performed at least two years of supervised clinical counseling, and

"(C) is licensed or certified as such in the State in which he practices, or if such State does not license or certify mental health counselors, is certified by the National Academy of Certified Clinical Mental Health Counselors and listed in such organization's Register of Certified Clinical Mental Health Counselors.".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) mental health counselor services (as defined in section 1861(ee)); and".

(b) Section 1902(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)";

(2) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)"; and

(3) by striking out "paragraphs numbered (1) through (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs numbered (1) through (18)".

SEC. 3. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) Except as provided under paragraph (2), the amendments made by section 2 shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by section 2, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 73. A bill to amend the Job Training Partnership Act to include American Samoans in the Native American Employment and Training Programs; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

AMERICAN SAMOAN JOB TRAINING

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the native American provision of the Job Training Partnership Act—Public Law 97-300—our Federal Employment and Training Program, in order to expressly authorize that American Samoan peoples will be deemed eligible for these important programs. As a provision of Public Law 97-300, the U.S. Department of Labor was directed to conduct a comprehensive report on the unique employment needs of these native American peoples. Mr. President, when the U.S. Senate passed this important legislation, we had included a provision which would have authorized programs for those American Samoans residing in Hawaii as participants. In order to obtain sufficient information to carefully consider my proposal, the conferees instead agreed to direct the Department to conduct this comprehensive report. Although I have not yet received a formal copy of the Department's final report, my review of its preliminary draft indicated that, in fact, American Samoans experience very serious employment problems, especially in Hawaii and California.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 73

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 401(a)(1) of the Job Training Partnership Act (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Act") is amended—

(1) by striking out "and"; and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon a comma and the following: "and American Samoan communities".

(b) Section 401(c)(1)(B) of the Act is amended by inserting after "Hawaiian natives" the following: "and American Samoan Natives".

(c) Section 401(h)(1) of the Act is amended by inserting after "Native Americans" the first time it appears a comma and the following: "including American Samoans".

S. 74. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that the services of a pediatric nurse practitioner or pediatric clinical nurse specialist shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS PERTAINING TO NURSES

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, Senator MATSUNAGA and I are introducing legislation that would amend the Medicare and Medicaid Programs in order to ensure that the services of pediatric nurse practitioners and/or pediatric clinical nurse specialists would be directly reimbursable under these two important programs.

Under the provisions of our proposal, the Department of Health and Human Services would be directed to initiate a special 5-year demonstration program for these practitioners in order to provide the Congress of the United States with sufficient information in order to ensure that an informed decision is made regarding the possibility of ultimately providing complete autonomy for our Nation's pediatric nurse practitioners and pediatric clinical nurse specialists throughout all aspects of Medicare and Medicaid.

Presently, under the Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program, these practitioners are deemed truly autonomous providers and, from all that I have heard, these services are well received.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 75. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide a credit for the purchase of child restraint systems used in motor vehicles; to the Committee on Finance.

CHILD RESTRAINT PURCHASERS' TAX CREDIT

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would amend the Internal Revenue Code in order to provide a tax credit for the purchase of child restraint systems used in motor vehicles.

Mr. President, my proposal is modeled after a provision in the State of Hawaii's tax code which has been well-received by my constituents. It is an unfortunate fact that injuries have not replaced infectious diseases as a leading cause of death and disability among younger Americans. For example, I understand that half of all Americans aged 1 to 14, who died in 1983, died from injuries sustained in car and bicycle accidents, fires, falls, drowning, and the ingestion of toxic substances. The U.S. Department of Transportation recently informed me that, although child safety seat use has increased from 13 percent in 1979 to almost 29 percent today, the Department's investigations have indicated that only in about 15 percent of the cases where tethered seats are being used, are they being used correctly. Further, for nontethered restraints, in only approximately 60 percent of the time that they are being used are they being used correctly. This is in spite of the fact that we know that if properly restrained, over 50 percent of the children who died in automobile accidents would have been saved and 65 percent would have been less severely injured.

Mr. President, the most recent figures made available to me by the National Transportation Safety Board reported that in the years 1978 through 1982, nearly 3,400 child passengers under the age of 5 were killed in traffic accidents and more than 250,000 were injured.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 75

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CREDIT FOR PURCHASE OF CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 25A. PURCHASE OF CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEM.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the costs incurred by the taxpayer during such taxable year if purchasing a qualified child restraint system for any child of the taxpayer.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEM.—The term 'qualified child restraint system' means any child restraint system which meets the requirements of section 571.213 of title 49 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

"(2) CHILD RESTRAINT SYSTEM.—The term 'child restraint system' has the meaning given to such term by section 571.213 of title 49 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

"(3) CHILD.—The term 'child' has the meaning given to such term by section 151(e)(3).".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25 the following new item:

"Sec. 25A. Purchase of child restraint system.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

By Mr. BUMPERS (for himself and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 81. A bill to create a Federal Crop Insurance Corporation field office within the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

TO ESTABLISH A FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION IN ARKANSAS

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, along with Senator PRYOR I am today introducing a bill to require the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation to establish and maintain a field operations office in Arkansas.

Since early in 1983, we have been vigorously urging for very persuasive reasons that the FCIC establish a separate field operations office in Arkansas, but our efforts at persuasion have been unavailing. Before 1984, Arkansas was included in the Jackson, MS, field operations office along with the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama. In 1983, the Jackson district received more that twice the amount of insurance premiums than the next highest district—in premiums—located in Columbia, SC. Also, the Jackson district had more acres enrolled in the program than any other district in the Nation.

Because of the refusal of the Corporation to staff the Jackson district adequately, however, the backlog of casework became unbearable. For Arkansas farmers covered by Federal crop insurance, the time required to collect on claims commonly exceeded 1 year, which was completely unacceptable. In April 1984, with the situation already critical, the FCIC was again urged in the strongest possible terms to establish a separate Arkansas field operations office. The manager of the FCIC expressed sympathy with our plight, but refused our request and instead declared his intention to move Arkansas to the Nashville, TN field office, a move that was accomplished later in the year. I vigorously opposed this move, because I knew that it would not come close to meeting Arkansas' legitimate needs.

Although the Nashville office was not as busy, the staff there was more geared to tobacco produced in the district States of Tennessee and Kentucky, and other crops produced in these two States. The staff was largely without knowledge and experience in handling Arkansas' major crops, most noticeably rice.

This situation has not been acceptable to the farmers in Arkansas, and I completely agree with them. The creation of a separate field operations office in Arkansas is completely justified by the facts. In 1983-84, each of six States—North Dakota, Missouri, Iowa, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Illinois—had a field operations office that serviced the farmers of that State alone. Interestingly, Arkansas had more units insured than either South Dakota or Illinois, and more insured units than in all of the States served by the Washington district or the Davis, CA, and Harrisburg, PA, districts combined. What's more, there were more premiums received from Arkansas farmers than from farmers in Missouri, Iowa, South Dakota, Nebraska, or Illinois—and more Arkansas premiums than those received from all the States served by eight other field operations districts. Finally, Arkansas has a greater percentage of its potentially insurable acreage insured than 41 of the 47 States covered by Federal crop insurance.

As I hope my colleagues will recognize, the case for an Arkansas office to serve Arkansas farmers is compelling. Of course, it would have been a happier result if the FCIC had accomplished this administratively, as it certainly could have done under current law. If the FCIC had done what it should have, it would not have been necessary for us to bring this matter before the Senate in legislative form. Last year, report language was included in the fiscal year 1985 agriculture appropriations bill stating the expectation of the committee that the corporation establish an office within Arkansas expeditiously. I certainly hope that the Corporation will heed the committee's expectation. Meanwhile, I commend this bill to my colleagues, and urge its swift and favorable consideration.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I'm pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] in this effort to establish a regional office of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation in the State of Arkansas. I think this is a good bill that's being introduced, and one that will help the farmers of the State of Arkansas who purchase Federal crop insurance. Also, Mr. President, I think enactment of this proposal would be helpful to the overall operation of the crop insurance program.

For the last few years, Mr. President, I've been concerned over the type of service the farmers of the State of Arkansas receive after they've purchased crop insurance, and then sustained a loss. Many farmers in Arkansas, after filling out the necessary forms certifying their losses, have experienced long delays before the claim is paid. Also, many of them have been frustrated when they've tried to inquire about the status of their particular claim.

In the 98th Congress, I introduced the Federal Crop Insurance Prompt Payments Act, which would have set a specific timetable for payment of claims, and if it wasn't met, the agency would have had to pay the farmer interest on the amount of the claim. Most of the provisions of this bill have now been incorporated into FCIC regulations. This will be helpful to our producers.

Another problem occurred, however, and that was the enormous caseload faced by the Jackson, MS, office of the FCIC. This office was far and away the largest office in terms of premiums collected and claims processed. Along with other members of the Arkansas delegation I met with officials of the agency on several occasions in an effort to work out a solution.

Last year, Mr. President, the State of Arkansas, which at that time was served by the Jackson, MS, office was transferred to the office located in Nashville, TN. The Nashville office was responsible for claims filed in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky. However, most of the cases—in fact, the vast majority of the cases—in that office dealt with tobacco or feed grains. Although soybeans are grown in each of those States, they aren't a major crop, like they are in Arkansas, and to the best of my knowledge, no rice is grown in either State. As most Members of the Senate are aware, rice is a major crop in Arkansas, and we lead the Nation in rice production. Further, we have cotton that is covered under FCIC policies.

Mr. President, after reviewing the regional structure of the agency, it became apparent to me that the State of Arkansas, standing alone, was larger than several of the existing regional offices. And also, that due to the volume of Federal crop insurance in Arkansas, a regional office was warranted. The bill being introduced today by Mr. BUMPERS would statutorily make the State of Arkansas a crop insurance region. It is a good move. It will improve the service to the agricultural producers, and I believe it will make the operations of the agency more efficient and responsive to the needs of American agriculture.

S. 76. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that the services of a psychiatric nurse practitioner or psychiatric clinical nurse specialist shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, Senator MATSUNAGA and I today are introducing legislation in order to amend our Nation's Medicare and Medicaid Programs to ensure that psychiatric nurse practitioners and psychiatric clinical nurse specialists will be deemed truly autonomous practitioners under both of these programmatic initiatives.

In my judgment, for too long a period of time now, our various Federal statutes have required that these professional practitioners can only perform under the supervision or referral of members of another profession.

We have been able to modify the Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program in order to ensure that these individuals will be truly autonomous providers and, it is my hope that we will be able to modify Medicare and Medicaid in a similar fashion.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 76

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(3) by inserting after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) psychiatric nurse practitioner or psychiatric clinical nurse specialist services (as defined in section 1861(ee)); and".

(b) Section 1902 (a) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (10)(A), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)";

(2) in paragraph (10)(C)(iv), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (17)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (18)".

SEC. 3. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) (1) Except as provided under paragraph (2), the amendments made by section 2 shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by section 2, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 77. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that the services of a gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

NURSE SERVICES COVERAGE UNDER MEDICARE

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, Senator MATSUNAGA and I, today are introducing legislation to modify our Nation's Social Security Act in order to ensure that the services of gerontological nurse practitioners and gerontological clinical nurse specialists will be readily available under both Medicare and Medicaid.

There can be no question that, as our Nation's elderly continue to become a larger segment of our overall population, it is becoming increasingly important for us to establish comprehensive health care programs targeted toward their unique needs. There is, without question, a shortage of gerontological nurse practitioners. The Senate Appropriations Committee has received testimony from numerous witnesses that their services are badly needed. However, I do not feel that it is really realistic to assume that we will ever be able to fill this void unless we are willing to modify those Federal health care programs which provide for reimbursement for health care in order to ensure that they will, in fact, be deemed autonomous providers.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Gerontological Nurse Practitioner or Gerontological Clinical Nurse Specialist Services

"(ee)(1) The term 'gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist services' means services performed by a gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not the gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist' means an individual who—

"(A) is a registered nurse and is licensed to practice nursing in the State in which the gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist services are performed; and

"(B)(i) holds a master's degree in gerontological nursing or a related field from an accredited educational institution, or

"(ii) is certified as a gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist by the duly recognized professional nurses association.".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist services (as defined in section 1861(ee)); and".

(b) Section 1902(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (10)(A), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)", and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)";

(2) in paragraph (10(C)(iv), by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (17)" and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18) of section 1905(a) or the care and services listed in any 7 of the paragraphs numbered (1) through (18)".

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1861(j)(4) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "and" at the end of clause (A) and by inserting before the semicolon the following: ", and (C) provides that a gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist (as defined in subsection (ee)(2)) shall be available, on at least a consultant basis, to assure that necessary gerontological nursing services are furnished to patients".

(b) The first sentence of section 1905(c) of such Act is amended by striking out "and" at the end of clause (3) and by inserting before the period the following: ", and (5) provides that a gerontological nurse practitioner or gerontological clinical nurse specialist (as defined in section 1861(ee)(2)) shall be available, on at least a consultant basis, to assure that necessary gerontological nursing services are furnished to patients".

SEC. 4. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) Except as provided under paragraph (2), the amendments made by section 2 shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by section 2, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) The amendments made by section 3 shall become effective on the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 78. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that clinical social worker services shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES COVERAGE UNDER MEDICARE

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today Senator MATSUNAGA and I are introducing legislation which would amend our Nation's Medicare and Medicaid Programs in order to provide for the autonomous recognition of the services of our Nation's clinical social workers.

Without question, our Nation's clinical social workers provide a very significant proportion of our Nation's mental health care and also have an excellent track record in both administration and program development.

It is my personal goal to amend every one of our Federal health care programs in order to ensure that ultimately, these practitioners will be deemed truly autonomous providers as they currently are under the Department of Defense CHAMPUS Program.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 78

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (H);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (I); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(J) clinical social worker services;".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES

"(ee)(1) The term 'clinical social worker services' means services performed by a clinical social worker (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the clinical social worker is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not the clinical social worker is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'clinical social worker' means an individual who—

"(A) possesses a master's or doctor's degree in social work,

"(B) after obtaining such degree has performed at least two years of supervised clinical social work, and

"(C) is licensed or certified as a clinical social worker in the State in which the clinical social worker services are performed, or in those States which do not provide for licensure or certification, is listed in a national register of social workers who, by education and experience, qualify as health care providers in clinical social work.".

(c) Section 1833(c) of such Act is amended by striking out all that follows "purposes of subsections (a) and (b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "no more than $1,000".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) clinical social worker services (as defined in section 1861(ee)); and".

(b) Section 1902(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)";

(2) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)"; and

(3) by striking out "paragraphs numbered (1) through (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs numbered (1) through (18)".

SEC. 3. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) Except as provided under paragraph (2), the amendments made by section 2 shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by section 2, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 79. A bill to provide that a student enrolled in a graduate program in psychology shall be eligible for student loans under the Health Professions Student Loan Program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

ELIGIBILITY UNDER THE HEALTH PROFESSIONS STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would provide that graduate students in psychology shall be deemed eligible for our Nation's Health Manpower Student Loan Program.

The bill which I am introducing today was adopted by the conferees last congressional session during their deliberations on the Health Manpower Reauthorization Act which, unfortunately, was vetoed by the President.

In my judgment, it is very important and in our Nation's best interest that our Nation's psychology graduate students be deemed eligible for these important student loan programs, especially given the increasing clinical and scientific evidence highlighting the importance of the psychosocial aspects of health care.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 79

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 740(a) of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", or with any public or nonprofit private institution which has a graduate program in psychology (as defined in section 737(3)) and which is located in a State".

(b) Section 740(b)(4) of such Act is amended by striking out "or" before "doctor of veterinary medicine", and by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or a doctoral degree in psychology".

(c) Section 741(b) of such Act is amended by striking out "or" before "doctor of veterinary medicine", and by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", or a doctoral degree in psychology".

(d) Section 741(c) of such Act is amended by inserting after "veterinary medicine," the following: "or in a graduate program in psychology (as defined in section 737(3)),".

(e) Section 741(f)(1)(A) of such Act is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or a doctoral degree in psychology'.

(f) Section 741(f)(1)(B) of such Act is amended by inserting before the simicolon the following: ", or in a graduate program in psychology (as defined in section 737(3))".

(g) Section 741(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "or podiatry" and inserting in lieu thereof "podiatry, or psychology".

(h) The amendments made by this Act shall be effective with respect to loans made on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

S. 80. A bill to transfer the National Institute of Mental Health to the National Institutes of Health; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MENTAL HEALTH TRANSFER ACT

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would amend the authority within the Department of Health and Human Services of the National Institutes of Health [NIH] in order to transfer the National Institute of Mental Health [NIMH] to the NIH.

Mr. President, I have proposed such a transfer over the past several years now and have been pleased that at various times, my colleagues on the Senate Appropriations Committee have also raised this issue directly with the Department of Health and Human Services.

In my judgment, the time has come to significantly increase our Federal commitment to the research and clinical training programs of the National Institute of Mental Health and, in order to accomplish that objective, I feel that it would be appropriate for the NIMH to become formally part of the NIH, which is, without question, the hallmark of our Federal research initiatives.

I am aware that the Institute of Medicine recently completed its report on various reorganizational proposals for the NIH; however, in all candor, I am not satisfied that they gave serious enough consideration to the move which I am proposing today.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 80

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this act may be cited as the "National Institute of Mental Health Transfer Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. (a) The National Institute of Mental Health is transferred to the National Institutes of Health.

(b) Section 504 of the Public Health Service Act is redesignated as section 455 of such Act, and is amended—

(1) by redesignating the second and third sentences of subsection (a) as paragraph (2) of such subsection; and

(2) by striking out the first sentence of such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) There is established as a division of the National Institutes of Health, the National Institute of Mental Health (hereinafter in this part referred to as the 'Institute') to administer the programs and authorities of the Secretary with respect to mental health.".

SEC. 3. (a)(1) Subsection (a) of section 501 of the Public Health Service Act is amended by striking out "Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof "Alcohol and Drug Abuse Administration".

(b) Subsection (b) of such section is amended—

(1) by striking out "the National Institute of Mental Health,"; and

(2) by striking out the comma after "Alcholism".

(c) Subsection (c) of such section is amended—

(1) by striking out "Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health" in the first sentence of paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "Alcohol and Drug Abuse";

(2) by striking out "drug abuse, and mental health" in subparagraph (A) of such paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "and drug abuse";

(3) by striking out the comma after "Alcoholism" in the first sentence of paragraph (2)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "and";

(4) by striking out "Drug Abuse, and the National Institute of Mental Health" in such sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "Drug Abuse"; and

(5) by striking out "drug abuse, and mental illness" each place it appears in the second sentence of such paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof "and drug abuse".

(d) Subsection (e) of such section is amended—

(1) by striking out "the National Institute of Mental Health," each place it appears; and

(2) by striking out the comma after "Alcholism" each place it appears.

(e) The heading for title V of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MENTAL HEALTH,"; and

(2) by striking out the comma after "ALCHOLISM".

S. 82. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may furnish outpatient dental services and treatment for nonservice-connected disability to any war veteran who has a service-connected disability of 50 per centum or more; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

OUTPATIENT DENTAL SERVICE FOR VETERANS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today which would provide for outpatient dental care of any war veteran who is 50 percent or more disabled as a result of his military service. Veterans will be eligible for this care even if their dental problems are unrelated to their service injuries.

Legislation passed by the 91st Congress provides medical and outpatient care for veterans of all wars who were totally and permanently disabled by service-related injuries. This law, Public Law 91-102, was designed to care for the medical needs that would arise during their lives, but would be unrelated to their military wounds. It, however, specifically forbids payment for outpatient dental care. My bill seeks to fill the gap left by Public Law 91-102.

According to one estimate, approximately 175,000 veterans would be eligible for dental care if this bill is passed. Currently, these men get free care only if their problems are directly related to their service disability. But, as the disabled American veterans noted when they urged me to introduce this measure, many veterans live on limited, fixed incomes. Dental costs are rising along with everything else in these inflationary times, and an increasing number are being forced to go without proper dental care because they cannot afford it.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent tnat the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 83. A bill to amend title XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that services furnished by a clinical social worker shall be reimbursable under Medicare when furnished by a health maintenance organization to a member of that organization; to the Committee on Finance.

HMO REIMBURSABLE SOCIAL WORKER SERVICES

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today Senator MATSUNAGA and I are introducing legislation to amend our Nation's Medicare Program in order to ensure that when a Health Maintenance Organization [HMO] desires to utilize the services of a clinical social worker, they will be deemed truly autonomous within the scope of their State practice act.

During the 98th Congress, we were successful in amending this same provision of the Medicare statute in order to ensure that HMO's will be able to utilize professional psychologists when they so desire.

Our Nation's clinical social workers have a long and illustrious track record of providing high quality mental health care and, accordingly, I feel that the time has now come to amend our various Federal health statutes in order to provide for their explicit inclusion.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2)(H)(ii) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or by a clinical social worker (as defined in subsection (ee))" after "clinical psychologist (as defined by the Secretary)"; and

(2) by striking out "incident to his services" and inserting in lieu thereof "incident to such clinical psychologist's services or clinical social worker's services".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"CLINICAL SOCIAL WORKER

"(ee) The term 'clinical social worker' means an individual who—

"(1) possesses a master's or doctor's degree in social work;

"(2) after obtaining such degree has performed at least two years of supervised clinical social work; and

"(3) is licensed or certified as a clinical social worker in the State in which the services are performed, or, in the case of a State which does not provide for licensure or certification, is listed in a national register of social workers who, by education and experience, qualify as health care providers in clinical social work.

S. 84. A bill to incorporate the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PEARL HARBOR SURVIVORS ASSOCIATION

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am proud to introduce before this distinguished body, a bill to incorporate the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association. This measure would bestow Federal recognition on this most honorable private nonprofit association.

Mr. President, the devastation of December 7, 1941, is still fresh for many of us, but for untold thousands, it was the catalyst for a personal sacrifice that could never be exceeded. The Pearl Harbor Survivors Association is comprised of men and women who defended our Nation against the onslaught of the Japanese attack on the Pacific fleet at Pearl Harbor. Since 1941, survivors of the Pearl Harbor attack have formed many local and regional groups, and there are now 127 active chapters located in almost every State. Their national organization, the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association, was incorporated in Missouri in 1958.

Today there are an estimated 15,000 surviving members of the U.S. Armed Forces who served at Pearl Harbor and in the area of Oahu during the December 7 attack. Of that number, the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association has an active membership of 7,990 men and women. Anyone who was a member of the Armed Forces on Oahu or was stationed aboard a ship located within 3 miles of the island on December 7, 1941, is eligible to join. Members must either have been honorably discharged or still be a member of the Armed Forces. The association conducts regular chapter, district, and State meetings, and a biennial national convention.

The motto of the organization is "Keep America Alert," which this association strives to accomplish through the preservation of historical mementos and chronicles of the Pearl Harbor attack, as well as preserving the gravesites of those who were killed in the attack. Their ultimate mission is to stimulate Americans to take a more active interest in the affairs and future of our Nation.

The Pearl Harbor Survivors Association is truly unique because it will only exist as long as there are actual survivors of Pearl Harbor. In my judgment, this association fulfills all of the necessary requirements to warrant a Federal charter. In all candor, Mr. President, this recognition is the least that we can do to honor the survivors of this infamous attack.

I am most proud to sponsor this legislation and I wish to insert in the RECORD a statement by the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association. I believe that it best summarizes the purposes of the organization.

Mr. President, at this time I request unanimous consent that the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association's statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMEMBER PEARL HARBOR

On that peaceful Sunday morning, December 7th, 1941, an enemy attack force hit Pearl Harbor with all its fury of death and destruction. In only thirty short minutes the attackers accomplished their most important mission; they had wrecked the battle force of the United States Pacific Fleet. We also lost half of the military aircraft on the island. We accounted for ourselves as military, by fighting back, not yet aware that history had been thrust upon us. Pearl Harbor was the actual beginning of the great war which was to change the entire structure of the world. We Americans who were there demonstrated that we were prepared to give our lives, and did give them when necessary. Our sacrifices at Pearl Harbor united the nation and gave rise to a determination to protect and keep the American freedom. Our sacrifice alerted a relaxed nation, brought it to its feet and caused it to win World War II. The lesson we learned by our sacrifice will not be easily forgotten. Many of us are no longer of use as sailors, soldiers, marines, and airmen. We must make ourselves useful at home, by dedicating ourselves to the principles of freedom; by doing everything within our power to bring about a commitment of patriotism. We survivors who are still alive, for those who did not survive, can never permit ourselves to become vulnerable again. "Remember Pearl Harbor."

S. 86. A bill to amend the laws of the United States to eliminate gender-based distinctions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SEX DISCRIMINATION IN THE UNITED STATES CODE REFORM ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on December 21, 1981, President Reagan signed Executive Order 12336 establishing the task force on legal equity for women. The task force was established to "provide for the systematic elimination of regulatory and procedural barriers which have unfairly precluded women from receiving equal treatment from Federal activities." The order further assigned to the Attorney General the responsibility to complete a review of Federal laws and to identify and report to the President any language or provision that "unjustifiably differentiates or which effectively discriminates, on the basis of sex."

In June of 1982, the Attorney General completed his first report pursuant to the Executive Order. This report listed over 100 Federal statutes still containing some form of overt, gender bias. Early in the 98th Congress, with the President's support, I introduced legislation to revise or eliminate the vast majority of these identified statutes. The Senate Judiciary Committee subsequently approved the bill, unanimously, along with an amendment containing corrective language for additional sex-based laws identified in the Attorney General's final report. The bill was unanimously approved by the full Senate; unfortunately, no action was taken by the House. As a consequence, I am reintroducing the identical bill today and hope that in this Congress, both Houses will see fit to promptly pass it.

The bill would revise or eliminate over 150 statutory provisions that still contain some form of overt, substantive, gender bias. A few of these are clearly obsolete and would be repealed. The substantive effect of some others has already been negated through agency action or court decision, in which case they would be amended to conform to existing practice and case law. A number of these laws, however, are of continuing applicability. Thus, while the impact of the bill should not be overstated, it should also be emphasized that the proposal involves more than simple technical changes to language. On the contrary, a number of the changes will benefit individuals who, in a variety of relatively narrow areas, may still be subjected to unfair discrimination under the law.

Mr. President, this legislation represents an important and necessary, albeit modest, step in the continuing effort to achieve full equality for women under the law. Though each of the laws to be amended may be of minimal impact, their cumulative effect is to imply an inferior or dependent status for women. Today, Americans overwhelmingly believe that men and women should be treated as equal partners in society. Our Nation's laws should reflect that fact, in both form and substance.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join our new majority leader, Senator DOLE, in sponsoring a bill to eliminate gender-based distinctions in Federal laws. This bill enjoyed broad support in the last Congress and I urge my colleagues to act expeditiously to enact this needed reform into law.

This legislation is a modest, yet very important step, in promoting equal and fair application of our Federal laws. My own State of Iowa enacted a similar measure in 1980 and is now in the process of "cleansing" its code of all language which is discriminatory on its face.

While passage of this legislation will not result in sweeping changes, the more than 100 revisions in sex-based terminology will provide equal treatment in certain areas of the Social Security Act and Railroad Retirement Act where determinations of benefits reflect sex distinctions. Many of the changes will also eliminate remaining sex biases in the Coast Guard, Naval and Marine Reserve statutes.

I support the swift enactment of this necessary step in continuing efforts to achieve legal equality.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 87. A bill to specify that health maintenance organizations may provide the services of psychologists; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

HMO'S MAY PROVIDE SERVICES OF PSYCHOLOGISTS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation that would amend the basic Health Maintenance Organizations [HMO's] authorization act in order to expressly ensure that those HMO's who desire to utilize psychologists, shall, in fact, be authorized by this important statute.

Presently, there are some 400 psychologists who are employed by HMO's across the Nation and who are functioning to the fullest extent of their State practice act. The authority for their employment comes under the generic phrase of the current HMO statute of "other health professional" which, given the professional maturity of our Nation's psychologists, I feel is no longer appropriate.

Incidentially, during the last session of Congress, we were able to have the Medicare statute modified in order to ensure that HMO's would be able to bill for the services of their psychologists on an autonomous basis.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 87

(b) Paragraph (4) of such section is amended by striking out "and podiatrists" and inserting in lieu thereof "podiatrists, and psychologists".

(c) Paragraph (5) of such section is amended by inserting "psychology," after "optometry,".

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 88. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that restrictions on the allowance for depreciation and the investment credit for property leased by a tax-exempt entity not apply to certain correctional facilities leased by States and local governments; to the Committee on Finance.

PRISON CONSTRUCTION PRIVATIZATION ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am today reintroducing my Prison Construction Privatization Act of 1984. I originally introduced this legislation on August 2, 1984, as S. 2903.

The Prison Construction Privatization Act of 1984 will provide important incentives to the private sector to become more involved in prison, jail, and detention center construction and rehabilitation. This principally will be done by exempting these activities from the sale/leaseback restrictions recently enacted in the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

My purpose in introducing this legislation is to address a problem that is national in scope: prison overcrowding. Today, Mr. President, 30 States have their entire prison systems or individual facilities within their systems under court order to relieve overcrowding. In 1983 alone, over 21,000 prison inmates were released early as a result of overcrowding. I feel strongly that the Federal Government should play a role in solving this problem.

I am reintroducing the Prison Construction Privatization Act today with some minor modifications. As I stated earlier, my bill exempts certain correctional facilities from the sale/leaseback restrictions of the recently passed tax bill. The legislation I am introducing today cleans up the language defining a qualified correctional facility. In addition, the new Task Force on Violent Crime has recommended a 4-year, $2 billion Federal assistance program to finance the construction of State prisons.

My bill, however, would open up a new avenue of funding for correctional facilities by providing Federal tax incentives to private firms. Not only is the sale/leaseback approach less costly than direct Federal appropriations, but it also adds private cost controls to prison and jail rehabilitation and construction.

Today, prison overcrowding is one of the most serious problems America faces. The situation has reached epidemic proportions. Presently, 30 States have their entire prison systems or individual jails within their systems under court order to alleviate overcrowding. Judges have ruled that conditions in these jails and prisons represent cruel and unusual punishment and, thus, violate the inmates' constitutional rights. The following States are under court order to relieve prison overcrowding:

Alabama, Arizona, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, Ohio, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Georgia, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Virginia, Washington, and West Virginia.

Additional States, while not yet under court order, have dangerously high populations.

Occupancy in our Nation's prisons is not expected to decline in coming years. Rather, expected increases will make today's problem look small by comparison. According to a study by the General Accounting Office [GAO], prison population will increase from 391,597 in 1983 to 528,193 by 1990. Available prison space, however, will only increase from 332,444 in 1983 to 419,869 in 1990. This will result in a 25.8 percent or 108,324 shortfall.

The crisis is upon us. Judges in many jurisdictions have already begun ordering prisoners released because of overcrowding. The New York City detention center at Riker's Island was ordered to release 613 of its inmates in November 1983 because of overcrowding. In June 1983, New Orleans was forced to erect outdoor tents to house prisoners. In 1983 alone, 21,420 inmates were released prematurely nationwide due to overcrowding. The problem has grown worse in 1984. And worse yet, even after such releases take place, no new criminal can be sentenced without releasing still another prisoner.

According to "The Privatization of Corrections," a draft report prepared by Abt Associates for the National Institute of Justice, as of March 1, 1984, 105,684 new prison beds are planned or proposed for construction over the next 10 years by States to deal with overcrowding. State corrections departments estimate that total costs for these desperately needed prison spaces will top $5 billion in Government outlays through 1994.

Prison construction is not the only enormous expense facing State and local governments. Our Nation's infrastructure is rapidly declining and is badly in need of repair and replacement. In New York State alone, the Joint Economic Committee of Congress estimates that $108.8 billion may be needed by the year 2000 to repair and restore decaying infrastructure. This figure includes funding for mass transit, waste water, bridges, highways, rail, and airports.

Where is the money going to come from? With our Federal budget deficit of such concern, new spending programs must be limited. Will taxpayers agree to foot the bill?

Today, State and local prisons and jails are often financed through general obligation bonds. Voter approval must be obtained before the bonds can be issued. Prison construction bond issues are not popular among voters and often are rejected in favor of financing more visible projects.

With the problem so enormous and financing so hard to come by, we must find new, imaginative ways to build or rehabilitate prisons, jails, and detention centers.

The private sector can offer assistance and expertise in correctional services in several ways. Many private firms have recently become involved in the financing, construction, and management of prisons, as well as participating in work-release programs and prison industries. Several successful detention centers built by private firms for use by local government are presently in operation.

Lease financing of detention facilities has occurred in several parts of the country as a result of the shortage of traditional financing alternatives. E.F. Hutton has arranged a $30.2 million issue for a jail and sheriff's facility in Jefferson County, CO, as well as a $50 million jail project for Philadelphia. In addition, the Corrections Corporation of America, the National Corrections Corporation, and Behavioral Systems Southwest have financed jails and illegal alien detention centers in Houston, Pasadena, and San Diego. Experience has shown that private firms can construct facilities cheaper than a government entity.

Sale/leasebacks by a government entity will further encourage this privatization process. Under these agreements, a private firm agrees to own, finance, and construct a prison or jail. The facility is then leased to a government entity for a specific number of years. At the end of the lease period, the government entity has an option to buy the facility. During the ownership period, the private firm or group of investors receive tax benefits such as investment tax credits, rehabilitation tax credits, and accelerated depreciation.

Sale/leasebacks by government entities, however, were severely curtailed in the recently enacted Deficit Reduction Act of 1984—H.R. 4170. This bill denies the rehabilitation tax credit and repeals the accelerated cost recovery system [ACRS] for sale/leaseback transactions by government entities.

These new restrictions were enacted because Congress felt, rightly, that certain entities have used sale/leasebacks for no economically useful purpose, but merely were raiding the Federal Treasury as a substitute for raising their own local taxes. Prior to passage of H.R. 4170, a government entity would sell and lease back an existing structure to a group of investors. The investors would obtain generous tax benefits and the government entity would make lease payments. However, no new project was undertaken and no economically useful activity was furthered. H.R. 4170 has eliminated this abuse.

My bill will allow sale/leaseback transactions between government entities and private investors to resume solely for the purpose of State and local prison, jail, and detention center rehabilitation and construction. However, my bill contains safeguards to avoid past abuses associated with sale/leasebacks, while still encouraging the privatization of correctional facilities. The legislation generally exempts new State and local prison and jail rehabilitation and construction from the sale/leaseback provisions of H.R. 4170. However, to receive the rehabilitation tax credit and accelerated depreciation, the structure must be placed in original service no later than 90 days after the signing of a binding contract for use of the structure as a prison facility. In addition, the facility must be used 100 percent for housing prisoners and necessary related facilities. This will effectively avoid the most common abuses associated with sale/leasebacks.

It is important to stress that our prison problem is immediate. The use of sale/leasebacks will allow government entities to quickly finance prison construction through the private sector. Through Federal tax incentives, the private sector can become involved in this pressing public problem.

State and local governments do not have the necessary funds to build new prisons or jails on their own. Private firms, however, have the resources available. The private sector is the means to finance and construct these badly needed facilities. My bill will unleash $1.5 billion of these funds for badly needed prisons without forcing local governments to go to the polls.

CBO estimates that my bill will only cost $16 million in 1985 and an average of $65.5 million per year through 1989. I feel that this is a small price to pay considering the magnitude of the problem. It is an even smaller price to pay when compared to the threat of releasing ever increasing numbers of criminals into our midst, not because they have served their time, not because they have been rehabilitated, but merely because of overcrowding.

Sale/leasebacks for prison construction need to be exempted from the restrictions imposed by H.R. 4170. With prisons and jails increasingly being forced to release violent criminals due to overcrowding, time is running out. Sale/leasebacks by government entities offer an inexpensive solution to this problem.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support this legislation. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my bill be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 88

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Prison Construction Privatization Act of 1985."

SEC. 2. That (a) paragraph (3) of section 168(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (defining tax-exempt use property) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) EXCEPTION FOR QUALIFIED CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'tax-exempt use property' shall not include a qualified correctional facility which is leased by any State or political subdivision thereof or any agency or instrumentality of the foregoing.

"(ii) AGREEMENT TREATED AS LEASE.—For purposes of this title, if any agreement with respect to a qualified correctional facility is characterized by all parties to the agreement as a lease and a tax-exempt entity described in clause (i) is the lessee under such agreement, then—

"(I) such agreement shall be treated as a lease, and

"(II) the lessor shall be treated as the owner of the property and the lessee shall be treated as the lessee of the property.

"(iii) QUALIFIED CORRECTIONAL FACILITY.—For purposes of this subpargraph, the term 'qualified correctional facility' means any property which is devoted exclusively for use as a prison, jail, or other detention facility (including any related facility) and which—

"(I) is leased by a tax-exempt entity within 90 days after the property is originally placed in service by the lessor or lessee, or

"(II) is leased by a tax-exempt entity within 90 days of the completion of a substantial rehabilitation (within the meaning of section 48(g)(3)) of the property by the lessor or lessee.".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 1983, in taxable years ending after such date.

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 89. A bill to recognize the organization known as the National Academies of Practice; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL ACADEMIES OF PRACTICE

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today Senators CRANSTON, MATSUNAGA, and I are introducing legislation to provide a Federal charter for the National Academies of Practice.

The National Academies of Practice represents outstanding practitioners in each of the various health care disciplines: dentistry, medicine, nursing, optometry, osteopathy, podiatry, social work, psychology, and veterinary medicine.

When fully established, each of the various national academies will possess 100 distinguished practitioners selected from their peers. It is my expectation that this umbrella organization will be able to provide the Congress of the United States and the executive branch with considerable health policy expertise, especially from the perspective of those individuals who are in the forefront of actually providing the necessary care.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 89

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled

CHARTER

SECTION 1. The National Academies of Practice organized and incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia, is hereby recognized as such and is granted a charter.

POWERS

SEC. 2. The National Academies of Practice (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation") shall have only those powers granted to it through its bylaws and articles of incorporation filed in the State or States in which it is incorporated and subject to the laws of such State or States.

PURPOSES OF CORPORATION

SEC. 3. The purposes of the corporation shall be to honor persons who have made significant contributions to the practice of applied psychology, dentistry, medicine, nursing optometry, osteopathy, podiatry, social work, veterinary medicine, and other health care professions, and to improve the practices in these professions by disseminating information about new techniques and procedures.

SERVICE OF PROCESS

SEC. 4. With respect to service of process, the corporation shall comply with the laws of the States in which it is incorporated and those States in which it carries on its activities in furtherance of its corporate purposes.

MEMBERSHIP

SEC. 5. Eligibility for membership in the corporation and the rights and privileges of members shall be as provided in the bylaws of the corporation.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS; COMPOSITION; RESPONSIBILITIES

SEC. 6. The board of directors of the corporation and the responsibilities thereof shall be as provided in the articles of incorporation of the corporation and in conformity with the laws of the State or States in which it is incorporated.

OFFICERS OF CORPORATION

SEC. 7. The officers of the corporation, and the election of such officers shall be as is provided in the articles of incorporation of the corporation and in conformity with the laws of the State or States in which it is incorporated.

RESTRICTIONS

SEC. 8. (a) No part of the income or assets of the corporation shall inure to any member, officer, or director of the corporation or be distributed to any such person during the life of this charter. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the payment of reasonable compensation to the officers of the corporation or reimbursement for actual necessary expenses in amounts approved by the board of directors.

(b) The corporation shall not make any loan to any officer, director, or employee of the corporation.

(c) The corporation and any officer and director of the corporation, acting as such officer or director, shall not contribute to, support or otherwise participate in any political activity or in any manner attempt to influence legislation.

(d) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stock nor to declare or pay any dividends.

(e) The corporation shall not claim congressional approval or Federal Government authority for any of its activities.

LIABILITY

SEC. 9. The corporation shall be liable for the acts of its officers and agents when acting within the scope of their authority.

BOOKS AND RECORDS; INSPECTION

SEC. 10. The corporation shall keep correct and complete books and records of account and shall keep minutes of any proceeding of the corporation involving any of its members, the board of directors, or any committee having authority under the board of directors. The corporation shall keep at its principal office a record of the names and addresses of all members having the right to vote. All books and records of such corporation may be inspected by any member having the right to vote, or by any agent or attorney of such member, for any proper purpose, at any reasonable time. Nothing in this section shall be construed to contravene any applicable State law.

AUDIT OF FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS

SEC. 11. The first section of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for audit of accounts of private corporations established under Federal law", approved August 30, 1964 (36 U.S.C. 1101), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(64) National Academies of Practice.".

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 12. The corporation shall report annually to the Congress concerning the activities of the corporation during the preceding fiscal year. Such annual report shall be submitted at the same time as is the report of the audit for such fiscal year required by section 3 of the Act referred to in section 11 of this Act. The report shall not be printed as a public document.

RESERVATION OF RIGHT TO AMEND OR REPEAL CHARTER

SEC. 13. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this charter is expressly reserved to the Congress.

DEFINITION OF "STATE"

SEC. 14. For purposes of this Act, the term "State" includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the territories and possessions of the United States.

TAX-EXEMPT STATUS

SEC. 15. The corporation shall maintain its status as an organization exempt from taxation as provided in the Internal Revenue Code.

TERMINATION

SEC. 16. If the corporation shall fail to comply with any of the restrictions or provisions of this Act the charter granted hereby shall terminate.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 91. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a cooperative agreement to maintain the gravesite of Samuel "Uncle Sam" Wilson and to erect and maintain tablets or markers at such gravesite in commemoration of the progenitor of the national symbol of the United States; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

COMMEMORATION OF UNCLE SAM

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to maintain the gravesite of Samuel "Uncle Sam" Wilson and to erect and maintain tablets or markers at such gravesite in commemoration of the progenitor of the national symbol of the United States. I introduced identical legislation in the 98th Congress.

Uncle Sam has taken the leading role in every major event in American history for the past 150 years. The symbol "Uncle Sam" is known, recognized, and respected by every country in the world and what it stands for, democracy. He survives through times of war and peace, times of plenty and lean, and times of great expectation and dismal outlook to represent the American ideal.

"Uncle Sam" really lived and his nickname was given as the new symbol of the United States during his lifetime. As few men become legends in their own time, it would be a travesty to fail to honor a man who became this country's symbol while he lived after he has died. I urge the Senate to favorably consider this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 91

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That to commemorate the life of Samuel "Uncle Sam" Wilson, the progenitor of the national symbol of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into contracts or cooperative agreements in accordance with section 2(e) of the Act approved August 21, 1935 (16 U.S.C. 462) to maintain the gravesite of "Uncle Sam" Wilson in Oakwood Cemetery, Troy, New York, and to erect and maintain at such gravesite such tablets or markers as the Secretary deems appropriate.

By Mr. MATHIAS:

S. 93. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that individual income tax rates not be adjusted to reflect increases in the Consumer Price Index; to the Committee on Finance.

REPEAL OF TAX BRACKET INDEXING

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to wish my colleagues, old and new, a happy and constructive new year. As we begin the new year and this new Congress, we should, like the Roman god Janus, look to the future while keeping an eye on the lessons of the past. We come in to the 99th Congress with many important issues left unresolved. But one issue dwarfs all others—the Federal deficit.

Since Congress adjourned less than 3 months ago, the deficit has risen by more than $85 billion. Total deficit figures for 1984 are estimated at over $180 billion. Within the next few years we will have yearly deficits in excess of $200 billion. This year interest payments to finance our debt will eat up 16 percent of our budget. By 1989, we will spend as much on financing the debt as we currently spend on defense. Clearly, the first order of business of the 99th Congress must be to rein in the galloping growth of our deficit.

In previous years, there have been many attempts in the Congress to bring these deficits under control. Last year, for example, several of my colleagues and I offered a budget proposal that would have taken $206 billion off the deficit. Unfortunately, the Senate rejected that alternative as well as several other alternatives advanced by other Senators. These alternatives, although differing in important details, all shared the goal of getting these deficits down significantly. However, all failed. The best we were able to do was to come up with a minuscule downpayment on the deficit.

Now we are faced with the inevitable consequences of our failure. Although the domestic impact of the current deficits is yet to be fully felt, our buying on borrowed money is having drastic international consequences. The large deficits support high real interest rates and these interest rates in turn artificially increase the value of the dollar. Foreign capital is attracted to our country, away from where it is desperately needed by debtor developing nations. In addition, the overvalued dollar makes our exports noncompetitive, and acts as a subsidy to imports. The result: a $120 billion trade deficit—the largest in our history. For the first time in modern memory, the United States is dependent on foreign loans. We are becoming and may already have become a debtor nation. Continued long-term deficits will send interest rates soaring, rekindle inflation, depress investment, limit job opportunities, and increase our trade deficit.

Deficit reduction will not be easy. It will require sacrifice from every quarter and make demands on the personal integrity of each of us. No portion of the population should be forced to share a disproportionate amount of this deficit burden. We cannot, for example, balance the budget on backs of just the Federal employees, the poor, or the elderly. We, in Congress, must make the hard, reasoned choices between reducing the deficits and our other national priorities.

As we enter the new year, leaving behind 1984, we should also leave behind Orwellian budget proposals that reduced the deficit in name only. We need concrete proposals that are both fair and effective. That is why today I reintroduce a bill to repeal indexing.

I have opposed indexing taxes since the proposal was introduced in the 1981 tax bill. Indexing is designed to correct one of the perceived flaws of our graduated income tax system—bracket creep. And, in theory, an indexing provision sounds fair. But, in fact, a Congressional Budget Office study indicates that, over the past 15 years, overall tax rates have been roughly what they would have been had taxes been indexed. During this time, Congress targeted tax cuts to advance budgetary policies as well as to offset inflation. Indexing would eliminate that flexibility.

Indexing institutionalizes inflation and puts Congress in fiscal handcuffs. The automatic escalators built into many Government expenditures make the situation worse. Congress has indexed many long-term contracts, military and civil service salaries, Social Security, Government pensions, and other entitlements. With the beginning of tax indexing, the Government is placed in an impossible situation, with revenues ratcheting down at the same time these built-in cost-of-living increases ratchet up Federal outlays. It is worth noting here that Argentina, Brazil, and Israel, three of the most tortured economies in the world, are also three of the most highly indexed.

In the coming weeks, the Senate will review many proposals for reducing Federal spending—all will involve inflicting pain on some sector of the populace. This proposal is pain free. It would hurt no one. It is fair and could reduce the deficit by $51 billion over the next 3 years.

Repealing indexing will not solve our problems. We will still have to agonize over hard choices. That will take time. But, meanwhile, the economy holds its breath, waiting for some indication that the Congress means business. We can send a positive signal now by repealing indexing and we should.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 93

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(a) REPEAL OF INDEXATION.—Subsection (f) of section 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to adjustments in tax tables so that inflation will not result in tax increases) is hereby repealed.

(b) DEFINITION OF ZERO BRACKET AMOUNT.—Subsection (d) of section 63 of such Code (defining zero bracket amount) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) ZERO BRACKET AMOUNT.—For purposes of this subtitle, the term 'zero bracket amount' means—

"(1) $3,400 in the case of—

"(A) a joint return under section 6013, or

"(B) a surviving spouse (as defined in section 2(a)),

"(2) $2,300, in the case of an individual who is not married and who is not a surviving spouse (as so defined),

"(3) $1,700 in the case of a married individual filing a separate return, or

"(4) zero in any other case.".

(c) PERSONAL EXEMPTIONS.—Section 151 of such Code (relating to allowance of deductions for personal exemptions) is amended—

(1) by striking out "the exemption amount" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000"; and

(2) by striking out subsection (f).

(d) RETURN REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 6012.—

(A) Clause (i) of section 6012(a)(1)(A) of such Code (relating to persons required to make returns of income) is amended by striking out "the sum of the exemption amount plus the zero bracket amount applicable to such individual" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,300".

(B) Clause (ii) of section 6012(a)(1)(A) of such Code is amended by striking out "the sum of the exemption amount plus the zero bracket amount applicable to such individual" and inserting in lieu thereof "$4,400".

(C) Clause (iii) of section 6012(a)(1)(A) of such Code is amended by striking out "the sum of twice the exemption amount plus the zero bracket amount applicable to a joint return" and inserting in lieu thereof "$5,400".

(D) Paragraph (1) of section 6012(a) of such Code is amended by striking out "the exemption amount" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000".

(E) Paragraph (1) of section 6012(a) of such Code is amended by striking out subparagraph (D).

(2) AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 6013.—Subparagraph (A) of section 6013(b)(3) of such Code (relating to when joint return deemed filed) is amended—

(A) by striking out "the exemption amount" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000",

(B) by striking out "twice the exemption amount" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,000", and

(C) by striking out the last sentence thereof.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1984.

By Mr. D'AMATO (for himself and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 94. A bill regarding limitations on benefits under police and firemen's pension plans; to the Committee on Finance.

POLICE AND FIREMEN'S PENSION PLANS

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I am reintroducing legislation to correct an inequity in section 235(e) of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982. My bill is identical to legislation I introduced in the 98th Congress, S. 136. This provision requires that pension payments under qualified defined benefit plans be limited to $75,000, actuarily reduced for those who retire before age 55. This actuarial reduction limits a pension for someone who retires at age 40 to $26,741. Procedural safeguards are included in this section for those who retire due to disability and for those whose benefits are the result of collective bargaining.

Unfortunately, the 32,000 police officers and firefighters covered under the New York State qualified pension plan are unprotected by these safeguards. Benefits have been set without collective bargaining since 1974. Twenty-three thousand members of this plan are eligible to retire at half pay after 20 years of service. A recent analysis by the deputy comptroller of New York State revealed that there are currently 1,100 active members of the plan—3.4 percent of the total membership—whose retirement benefits would exceed allowable limits should they choose early retirement. The first of these individuals is eligible for retirement in a few months.

This places my State in an extremely unenviable position. To pay the full benefits due these police officers and firefighters would violate the 1982 tax law. This, of course, could lead to the disqualification, by the Internal Revenue Service, of the entire New York State pension plan. On the other hand, to limit pension benefits to the amounts specified in TEFRA, and thus deny retirees the payments which they have anticipated and to which they are entitled, would violate article 5, section 7, of the State constitution. Neither of these options is satisfactory.

The solution to this dilemma which I am again proposing would provide our Nation's police officers and firefighters with a slightly higher early retirement benefit than that allowed under TEFRA. This would be done by applying normal age 62 retirement benefit limitations to police officers and firefighters at age 55. Actuarial reduction for early retirement would still be required. Thus, the maximum allowable benefits at age 40, following 20 years of service, would become $32,089. It is only fair that those public servants who lay their lives on the line for us every day of the year should not be denied the full retirement benefits which they have earned and on which they have based their plans for the future.

This change, which would cost the Federal Government nothing, should be given the highest priority. The new pension limits take effect in New York on April 1, 1983. We should not risk the disqualification of an entire State qualified pension plan.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this legislation be printed in the RECORD in full following my statement.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 94

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. . LIMITATION ON BENEFITS UNDER POLICE AND FIREMEN'S PENSION PLANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 415(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to annual benefit) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(F) SPECIAL LIMITATION FOR QUALIFIED POLICE OR FIREMEN'S PENSION PLANS.—In applying subparagraph (C) with respect to a participant in a qualified police or firemen's plan, '55' shall be substituted for '62' each place it appears.

"(G) QUALIFIED POLICE OR FIREMEN'S PLAN DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified police or firemen's plan' means a defined benefit plan—

"(i) which is maintained by a State, or political subdivision thereof, for the benefit of all full-time employees of any police department or fire department that is organized and operated by such State or political subdivision to provide police protection, firefighting services, or emergency medical services for any area within the jurisdiction of such State or political subdivision,

"(ii) under which benefits are determined solely by reference to the length of service of the employee in—

"(I) such a police or fire department, or

"(II) the armed forces of the United States, and

"(iii) which requires, as a condition of participation of any employee in the plan, that the sum of—

"(I) the number of years such employee was employed on a full-time basis by such State or political subdivision in such a police or fire department, plus

"(II) the number of years such employee served in the armed forces of the United States (to the extent such years are taken into account under the plan), equals or exceeds 20 years.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall take effect as if it had been included in section 235 of the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982.

By Mr. KASTEN:

S. 100. A bill to regulate interstate commerce by providing for a uniform product liability law, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

PRODUCT LIABILITY ACT

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I am pleased today to reintroduce the Uniform Product Liability Act. I do so at a time when the problem of product liability has clearly become a national one. As has been suggested in the development of this bill, fair and balanced uniform Federal product liability law can bring about great benefits for our country. The bill I am introducing today is substantially the same as the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation in the 98th Congress. However, a provision limiting the award of punitive damages to a single judgment has been deleted from the bill. And, I have added a provision to clarify that the bill does not affect State or Federal environmental laws. The Product Liability Act can and will improve the safety of products. By placing clear responsibility on people who make unsafe products, it will bring about the manufacture of safer products. It will reduce product hazards and do so without 1 cent spent for additional regulation.

Today, manufacturers are faced with a myraid of conflicting rules. In many States, under laws that were enacted or created decades ago, they can escape responsibility for negligent acts. For example, in one of our major States, a person can lose his right to sue before he even knows of an injury. In some States, in the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Virginia for example, a person can lose his right to sue for harms caused by a defective product when he has been only slightly at fault. In other States, a thoughtful manufacturer who wishes to improve the safety of his product, will be penalized by the law, and his own good conduct can be used against him in product liability litigation.

A Federal product liability law will also benefit American manufacturers in competition with foreign companies both here and abroad. A recent study prepared for the Department of Commerce concluded that American manufacturers are at a competitive disadvantage because they pay high product liability premiums for each product manufactured in the United States, whereas foreign companies pay far lower premiums based on the much lower rate of product liability claims in their home markets. A Federal product liability law, by establishing clear and objective rules of liability, will reduce, if not eliminate, the current insurance cost disadvantage under which American exporters now labor.

Finally, uniform product liability rules will help to stabilize insurance premiums. Recent data indicate that product liability insurance rates are on the increase. Unless the rules of product liability are clarified and made uniform, continued premium increases are likely.

The Federal product liability bill will end all of these problems and provide clear, decisive incentives for safety. Its incentives for safety continue even after a product has been placed in the marketplace. Under the bill, manufacturers will have a continuing burden to make consumers aware of defects in products that are already in the marketplace. This is a new and essential means of providing safety for the American people.

The Product Liability Act will address a second goal—one that has become crystal clear in the last 2 months. Our product liability system and our legal system in general has been sullied by lawyer greed. In product liability suits, the lawyers are reaping rewards greater than the victims. This is simply wrong. The jumbled system of law that we have leads to litigation, litigation, and more litigation. Plantiffs and defendants literally run around the Nation bringing suits in States where the law will most benefit them. The Federal product liability law will end this. Presently, even when an issue is finally decided in a particular State, a slight change in the composition of a court can bring about radical changes in the law. Without uniform rules regarding liability, a legal issue resolved after hundreds of thousands of dollars of litigation can be totally relitigated and opened again and again. There is simply no stability in an area essential to interstate commerce.

My legislation will put money for injuries back into the hands of the victims, rather than in the pockets of lawyers.

I would like to add a personal note about this bill. There have been more hearings and comments about it than any other bill that has been before the Commerce Committee during my tenure in the U.S. Senate. I have learned from those comments and criticisms. We have not sought and do not seek to enact a bill that will benefit manufacturers—in spite of such criticisms from the plaintiffs' bar. My concern is that plaintiffs' attorneys' criticisms are not really motivated by concerns for safety or victims, but by preserving a system of chaos that enhances the importance of lawyers and generates large fees. On the other hand, we have had helpful criticisms from consumer groups, and we have addressed them.

We have sharply modified our approach to punitive damages, and the bill I am introducing will permit multiple awards if a manufacturer has engaged in reckless behavior. We have ended once and for all any opportunity of a manufacturer to defend his case simply by pointing to other manufacturers who have done the same thing. We have opened the courthouse doors for thousands of victims who would be barred by old fashioned and arbitrary statutes of limitations. We have made crystal clear that our bill will not in any way attempt to walk into other areas of law, specifically environmental harms. This bill will provide a fair and balanced product liability law for our Nation.

Under any rational system of tort law, which is inherently based on wrongdoing, some persons may not be able to recover. This is a basic legal fact which is almost universally true under State law today. Nevertheless, if a person has used a product in an intended way and is innocent of negligence, we need to explore new ideas as to how such persons should be compensated. At present, out bill calls for very careful and balanced studies in those areas with quick reports to Congress. I am interested in further suggestions and comments about this area, which is one in which I have a great deal of interest.

In the last Congress, I explored the possibility of addressing this problem directly through some system of compensating these claimants. I understand that other Senators are working on proposals that will address this matter. I welcome this interest, and can assure my colleagues that these proposals will receive careful attention. My hope is that any such proposal will be consistent with the need to balance the budget and reduce Federal spending.

In sum, we come forward with a fair and balanced Federal product liability bill. It has benefited from the hearings in the 97th and 98th Congresses and the modifications and changes that have been made. This bill does not contain the limitation of a single award of punitive damages for each product defect, which was contained in the prior bill. This bill contains language based on a proposal from Senator STAFFORD which makes it clear that the bill does not preempt or affect State or Federal laws providing for the recovery of damages or other judicial relief for pollution of the environment. All of these changes and a large number of improvements proposed by Senator GORTON in the last Congress are contained in this bill. I should also mention that after the Commerce Committee reported S. 44 last year, the bill was sequentially referred by unanimous consent to the Labor Committee for consideration of those provisions that arguably could preempt a State or Federal worker compensation statute. I value the Labor Committee's input in this area, and I intend to work with the chairmen and ranking minority members of the Commerce and Labor Committees to work out an acceptable agreement again this year.

The Product Liability Act does not address the liability of manufacturers or construction companies arising out of accidents at the site of manufacturing or construction activities. It covers only the liability of manufacturers for injuries caused by defective products after they enter the stream of commerce. Therefore, the Product Liability Act does not in any way affect the legal liability of the owner or operator of the facility at Bhopal, India, nor would it apply to the liability of the owner or operator of a facility if any such accident occurred in the United States.

It is time to make our product liability system assure the manufacture of safe products. It is also time for product liability law to address the concerns of injured parties and the rights of manufacturers. It is not the purpose of the system to make lawyers wealthy and, with your help, we will end that situation once and for all.

I ask unanimous consent that a text of the bill and a section-by-section analysis be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill and analysis were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 100

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Product Liability Act".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. As used in this Act—

(1) "claimant" means any person who brings a product liability action, and if such an action is brought through or on behalf of an estate, the term includes the claimant's decedent, or if such an action is brought through or on behalf of a minor, the term includes the claimant's parent or guardian;

(2) "clear and convincing evidence" is that measure or degree of proof that will produce in the mind of the trier of fact a firm belief or conviction as to the truth of the allegations sought to be established; the level of proof required to satisfy this standard is more than that required under preponderance of the evidence, but less than that required for proof beyond a reasonable doubt;

(3) "commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, or transportation (A) between a place in a State and any place outside of that State; or (B) which affects trade, commerce, or transportation described in clause (A);

(4) "exercise of reasonable prudence" includes conduct of an ordinary person or class of persons, in the same or similar circumstances, exercising the care, attention, knowledge, intelligence, and judgment that society requires of its members for the protection of their own interests and the interest of others;

(5) "express warranty" means any affirmation of fact, promise, or description relating to a product, but does not include a general opinion about, or general praise of, a product or its quality; the term does not require that a manufacturer use the terms "warrant" or "guarantee", or that the manufacturer have the specific intention to make an express warranty;

(6) "harm" means (A) physical damage to property other than the product itself; (B) personal physical illness, injury, or death of the claimant; or (C) mental anguish or emotional harm of the claimant caused by the claimant's personal physical illness or injury; the term does not include commercial loss;

(7) "manufacturer" means (A) any person who is engaged in a business to design or formulate and to produce, create, make, or construct any product (or component part of a product); (B) a product seller with respect to all aspects of a product (or component part of a product) which are created or affected when, before placing the product in the stream of commerce, the product seller designs or formulates and produces, creates, makes, or constructs an aspect of a product (or component part of a product) made by another; or (C) any product seller not described in clause (B) which holds itself out as a manufacturer to the user of the product;

(8) "person" means any individual, corporation, company, association, firm, partnership, society, joint stock company, or any other entity (including any governmental entity);

(9) "practical technological feasibility" means the technical, medical, and scientific knowledge relating to the safety of a product which, at the time of production or manufacture of a product, was developed, available and capable of use in the manufacture of a product, and economically feasible for use by a manufacturer;

(10) "preponderance of the evidence" is that measure or degree of proof which, by the weight, credit, and value of the aggregate evidence on either side, establishes that it is more probable than not that a fact occurred or did not occur;

(11) "product" means any object, substance, mixture or raw material in a gaseous, liquid or solid state which is capable of delivery itself, or as an assembled whole in a mixed or combined state or as a component part or ingredient, which is produced for introduction into trade or commerce, which has intrinsic economic value, and which is intended for sale or lease to persons for commercial or personal use; the term does not include human tissue, blood, or organs;

(12) "product seller" means a person who, in the course of a business conducted for that purpose, sells, distributes, leases, installs, prepares, blends, packages, labels, markets, repairs, maintains, or otherwise is involved in placing a product in the stream of commerce; the term does not include—

(A) a seller of real property;

(B) a provider of professional services in any case in which the sale or use of a product is incidental to the transaction and the essence of the transaction is the furnishing of judgment, skill, or services; or

(C) any person who—

(i) acts in only a financial capacity with respect to the sale of a product; and

(ii) leases a product under a lease arrangement in which the selection, possession, maintenance, and operation of the product are controlled by a person other than the lessor;

(13) "product user" means any person, including the claimant's employer, who owns, operates, or has control of a product;

(14) "reasonably anticipated conduct" means the conduct which is expected, ordinary, and familiar of the class of persons likely to use or be exposed to the product; and

(15) "State" means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and any other territory or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

PREEMPTION OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 3. (a) No person may recover for any loss or damage caused by a product except to the extent that the loss or damage constitutes harm. A civil action for loss or damage caused to a product itself or for commercial loss is not a product liability action, and shall be governed by applicable commercial or contract law.

(b)(1) This Act supersedes any State law regarding recovery for any loss or damage caused by a product to the extent that this Act establishes a rule of law applicable to any civil action brought against a manufacturer or product seller for loss or damage caused by a product, including any action which before the effective date of this act would have been based on (A) strict or absolute liability in tort; (B) negligence or gross negligence; (C) breach of express or implied warranty; (D) failure to discharge a duty to warn or instruct; or (E) any other theory that is the basis for an award for damages for loss or damage caused by a product. Any issue arising in such an action that is not governed by any such rule of law shall be governed by applicable State law. This Act shall not be construed to waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by any State under any provision of law.

(2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to supersede any Federal law, except the Federal Employees Compensation Act.

(3) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to waive or affect any defense of sovereign immunity asserted by the United States.

(4) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect the applicablity of any provision of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act of 1976 (28 U.S.C. 1602 et seq.).

(c)(1) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to supersede—

(A) any environmental protection law that authorizes a State or a person to institute an action for civil damages, civil penalties, injunctions, restitution, cost recovery, punitive damages or any other form of relief resulting from contamination or pollution of the environment, or the threat of such contamination or pollution, caused by any product defined by State or Federal law as a toxic substance or waste, hazardous substance or material, hazardous waste or other contaminant or pollutant;

(B) a right arising under the common law of a State to bring an action to abate a nuisance or otherwise protect against contamination or pollution of the environment, or the threat of such contamination or pollution, caused by any product; or

(C) any law relating to a civil action for loss or damage, cleanup costs, civil penalties or injunctive relief, if the loss or damage for which a remedy is sought was caused by the release into the environment, or the threat of release into the environment, of a toxic substance or waste, hazardous substance or material, hazardous waste or other contaminant or pollutant.

(2) As used in this subsection—

(A) "contaminant or pollutant" includes (i) anything defined or designated as a contaminant or pollutant under any Federal or State law, and (ii) any element, substance, compound, mixture or organism which, after release into the environment and upon exposure, ingestion, inhalation, impact, attachment or assimilation into any organism, either directly from the environment or indirectly by ingestion through food chains, will or may reasonably be anticipated to cause death, disease, injury, behavioral abnormalities, cancer, genetic mutation, physiological malfunctions (including malfunctions in reproduction) or physical deformations, in such organisms or their offspring;

(B) "environment" has the meaning given to such term in section 101(8) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9601(8));

(C) "hazardous substance" has the meaning given to such term in section 101(14) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9601(14));

(D) "hazardous waste" has the meaning given to such term in section 101(29) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9601(29));

(E) "law" means any law or authority, whether statutory or common; and

(F) "release" has the meaning given to such term in section 101(22) of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9601(22), and, in addition, the term includes any depositing or placing into the environment.

(d) Nothing in this Act is intended to affect in any way application of any rule of law regarding whether a claimant must identify the manufacturer of the product that caused the claimant's harm.

(e) The district courts of the United States shall not have jurisdiction over any civil action arising under this Act, based on sections 1331 or 1337 of title 28, United States Code.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MANUFACTURERS

SEC. 4. In any product liability action, a manufacturer is liable to a claimant if—

(1) the claimant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that—

(A) the product was unreasonably dangerous in construction or manufacture, as defined in section 5(a);

(B) the product was unreasonably dangerous in design or formulation, as defined in section 5(b);

(C) the product was unreasonably dangerous because the manufacturer failed to provide adequate warnings or instructions about a danger connected with the product or about the proper use of the product, as defined in section 6; or

(D) the product was unreasonably dangerous because the product did not conform to an express warranty made by the manufacturer with respect to the product, as defined in section 7; and

(2) the claimant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that the unreasonably dangerous aspect of the product was a proximate cause of the harm complained of by the claimant.

PRODUCT CONSTRUCTION AND DESIGN

SEC. 5. (a) A product is unreasonably dangerous in construction or manufacture if, when the product left the control of the manufacturer, it deviated in a material way—

(1) from the design specifications, formula, or performance standards of the manufacturer; or

(2) from otherwise identical units manufactured to the same manufacturing specification or formula.

(b)(1) A product is unreasonably dangerous in design or formulation if, at the relevant point in time—

(A) the manufacturer knew or, through the exercise of reasonable prudence, should have known about the danger which allegedly caused the claimant's harm; and

(B) a reasonably prudent person in the same or similar circumstances would not have manufactured the product or used the design or formulation that the manufacturer used.

(2) A product is not unreasonably dangerous in design or formulation if the manufacturer proves by a preponderance of the evidence that, at the relevant point in time—

(A) a means to eliminate the danger that caused the harm was not within practical technological feasibility, and the benefits and usefulness of the product to the public outweighed the likelihood and probable seriousness of the harm;

(B) the harm was caused by an unavoidably dangerous product; or

(C) the harm was caused by an unsafe aspect of a product which was an inherent characteristic of the product and which would be recognized by the ordinary person who uses or consumes the product with the ordinary knowledge common to the community.

(3) As used in paragraph (2)(B), "an unavoidably dangerous product" means a product that, at the relevant point in time—

(A) is useful and desirable to the public;

(B) has a known but reasonable risk which, in light of the state of scientific and technical knowledge at that time, can not be made safe without impairing the effectiveness of the product's intended and ordinary use; and

(C) would have been made by a reasonable manufacturer using that particular design or formulation.

(4) As used in this subsection, "relevant point in time" means the earlier of the time of manufacture of a product or certification of an aircraft or its parts or accessories by the Federal Aviation Administration.

PRODUCT WARNINGS OR INSTRUCTIONS

SEC. 6. (a) A product is unreasonably dangerous because of the failure of the manufacturer to provide warnings or instructions about a danger connected with the product or about the proper use of the product if—

(1) adequate warnings or instructions were not provided, under subsection (b); or

(2) adequate post-manufacture warnings or instructions were not provided, under subsection (c).

(b) A product is unreasonably dangerous for lack of adequate warnings or instructions if, at the time the product left the control of the manufacturer—

(1) the manufacturer knew or, through the exercise of reasonable prudence, should have known about the danger which allegedly caused the claimant's harm;

(2) the manufacturer failed to provide the warnings or instructions that a reasonably prudent person in the same or similar circumstances would have provided with respect to the danger which caused the harm alleged by the claimant, given the likelihood that the product would cause harm of the type alleged by the claimant and given the seriousness of that harm; and

(3) those warnings or instructions, if provided, would have led a product user in the course of reasonably anticipated conduct either to decline to use the product or to use it in a manner so as to avoid harm of the type alleged by the claimant.

(c)(1) A product is unreasonably dangerous for lack of post-manufacture warings or instructions if, after the product left the control of the manufacturer—

(A) the manufacturer knew or, through the exercise of reasonable prudence, should have known about the danger which allegedly caused the claimant's harm; and

(B) adequate post-manufacture warnings or instructions would have been provided by a reasonably prudent person in the same or similar circumstances, given the likelihood that the product would cause harm of the type alleged by the claimant and given the seriousness of that harm.

(2) A product is not unreasonably dangerous under this subsection if the manufacturer made reasonable efforts to provide adequate post-manufacture warnings or instructions to a product user or to another person, in accordance with subsection (d).

(d) Where warnings or instructions are required under subsection (b) or (c), such warnings and instructions shall be given to the product user, unless—

(1) in light of the practical and economic difficulties of giving the warnings or instructions directly to the product user, the likelihood that the product would cause harm of the type alleged by the claimant, and the probable seriousness of that harm, a reasonably prudent person would have given such warnings or instructions to a third person, including an employer, who could be expected to take action to avoid the product user's harm or to assure that the risk of harm is explained to the product user; or

(2) the product is one which may be legally used only by or under the supervision of a using or supervising expert, in which case the manufacturer shall act with reasonable prudence to warn or instruct the expert.

(e) A product is not unreasonably dangerous for lack of warnings regarding—

(1) dangers that are obvious;

(2) the consequences of product misuse, as defined in section 9(c); or

(3) the consequences of product alterations or modifications, as defined in section 9(d).

As used in paragraph (1) of this subsection, "dangers that are obvious" are those dangers, including the magnitude of the danger, of which a product user in the course of reasonably anticipated conduct or a person identified in subsection (d), if applicable, would have been aware without a warning and dangers, including the magnitude of the danger, which were a matter of common knowledge to persons in the same or similar position as the claimant.

PRODUCT EXPRESS WARRANTY

SEC. 7. (a) A product is unreasonably dangerous because it did not conform to an express warranty made by the manufacturer if—

(1) the product failed to conform to such warranty; and

(2) the failure of the product to conform to such warranty caused the claimant's harm.

(b) A product may be unreasonably dangerous for failure to conform to an express warranty although the manufacturer did not engage in negligent or fraudulent conduct in making the express warranty.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PRODUCT SELLERS

SEC. 8. (a) In any product liability action, a product seller other than a manufacturer is liable to a claimant, if the claimant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that—

(1)(A) the individual product unit which allegedly caused the harm complained of was sold by the defendant;

(B) the product seller failed to exercise reasonable prudence with respect to the product; and

(C) such failure to exercise reasonable prudence was a proximate cause of the claimant's harm; or

(2)(A) the product seller made an express warranty, independent of any express warranty made by a manufacturer as to the same product;

(B) the product failed to conform to such warranty; and

(C) the failure of the product to conform to such warranty caused the claimant's harm.

(b)(1) In determining whether a product seller is subject to liability under subsection (a)(1), the trier of fact may consider the effect of the conduct of the seller with respect to the construction, inspection, or condition of the product, and any failure of the seller to transmit adequate warnings or instructions about the dangers and proper use of the product.

(2) A product seller shall not be liable under this Act where there was no reasonable opportunity to inspect the product in a manner which would or should, in the exercise of reasonable care, have revealed the aspect of the product which allegedly rendered it unreasonably dangerous.

(c) A product seller shall be treated as the manufacturer of a product and shall be liable for harm to the claimant caused by a product as if it were the manufacturer of the product if—

(1) the manufacturer is not subject to service of process under the laws of the State in which the action is brought; or

(2) the court determines that the claimant would be unable to enforce a judgment against the manufacturer.

DETERMINATION OF RESPONSIBILITY IN A PRODUCT LIABILITY ACTION

SEC. 9. (a) All claims under this Act shall be governed by the principles of comparative responsibility. Comparative responsibility attributed to the claimant's conduct shall not bar recovery in a product liability action, but shall reduce any damages awarded to the claimant in an amount proportionate to the responsibility of the claimant.

(b)(1) In any product liability action, the court, unless otherwise agreed by all parties, shall instruct the jury to answer special interrogatories (or, if there is no jury, the court shall make findings) indicating—

(A) the total amount of damages to each claimant for that claimant's harm; and

(B) the percentage of total responsibility for each claimant's harm attributable to each claimant, each defendant, each third-party defendant, and to any other cause or person who is not a party to the action (other than the claimant's employer or coemployee, where the provisions of section 10 apply).

(2) In making the determinations specified in paragraph (1)(B), evidence of conduct defined in subsections (c), (d), (e), and (f) shall be considered. For purposes of this subsection, the court may determine that two or more persons are to be treated as a single party.

(3) The percentage attributable under paragraph (1)(B) to each defendant or each third-party defendant shall be determined by—

(A) subtracting the percentage of responsibility attributable to the claimant and to any other cause or person who is not a party to the action (other than the claimant's employer or coemployee, where the provisions of section 10 apply) from 100 percent; and

(B) allocating the percentage which is the result of the subtraction under subparagraph (A) among the defendants and third-party defendants according to their individual responsibility for the claimant's harm.

(c) Evidence that misuse of a product by any person other than the claimant's employer or coemployee (where the provisions of section 10 apply) has caused all or a portion of the claimant's harm shall be considered in determining the percentage of total responsibility for the claimant's harm allocable under subsection (b). Misuse shall be considered to occur when a product is used for a purpose or in a manner which is not consistent with the reasonable anticipated conduct of users, which may include use for a purpose or in a manner which is not consistent with adequate warnings or instructions available to the user or failure of a person who would reasonably be expected to train another person or otherwise provide for the safe use of the product and who does not train or provide for the safe use of the product.

(d)(1) Evidence that an alteration or modification of the product by any person other than the claimant's employer or coemployee (where the provisions of section 10 apply) has caused all or a portion of the claimant's harm shall be considered in determining the percentage of total responsibility for the claimant's harm allocable under subsection (b). Alteration or modification shall be considered to occur when a product is changed in a manner which is not consistent with the reasonably anticipated conduct of users, which may include a change in the product design or formulation, or a change in or removal of warnings, instructions, or safety devices that accompanied the product.

(2) Alteration or modification shall not be considered to occur if—

(A) ordinary wear and tear of a product has occurred;

(B) the alteration or modification was in accordance with instructions or specifications of the manufacturer or product seller; or

(C) the alteration or modification was made with the express consent of the manufacturer or product seller.

(e) Evidence that the conduct of the claimant involving negligence, contributory negligence, or assumption of risk has caused all or a portion of the claimant's harm shall be considered in determining the percentage of total responsibility for the claimant's harm allocable under subsection (b). Conduct of the claimant involving negligence, contributory negligence, or assumption of risk shall be considered to occur—

(1) when the claimant, while using the product, was injured by a defective condition of which he was not aware and which would have been apparent, without inspection, to a reasonably prudent person; or

(2) when the claimant knew about the product's defective condition, understood that there was a risk of harm and the potential severity of that harm, and voluntarily used the product or voluntarily assumed the risk of harm from the product.

(f) Evidence of product misuse, alteration, or modification, as defined in subsections (c) and (d), by the claimant's employer or coemployee (where the provisions of section 10 apply) or other acts or omissions by the claimant's employer or coemployee shall be considered on the issue of whether the employer's or coemployee's misuse, alteration, modification, or other act or omission was a superseding cause of the claimant's harm.

(g) The court shall—

(1) unless section 10(a) requires a different result, enter judgment against each defendant or third-party defendant determined to be liable in accordance with its individual percentage of responsibility, as determined under subsection (b), or, where a defendant or third-party defendant is jointly and severally liable with another person, enter judgment against the defendant or third-party defendant on the basis of joint and several liability; and

(2) state in the judgment each party's percentage of responsibility for the claimant's harm.

Joint and several liability and contribution among joint tortfeasors shall be determined in accordance with applicable State law, except that the basis for contribution shall be each joint tortfeasor's percentage of responsibility for the claimant's harm.

(h) Upon motion made by a joint tortfeasor not later than 1 year after judgment is entered, the court shall determine whether all or part of the amount for which another joint tortfeasor is responsible is uncollectible from contribution from that joint tortfeasor, and shall reallocate any uncollectible amount among the other joint tortfeasors, according to their comparative percentages of responsibility. The joint tortfeasor whose responsibility is reallocated is nonetheless subject to contribution and to any continuing liability to the claimant.

EFFECT OF WORKERS' COMPENSATION BENEFITS

SEC. 10. (a) In any product liability action in which damages are sought for harm for which the person injured is or would have been entitled to receive compensation under any State or Federal workers' compensation law, the judgment entered against each defendant and third-party defendant found liable shall be determined by applying the defendant's percentage of responsibility, as determined under section 9(b), to the amount remaining after the claimant's total damages, as determined under section 9(b)(1)(A), are reduced by the sum of the amount paid as workers' compensation benefits for that harm and the present value of all workers' compensation benefits to which the employee is or would be entitled for the harm. Where a defendant or third-party defendant is jointly and severally liable with another person, the judgment against the defendant or third-party defendant shall be entered on the basis of joint and several liability, and the court shall state in the judgment each party's percentage of responsibility for the claimant's harm. The determination of workers' compensation benefits by the trier of fact in a product liability action shall have no binding effect on and shall not be used as evidence in any other proceeding.

(b) Unless the manufacturer or product seller has expressly agreed to indemnify or hold an employer harmless for harm to an employee caused by a product neither the employer nor the workers' compensation insurance carrier of the employer shall have a right of subrogation, contribution, or implied indemnity against the manufacturer or product seller or a lien against the claimant's recovery from the manufacturer or product seller if the harm is one for which a product liability action may be brought under this Act.

(c) In any product liability action in which damages are sought for harm for which the person injured is or would have been entitled to receive compensation under any State or Federal workers' compensation law, no third-party tortfeasor may maintain any action for implied indemnity or contribution against the employer or any coemployee of the person who was injured.

(d) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect any State or Federal workers' compensation law provision which prohibits a person who is or would have been entitled to receive compensation under any such law, or any other person whose claim is or would have been derivative from such a claim, from recovering in any action other than a workers' compensation claim against a present or former employer or workers' compensation insurer of the employer or any coemployee for harm caused by a product. Such other actions shall be prohibited, except that nothing in this Act shall be construed to affect any State or Federal workers' compensation law which permits recovery based on a claim of an intentional tort by the employer or coemployee where the claimant's harm was caused by such an intentional tort.

(e) As used in this section, "employer" does not include a State, where the State is acting in its capacity as an employer.

(f) Without regard to when the harm giving rise to the claim occurred, the provisions of this section do not apply to any person subject to or covered by the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act (33 U.S.C. 901 et seq.), as amended.

TIME LIMITATION ON LIABILITY

SEC. 11. (a)(1) If any product is a capital good, no claim alleging unsafe design or formulation as provided in section 5(b), or failure to give adequate warnings or instructions as provided in section 6(a), may be brought for harm caused by such a product more than 25 years from the date of delivery of the product to its first purchaser or lessee who was not engaged in the business of selling or leasing the product or using the product as a component in the manufacture of another product.

(2) As used in this subsection, "capital good" means any product, other than a motor vehicle, or a vessel, aircraft, or railroad used primarily to transport passengers, or any component of any such product, if it is also of a character subject to allowance for depreciation under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as amended, and was—

(A) used in a trade or business;

(B) held for the production of income; or

(C) sold, leased, or donated to a governmental or private entity for the production of goods, for training, for demonstration, or other similar purposes.

(b) Subsection (a) is not applicable if—

(1) the manufacturer or product seller intentionally misrepresented facts about the product or fraudulently concealed information about the product, and that conduct was a cause of the claimant's harm;

(2) the harm of the claimant was caused by the cumulative effect of prolonged exposure to a defective product; or

(3) the harm, caused within the period referred to in subsection (a), did not manifest itself until after the expiration of that period.

(c) Nothing in subsection (a) shall affect the right of any person who is subject to liability for harm under this Act to seek and obtain contribution or indemnity from any other person who is responsible for that harm.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES

SEC. 12. (a)(1) Punitive damages may be awarded to any claimant who establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the harm suffered was the result of the reckless disregard of the manufacturer or product seller for the safety of product users, consumers, or persons who might be harmed by the product. Except as provided in subsection (e), punitive damages may not be awarded in the absence of a compensatory award.

(2) As used in this subsection, "reckless disregard" means conduct manifesting a conscious, flagrant indifference to the safety of those persons who might be harmed by a product. A negligent choice among alternative product designs or warnings, when made in the ordinary course of business, does not by itself constitute "reckless disregard".

(b) The trier of fact, in determining under subsection a) whether punitive damages should be awarded, shall consider—

(1) the manufacturer's or product seller's awareness of the likelihood that serious harm would arise from the sale or manufacture of a product;

(2) the conduct of the manufacturer or product seller upon discovery that the product caused harm or was related to harm caused to users or others, including whether upon confirmation of the problem the manufacturer or product seller took appropriate steps to reduce the risk of harm;

(3) the duration of the conduct and any concealment of it by the manufacturer or product seller; and

(4) whether the harm suffered by the claimant was partly the result of the claimant's own negligent conduct.

(c) If the trier of fact determines under subsection (a) that punitive damages should be awarded to a claimant, the court shall determine the amount of those damages. In making that determination, the court shall consider—

(1) all relevant evidence relating to the factors set forth in subsection (b);

(2) the profitability of the conduct to the manufacturer or product seller; and

(3) the total effect of other punishment imposed upon the manufacturer or product seller as a result of the misconduct, including punitive damage awards to persons similarly situated to the claimant and the severity of other penalties to which the manufacturer or product seller has been or may be subjected.

(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 13, a manufacturer or product seller may introduce relevant evidence of post-manufacturing improvements in defense of punitive damages.

(e) In any action in which the alleged harm to the claimant is death and the applicable State law provides, or has been construed to provide, for damages only punitive in nature, a defendant is liable for any such damages regardless of whether a claim is asserted under this section, and the recovery of any such damages shall not bar a claim under this section.

SUBSEQUENT REMEDIAL MEASURES

SEC. 13. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), evidence of any measure taken after an event, which if taken previously would have made the event less likely to occur, is not admissible.

(b) This section does not require the exclusion of evidence of a subsequent measure in an action alleging a product was unreasonably dangerous in design or formulation, if offered to impeach a witness for the manufacturer or product seller who has expressly denied the feasibility of such a measure.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

SEC. 14. Any civil action brought under this Act shall be barred unless the complaint is filed within 2 years of the time the claimant discovered or, in the exercise of reasonable prudence, should have discovered the harm and its cause, except that any such action of a person under legal disability may be commenced within 2 years after the disability ceases. If the commencement of such an action is stayed or enjoined, the running of the statute of limitations under this section shall be suspended for the period of the stay or injunction.

SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

SEC. 15. If any provision of this Act or the application of it to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of the provision to any other person or circumstance shall not be affected by that invalidation.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 16. (a) This Act shall be effective 60 days after the date of its enactment, and shall apply to all product liability actions commenced on or after that date, including any action in which the harm or the conduct which caused the harm occurred before the effective date.

(b) If any provision of this Act would shorten the period during which a manufacturer would otherwise be exposed to liability, the claimant may, notwithstanding the otherwise applicable time period, bring any such action within 1 year after the effective date of this Act.

PRODUCT LIABILITY REVIEW PANEL

SEC. 17. (a) The Judicial Conference of the United States shall establish a Product Liability Review Panel (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Panel") to conduct the studies required by this section. The Panel shall consist of three individuals selected on the basis of their expertise regarding civil actions and recovery for loss or damage caused by a product.

(b) The Panel shall conduct a study of the need for Federal legislation providing appropriate and predictable benefits, compensation or damages, through efficient and expeditious means, to any claimant who, through no fault of the claimant, is harmed by a product and who is unable to recover in any civil action based on liability in tort either because—

(1) the manufacturer of the product did not know and could not in the exercise of reasonable prudence have known at the relevant point in time (as defined in section 5(b)(4) about the danger that caused the harm; or

(2) the product that caused the harm was unreasonably dangerous (as defined in this Act), but the manufacturer could not be identified.

The result of the study required by this section shall be submitted to the Congress within 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) The Panel shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility or availability, or both, of providing compensation without regard to fault to claimants for any loss or damage caused by a product. The study shall include an assessment of current legislative or other actions regarding that compensation undertaken by Federal and State governments. The results of the study shall be submitted to the Congress within 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and shall contain recommendations for future legislative or other actions to provide compensation without regard to fault to claimants for any loss or damage caused by a product.

(d)(1) The Panel shall conduct an ongoing review of the adequacy of existing common law and statutory remedies in providing recovery for any loss or damage caused by a product.

(2) As part of the review required by this subsection, the Panel shall evaluate—

(A) the nature, adequacy, and availability of remedies and compensation under present law in providing recovery for any loss or damage caused by a product;

(B) the nature and scope of substantive, procedural and evidentiary barriers to that recovery, including statutes of limitation and statutes of repose, and the role of those barriers in the legal system; and

(C) the scope of liability for loss or damage caused by a product under present law and the consequences, including insurability, of any changes in that liability.

(3) The Panel shall submit the results of the review required by this subsection at such times as it considers appropriate, but in no event less often than January 15 of each year in which occurs the first session of a Congress.

(e) A member of the Panel who is not an officer or employee of the Federal Government shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule pursuant to section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, for each day (including traveltime) during which the member is engaged in the actual performance of the duties of the Panel.

(f) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section such sums as may be necessary is fiscal year 1985. Such sums shall remain available until expended.

REVIEWABILITY

SEC. 18. It is the intent of the Congress that, in other than exceptional cases, the Supreme Court of the United States shall not review issues relating solely to the sufficiency of the evidence in cases arising under this Act which have been finally decided by the highest court of any State.

SECTION-BY-SECTION—PRODUCT LIABILITY ACT

SEC. 1. Short Title.—This section of the bill provides that the legislation may be cited as the Product Liability Act.

SEC. 2. Definitions.—Several terms used in the legislation are defined in this section. Most importantly, (1) a "manufacturer" includes not only a person engaged in a business to produce, make, or construct a product, but also a product seller which either holds itself out as a manufacturer or acts as a manufacturer with respect to a given product; (2) a "product seller" is any person, leasing, installing or packaging a product or otherwise placing it in commerce, but this term excludes sellers of real property, professionals, and certain financial entities; and (3) "reasonably anticipated conduct" is the conduct expected, ordinary and familiar of the class of persons likely to use or be exposed to the product.

SEC. 3. Preemption of Other Laws.—This section provides that state law regarding recovery for loss or damage caused by a product is superseded to the extent the Act provides a rule of law on an issue, without regard to state law theories of strict liability in tort, negligence, breach of warranty, failure to warn or instruct, or misrepresentation, which previously governed such an action. Civil actions for harm to a product itself or for commercial loss are not product liability actions. Purely economic harms have traditionally been a matter of commercial law, not tort law. The Act does not expand the jurisdiction of the federal courts, nor does it preempt other federal laws (except FECA) or state environmental laws.

SEC. 4. Responsibility of Manufacturers.—This section provides that in any product liability action, a manufacturer is liable if the claimant establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that (1) the product is unreasonably dangerous in construction, in design, because of a failure to provide adequate warnings or instructions, or because the product did not conform to an express warranty, and (2) the unreasonably dangerous aspect of the product was a proximate cause of the harm complained of by the claimant.

SEC. 5. Product Design and Construction.—A product is unreasonably dangerous in construction or manufacture if it deviated from the manufacturer's design specification or formula. A manufacturer is, then, strictly liable for mismanufactured products if the deviation in the product caused the claimant's harm.

A product is unreasonably dangerous in design or formulation if (1) the manufacturer knew or, through the exercise of reasonable prudence, should have known about the danger which caused the claimant's harm, and (2) a reasonably prudent person would not have made the product or used the design that the manufacturer used. A product is not unreasonably dangerous in design if (1) a means to eliminate the danger was not within practical technological feasibility and the benefits and usefulness of the product to the public outweighed the likelihood and probable seriousness of the harm; (2) the harm was caused by an unavoidably dangerous aspect of the product (e.g., the risks of rabies vaccine injections are unavoidable because they cannot be eliminated without impairing the vaccine's benefits); or (3) the harm was caused by an unsafe aspect of a product that was inherent in the product (e.g., the sharp edge of a knife).

SEC. 6. Product Warnings or Instructions.—A product is unreasonably dangerous because of a failure to provide adequate warnings or instructions if (1) the manufacturer knew or, through the exercise of reasonable prudence, should have known of the existence of the danger which caused the claimant's harm; (2) the manufacturer failed to provide warnings that a reasonably prudent person would have provided; and (3) the warnings or instructions would have prevented harm to a product user in the course of reasonably anticipated conduct. In addition, the manufacturer may be responsible for failure to warn if, after the product was made, the manufacturer discovered or should have discovered the danger which caused the claimant's harm and failed to provide post-manufacture warnings to the claimant as a reasonably prudent person would have done.

Warnings or instructions must be given to a product user unless they were provided to certain classes of persons who could be expected to pass the warning on to the users. A manufacturer is not liable for failure to warn about obvious dangers, consequences of misuse, alteration or modification.

SEC. 7. Product Failure to Conform to Express Warranty.—A manufacturer is strictly liable for breach of express product warranties where the breach of the warranty caused the claimant's harm.

SEC. 8. Responsibility of Product Sellers.—This section provides that a product seller is liable if, by a preponderance of the evidence, the seller's own lack of reasonable care in handling the product or the seller's own breach of an express product warranty was a proximate cause of claimant's harm. In such situations, the seller is responsible only for harms it causes through its own fault. Where, however, the manufacturer is not subject to service of process or is determined to be judgment-proof, the seller may be responsible for harms attributable to the manufacturer. This section will reduce litigation costs by taking the seller out of suits in which he is not responsible. At the same time, it permits recovery by the claimant if the responsible manufacturer cannot be served.

SEC. 9. Determination of Responsibility in a Product Liability Action.—Under this section, the claimant's own conduct, contributory negligence, or assumption of risk does not bar recovery, but reduces compensatory damages awarded to the claimant by an amount proportionate to the claimant's responsibility. The section provides that manufacturers and product sellers shall be responsible for their own conduct. This comports with the purpose of the Act which is to place incentives for risk prevention on those best able to implement that goal.

In apportioning responsibility among those who caused the harm, evidence that a misuse or alteration of a product caused the claimant's harm is relevant. Product misuse or alteration by another will not reduce the manufacturer's or seller's responsibility if it was reasonably anticipated conduct.

This section does not alter rules of joint and several liability or rules of contribution among joint tortfeasors, except that contribution shall be based on each joint tortfeasor's percentage or responsibility for the harm.

SEC. 10. Effect of Workers' Compensation Benefits.—Under current workers' compensation statutes, the employer pays workers' compensation benefits in every workplace injury case. This section does not affect workers' compensation statutes, but provides that the workers' compensation system and the tort system are kept separate. Thus, it provides that, in accord with the principle of workers' compensation, the employer is immune from tort liability and shall not transfer responsibility for workers' compensation benefits. Damages in a product liability action would be reduced by the amount paid to the claimant under any state or federal worker compensation law. This reduction does not affect the amount the claimant receives today, but takes the place of the employer's subrogation lien, unless the manufacturer or product seller had expressly agreed to indemnify an employer.

SEC. 11. Time Limitation on Liability.—If a product is a capital good, no claim alleging unsafe design or failure to warn in a product liability action may be brought for harm caused by the product more than 25 years after delivery to the first buyer or lessee not engaged in the business of selling or leasing the product. Capital good is defined as a product used in trade or business or held for the production of income.

These limitations on liability are not applicable if (1) the manufacturer or product seller intentionally misrepresented or fraudulently concealed information about the product; (2) the claimant's harm was caused by the cumulative effect of prolonged exposure to the product; or (3) the harm did not manifest itself until after the time limitation. Thus, claims for certain harms, such as harms from drugs, which do not manifest themselves until many years after product use, would not be barred by this section.

SEC. 12. Punitive Damages.—Punitive damages may be assessed if the claimant proves liability for compensatory damages and he establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the harm suffered was the result of the reckless disregard of the manufacturer or product seller for the safety of product users.

Reckless disregard means conduct manifesting a conscious, flagrant, indifference to the safety of persons who might be harmed by a product.

Following a determination by the trier of fact that punitive damages should be assessed, the judge determines the amount of damages.

SEC. 13. Subsequent Remedial Measures.—Evidence of corrective measures taken by a manufacturer or product seller after a harm has occurred would not be admissible in court to prove liability. This preserves this incentive for manufacturers and product sellers to improve their products.

SEC. 14. Statute of Limitations.—This section provides a two-year statute of limitations for all product liability actions under which the two-year time period does not begin to run until the claimant discovers or should have discovered both his harm and its cause. This "discovery rule" is more favorable to claimants than the "time of injury rule" followed by many states.

SEC. 15. Separability Clause.—A determination that a provision of the Act is invalid or that the application of it to any person or circumstance is invalid will not affect the remainder of the Act.

SEC. 16. Effective Date.—This Act will apply to all actions commenced on or after the effective date, including any action which harm or the conduct which caused the harm occurred before the effective date.

SEC. 17. Product Liability Review Panel.—Under this provision, the Judical Conference is to appoint a three-member panel of legal experts to conduct a continuous study of the tort system and to suggest changes to the Congress, including ways to compensate persons who are injured by defective products but who are unable to prove negligence or to identify the manufacturer.

SEC. 18. Reviewability.—This section states Congress' intent that the United States Supreme Court shall not review issues relating solely to the sufficiency of evidence.

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 101. A bill to provide equitable treatment for certain fresh vegetables produced in the United States; to the Committee on Finance.

FRESH VEGETABLE AND POTATO TRADE ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Fresh Vegetable and Potato Trade Act. This legislation, which is identical to a bill I sponsored in the 98th Congress, is of vital importance to our Nation, as well as to our vegetable producers, for farmers comprise the economic backbone of our country.

We still face a very real threat from across our nothern border. The increased importation of perishable produce from Canada has reached staggering proportions. Growers in the northern States have been hard hit by competition from farmers who are subsidized by the Canadian Federal and Provincial treasuries. The rise in Canadian potato imports, for instance, was 300 percent over the last 3 years. These imports are depressing prices at the market and forcing many American farmers out of business. And while our Government has taken action to protect the specialty steel makers and the automobile industry, no similar action seems forthcoming to help our farmers.

Vegetable farmers, in particular, often compete with subsidized produce from foreign countries and are, therefore, frequently faced with a flooded market. As a solution to this problem, this legislation would establish a commodity surtax designed to be imposed only for limited periods, and only when agricultural imports are injuring a specific commodity for a certain period of time.

Economic injury often results when subsidized commodities are imported during periods of heavy U.S. production. Since the declared value of a shipment at the point of entry into the United States often is not accurate, it is necessary to provide, periodically, a temporary surtax on commodities when an increased volume of imports is ruled by the Agriculture Department to have resulted in depressed domestic market prices.

My legislation requires the Agriculture Department to monitor various commodities, including cabbages, carrots, celery, lettuce, red and yellow onions, potatoes, and radishes. However, any fresh vegetable may be added to this list by petitioning the Secretary and securing a declaration that economic injury is being caused or threatened by subsidized imports.

The Agriculture Department will determine, by examining volume and prices, the extent of the economic tax impact on our domestic growers. Should injury be determined for a particular commodity, a surtax system would be put into effect.

There will be times, Mr. President, when such a surtax will not be necessary. At other times, however, a surtax can provide the difference that will allow our farmers to compete on a more equal footing than is now possible.

The vegetable industry has been suffering severely. The plight of our northeastern farmers who must compete with subsidized produce from a foreign country must not be overlooked. While our farmers receive no governmental assistance, Canadian produce is subsidized in several ways, including low-interest loans to farmers, substantial transportation subsidies, stabilization payments for crop production, and an export promotion program designed to garner a greater share of the produce market in the Northeast.

I believe that this agricultural surtax system is a fair method of ensuring that our agricultural economy is eroded no further by imported vegetables and potatoes. Though we cannot control nature and eliminate droughts, floods, and other natural disasters, we can rectify the problem of falling prices caused by the deliberate subsidization by competing nations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my legislation be printed in the RECORD in its entirety at the conclusion of my remarks.

Thank you, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 101

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Fresh V. etable and Potato Trade Act."

SEC. 2. As used in this Act:

(1) The term "article" means a specific vegetable category commodity entered into trade in a terminal market.

(2) The term "benchmark price" means, with respect to articles in a vegetable category, a price, computed for each month within the applicable marketing season, that equals—

(A) 85 per centum of the average monthly market price for domestic and imported articles in that category for the same month during the thirty-six-month period immediately preceding the month for which such computation is made; or

(B) if the Secretary considers that the benchmark price computed under subparagraph (A) is abnormally high or low because of harvest variations, 90 per centum of the average monthly market price for domestic and imported articles in that category for the same month during the sixty-month period immediately preceding the month for which such computation is made.

(3) The term "imported articles" means articles that have been entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, within the customs territory of the United States.

(4) The term "market price" means the sale price at which imported articles in a vegetable category are bought and sold in the course of trade at the three terminal markets having the heaviest volume of imports of such articles. The market price shall be based on such quantity of measure as the Secretary deems appropriate for purposes of carrying out the Act.

(5) The term "marketing season" means the marketing season in the United States for vegetables, that are produced in the United States, of a kind like those in a vegetable category, as determined by the Secretary.

(6) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(7) The term "terminal market" means a marketing area in the United States at which major shipments of imported articles in a vegetable category are introduced into domestic commerce.

(8) The term "vegetable category" means each of the following classifications, identified by reference to the appropriate item numbers of the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202), of vegetables, if fresh:

(A) Cabbages provided for in item 135.30.

(B) Carrots provided for in items 135.41 and 135.42.

(C) Celery provided for in items 135.60 and 135.61.

(D) Lettuce provided for in item 136.60 and 136.61.

(E) Red onions and yellow onions, of the type produced for storage holdings, provided for in item 136.93.

(F) Potatoes provided for in items 137.25, 137.26, 137.28, and 137.29.

(G) Radishes provided for in item 137.40.

The Secretary, for the purposes of this Act, may add for the duration of a marketing season any classification of fresh vegetable provided for in such Schedules as a vegetable category if a United States producer of vegetables of that kind petitions the Secretary for such addition and the Secretary concludes that economic injury is being caused or threatened to United States producers of articles in that category after applying the criteria in section 3(a) and (b)(2).

SEC. 3. (a) During each week of the marketing season, the Secretary shall monitor the market prices paid for articles in each vegetable category. If the Secretary finds, on the basis of such monitoring, that the average market price paid for articles in any vegetable category during a week does not equal 90 per centum of the average price for such category for such week in the immediately preceding three years, the Secretary shall, within five working days, publish notice thereof in the Federal Register designating that vegetable category as a depressed vegetable category.

(b) The Secretary shall, with respect to articles in each vegetable category designated as a depressed vegetable category under subsection (a)—

(1) monitor on a daily basis the market prices paid for articles in such category; and

(2) monitor on a weekly basis the volume of imported articles in such category that is sold in commerce at terminal markets.

(c) If the Secretary determines, on the basis of the monitoring required under subsection (b) regarding a vegetable category that is depressed, that—

(1) the average market price for articles in that category for any week in the marketing season was below the benchmark price for such category; and

(2) the volume of imported articles in that category that was sold in commerce at terminal markets during such week exceeds by 5 per centum or more the volume of imported articles in that category sold at terminal markets during the equivalent seven-day period in calendar year 1978;

the imported articles in that vegetable category shall be presumed to be causing, or threatening to cause, economic injury to United States producers of like vegetables.

SEC. 4. (a)(1) Within two working days after making a determination under section 3(c) regarding imported articles in a vegetable category, the Secretary, by publication of notice thereof in the Federal Register, shall (A) issue notice of such determination, and (B) establish a surtax period for such category which shall be the one hundred and eighty-day period commencing on the next Thursday which occurs not less than five days after the date on which such determination was made. The Secretary shall at the time of such publication notify the exporting countries of articles in such category of such establishment.

(2) The Secretary may extend a surtax period established under paragraph (1) by an additional ninety days if he determines that the conditions which led to the establishment of the initial one hundred and eighty-day surtax period are still in effect at the close of the initial period.

(b)(1) There is imposed on all articles in a vegetable category to which a determination under section 3(c) applies that are entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, in the customs territory of the United States during each week within the surtax period a surtax for that week, the amount of which shall be computed on a weekly basis in accordance with subsection (c) by the Secretary on the basis of the applicable market prices.

(2) A surtax imposed under this Act shall be treated for all purposes of the customs laws as a duty which is in addition to any other duty imposed on the entry or withdrawal from warehouse of articles in the vegetable category concerned.

(c)(1) For purposes of this section—

(A) The term "computation period" means the seven-day period that ends on a Wednesday in the two weeks before the week in which a surtax week begins.

(B) The term "surtax week" means each seven-day period, beginning on a Thursday, that is within a surtax period established under subsection (a).

(2) The surtax imposed under subsection (b) for each surtax week on imported articles within a vegetable category shall be determined on the basis of the relationship between the average daily market price paid during the applicable computation period for articles in such category, and the applicable benchmark price for such article, as follows:

(A) If there is no difference between such market price and benchmark price—

(i) no surtax shall apply during the surtax week if no surtax is in effect for the immediately preceding surtax week; or

(ii) the surtax for the surtax week shall be the same as the surtax, if any, in effect for the immediately preceding surtax week.

(B) If such market price is below the benchmark price, the surtax for the surtax week shall be—

(i) an amount equal to the difference between such prices, if there is no surtax in effect for the immediately preceding surtax week, or

(ii) an amount equal to such difference plus the amount of any surtax in effect for the immediately preceding surtax week.

(C) If such market price exceeds such benchmark price—

(i) no surtax shall apply during the surtax week if no surtax is in effect for the immediately preceding surtax week, or

(ii) the surtax for the surtax week shall be the amount of the surtax in effect for the immediately preceding surtax week reduced by the amount of such excess (but not below zero).

(3) For purposes of determining under paragraph (2) the surtax to be imposed during the first surtax week in any surtax period, a surtax shall be determined under paragraph (2)(B) on the basis of the findings of the Secretary under section 3(c)(1) on the imported articles concerned and such surtax shall be treated as being in effect during the week before such first surtax week.

(d) The Secretary shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the surtax, or absence thereof, as determined under subsection (c) for each surtax week within the surtax period established for a vegetable category. The Secretary of the Treasury shall take such action as may be necessary or appropriate to levy and collect any such surtax so certified, including the requirement of additional bond to secure payment of a surtax.

SEC. 5. The Secretary and the Secretary of the Treasury shall each issue such regulations as may be necessary and appropriate to carry out this Act.

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. LONG):

S. 102. A bill to authorize appropriations for the maritime construction differential subsidy for fiscal year 1986, to promote a strong U.S. merchant marine, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

MARITIME CONSTRUCTION AUTHORIZATION

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, the history of the U.S. merchant marine since World War II has been one of steady decline. At the end of World War II our merchant fleet was unrivaled; today it ranks 11th.

Not too long ago Admiral Rowden, commander of the Military Sealift Command, publicly said that "Much more needs to be done to revitalize the commercial aspects of our merchant fleet to meet the balance of the military and economic requirements for sealift in time of national emergency."

Some of the recent statistics I have seen illustrate how precipitous this decline has become, and the perilous state of our merchant marine:

As of January 1, 1980, there were 533 oceangoing vessels in the privately owned active U.S. merchant fleet. As of July 1, 1984, that number had declined to 406.

In 1980 there were 27 commercial shipyards in our active shipbuilding mobilization base, and total average employment of production workers in those yards was 94,900.

By the end of 1983, there were only 24 shipyards because 3 were forced to close since they had no orders.

And the total average employment of production workers was 84,700, or down 10,000.

Today no U.S. shipyard is building a deepwater vessel for our foreign trades.

In 1980, 72.7 percent of our liner trades moved on foreign bottoms. In 1983, however, foreign flags increased their shares to 75.5 percent.

With respect to our total international trade—liner, dry, and liquid bulk—foreign flags carried 96.3 percent in 1980, and 94.2 percent in 1983. Although it appears we have increased our total share of cargo, the figures are misleading because the absolute tonnage carried has gone down.

Mr. President, the causes of the ills afflicting our maritime industry are many and complex, and the Government and the industry must share the blame. With regard to the Government's shortcomings, I hasten to add that no one administration or Congress is responsible.

Nevertheless, at a time when all other nations engaged in maritime trade are heavily subsidizing their shipping and shipbuilding through various protectionist devices, this administration has chosen to discontinue construction differential subsidy [CDS]—one of the conerstones of our maritime policy. This, of course, explains why no U.S. shipyard today is building a deepwater vessel for our foreign trades.

Mr. President, when the administration discontinued the construction differential subsidy [CDS] program it not only seriously affected our commercial shipbuilding industry, it created a serious dilemma for our subsidized fleet. Simply stated: "This fleet has replacement obligations and must be updated and modernized". Without CDS it is impossible for that segment to build in U.S. shipyards and remain competitive. On the other hand, if subsidized operators build foreign they cannot receive operating subsidy [ODS].

In addition to eliminating the CDS Program, the administration has admantly refused to raise the statutory ceiling of $12 billion on the highly successful title XI ship construction loan guarantee program which is administered at not cost to the Government. Simply stated, the title XI program helps build ships in U.S. shipyards, and has never cost the Government a penny.

Mr. President, we must recognize what every other shipbuilding country in the world recognizes. The price of entry includes Government assistance in one form or another. The CDS Program is not without its faults, and there may be more efficient ways for the Government to promote commercial shipbuilding in U.S. yards, so that our merchant fleet may be expanded and modernized.

While we are in the process of seeking more efficient ways to promote commercial shipbuilding, I do not believe it is prudent to abandon the CDS Program, however. Indeed, our experience over the past 4 years has proven how ill advised this is.

Accordingly, I am introducing legislation which would authorize $300 million for the CDS Program; raise the maximum CDS payment from 50 percent to 60 percent of the contract price; and raise the statutory ceiling of the title XI Program to $15 billion.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 102

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is authorized to be appropriated without fiscal year limitation as the appropriation Act may provide for the use of the Department of Transportation, for the fiscal year 1986 not to exceed $300,000,000 for acquisition, construction, or reconstruction of vessels and construction-differential subsidy and cost of national defense features incident to the construction, reconstruction, or reconditioning of ships.

SEC. 2. Section 502(b) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1152(b)) is amended by striking "50 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "60 per centum".

SEC. 3. Section 1103(f) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936 (46 App. U.S.C. 1273(f)), is amended by striking "$12,000,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$15,000,000,000".

S. 104. A bill to amend chapter 44, title 18, United States Code, to regulate the manufacture and importation of armor piercing bullets; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGULATION OF ARMOR PIERCING BULLETS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today a bill which will limit the manufacture and importation of armor-piercing bullets. This legislation is identical to S. 2766, which I introduced last year at the request of the administration. That bill was co-sponsored by nearly every Member of the Senate, and a companion measure introduced by Representatives JACK BROOKS and JOHN DINGELL enjoyed widespread bipartisan support in the House. Moreover, it was endorsed by numerous police organizations, the National Rifle Association, and Handgun Control, Inc. S. 2766 was unanimously approved for reporting by the Committee on the Judiciary on June 26, 1984.

Mr. President, the bill which I am introducing today is the product of extensive work on the part of the administration, members of the Committee on the Judiciary, and other interested parties, including the two Senators from New York—Senator MOYNIHAN and senator D'AMATO. Last year, the Criminal Law Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee held hearings on the complex and seemingly unresolvable problem of armor-piercing bullets. During that hearing, the subcommittee heard testimony about the difficulties in fashioning a definition of armor-piercing bullets that would strike an appropriate balance between the legitimate concerns of both law enforcement personnel and law-abiding hunters and sportsmen. The subcommittee also heard testimony about the need to provide strong Federal penalties for those who use or carry firearms and possess armor-piercing bullets while committing a violent felony. Furthermore, witnesses urged legislation which would minimize the availability of potentially dangerous ammunition to those bent upon criminal misuse.

This bill would define "armor-piercing ammunition" as solid projectiles or projectile cores constructed from specified metals. Projectiles which the Secretary of the Treasury finds to be primarily intended to be used for sporting purposes are specifically excluded. This ammunition could not be manufactured or imported, except under very limited circumstances.

First, armor-piercing ammunition could be manufactured or imported for the use of government agencies. Specifically, this is intended to cover law enforcement or intelligence agencies. Alternately, armor-piercing ammunition could be manufactured for exportation only. As a result, after the effective date of this Act, manufacturers and importers will no longer be permitted to sell armor-piercing ammunition to licensed dealers. Finally, manufacturers and importers of armor-piercing ammunition would pay the same license fee as those who manufacture or import destructive devices, such as explosives—$1,000 per year. This is considerably more than the current fees of $10 and $50.

In addition to the restrictions on manufacturing and importing such ammunition, the bill would provide mandatory penalties for using or carrying a firearm and possessing armor-piercing ammunition during the commission of a violent felony. Probation, parole, and concurrent sentences with respect to those penalties would be prohibited. While I am pleased to note that similar provisions were included in the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984, which was signed into law last October 12—Public Law 98-473—those penalties would be improved in the bill which I am introducing today because of the better definition.

Mr. President, this bill codifies in many respects a commendable initiative by the administration. This bill will limit the proliferation of ammunition which might be sought by persons determined to engage in crime at all costs, but which has no real sporting purpose. I believe that it achieves an infinitely fair balance between the legitimate interests of law enforcement and sportsmen.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill which I am introducing today be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks. In the event that my colleagues would like additional information about this bill, I refer them to the administration's submission of last year which is reprinted in the RECORD on June 14, 1984.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 104

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 921(a)(17) of title 18 of the United States Code is redesignated as section 921(a)(17)(A), and a new subparagraph (B) is added to section 921(a)(17) to read as follows:

"(B) The term 'armor piercing ammunition' means solid projectiles or projectile cores constructed from tungsten alloys, steel, iron, brass, bronze, beryllium copper, or depleted uranium. The term shall not include shotgun shot required by Federal or State environmental or game regulations for hunting purposes, frangible projectiles designed for target shooting or any projectile which the Secretary finds is primarily intended to be used for sporting purposes. The term 'solid' in the first sentence of this subparagraph means made entirely from one or more of the substances specified therein, but may include the presence of trace elements of other substances.".

SEC. 2. Section 922(a) of title 18 of the United States Code is amended—

(a) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (5);

(b) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof "and"; and

(c) by adding after paragraph (6) the following:

"(7) for any person to manufacture or import armor piercing ammunition, except that this paragraph shall not apply to (A) the manufacture or importation of armor piercing ammunition for the use of the United States or any department or agency thereof or any State or any department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or (B) the manufacture of armor piercing ammunition for the sole purpose of exportation.".

SEC. 3. Subparagraph (A) of section 923(a)(1) of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"(A) of destructive devices, ammunition for destructive devices or armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $1,000 per year;".

SEC. 4. Subparagraph (C) of section 923(a)(1) of title 18 of the United States Code is amended to read as follows:

"(C) of ammunition for firearms, other than ammunition for destructive devices or armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $10 per year.".

SEC. 5. Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 923(a)(2) of title 18 of the United States Code are amended to read as follows:

"(A) of destructive devices, ammunition for destructive devices or armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $1,000 per year; or

"(B) of firearms other than destructive devices or ammunition for firearms other than destructive devices, or ammunition other than armor piercing ammunition, a fee of $50 per year.".

SEC. 6 Section 924(c) of title 18 of the United States Code is amended (a) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and adding in lieu thereof a comma and the word "or" and (b) by adding a new paragraph (3) to read as follows:

"(3) during and in relation to the commission of a violent felony uses or carries a firearm and is in possession of armor piercing ammunition capable of being fired in that firearm shall, in addition to the punishment provided for the commission of such felony, be sentenced to a term of imprisonment for not less than five years. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the court shall not suspend the sentence of any person convicted of a violation of this subsection, nor place him on probation, nor shall the term of imprisonment run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment, including that imposed for the felony in which the armor piercing ammunition was used or carried. No person sentenced under this subsection shall be eligible for parole during the term of imprisonment imposed herein. For the purpose of this paragraph, the term violent felony means (A) a felony (which may be prosecuted in a court of the United States) that has as an element, the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another, or (B) any other felony (which may be prosecuted in a court of the United States) that, by its nature involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be use in the course of its commission.".

SEC. 7. The amendments shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act, except that sections 3, 4, and 5 shall take effect on the first day of the first calendar month which begins more than ninety days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from South Carolina, Mr. THURMOND, as an original cosponsor of a bill which will amend chapter 44, title 18, United States Code, to regulate the manufacture and importation of armor-piercing ammunition. The bill strikes an appropriate balance between the need to make our law enforcement officers as safe as possible and the need to maintain the second amendment rights of law-abiding citizens.

The bill would limit the manufacture and importation of armor-piercing ammunition to the military and other Federal, State or local government agencies who may have legitimate needs for this type of ammunition. Additionally, the bill would provide for a mandatory penalty on the possession of armor-piercing ammunition during the commission of a violent felony. Specifically, the bill would:

First, set up a definition of armor-piercing ammunition which excludes sporting ammunition;

Second, make illegal the manufacture and importation of armor-piercing ammunition, except for use by the Government or for exportation;

Third, set up a $1,000 licensing fee for manufacturers and importers of armor-piercing ammunition; and

Fourth, set up a minimum mandatory sentence of not less than 5 years for persons who use or carry armor-piercing ammunition during the commission of a violent felony.

The bill was engendered out of a concern among law enforcement officials, legislators, and the general public at large that certain types of armor-piercing ammunition are readily available on the commercial market and that such ammunition poses a severe threat to the safety of our law enforcement officials. The bill addresses these concerns without restrictions or interfering with the legitimate use of firearms for hunting, trap or skeet shooting, formal or informal target shooting or gun collecting. The bill restricts the misuse of armor-piercing ammunition without impacting on sporting ammunition. The bill has the support of the National Rifle Association and various law enforcement organizations.

I commend Senator THURMOND for sponsoring the legislation, and I urge my remaining colleagues to join as cosponsors.

Thank you Mr. President.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to join my distinguished colleagues Senator THURMOND and Senator BIDEN, in introducing legislation to ban the manufacture and importation of armor-piercing ammunition and to establish mandatory penalties for possession of such ammunition during the commission of violent Federal felonies.

This proposal is identical to S. 2766, which we introduced in the 98th Congress. That bill enjoyed the support of the administration and the cosponsorship of 96 Members of this body, as well a the endorsement of the National Rifle Association and many National and State police organizations.

"Cop-killer" is a chillingly apt moniker for these bullets, which serve no purpose but to kill and wound police officers, Federal law enforcement officers—even Presidents and other public officials—when they are wearing bulletproof vests. The bullets do not fit pistols normally used for practice shooting; they are useless for stopping game hunted by sportsmen; they are unnecessary for self-defense. In military parlance, these are "offensive weapons," ones which endanger the lives of thousands of police officers protected by bulletproof vests.

Our legislation would ban the manufacture and importation of solid projectiles and projectile cores made of tungsten alloys, steel, brass, iron, beryllium copper, or depleted uranium. Such bullets travel at a greater speed than do normal bullets, and they do not collapse upon impact. The bill would not ban shotgun shot used for hunting, nor would it ban the manufacture of armor-piercing bullets for export or for use by law enforcement or military agencies.

I do regret that the proposal also would not preclude the sale of cop-killer bullets distributed previously to firearms dealers. I share the concern of many police groups that the lack of sale restrictions weakens this legislation, and do hope that the Senate will consider seriously including such restrictions in the bill.

Since the development of Kevlar and other materials used in bulletproof vests more than a decade ago, flexible body armor has saved the lives of more than 400 police officers. From 1974 to 1983, the number of law enforcement officials killed in the line of duty declined 43 percent. This past September, a Long Island police officer's life was saved when a criminal's bullet failed to penetrate his vest.

That policeman would not have been so fortunate, had his assailant loaded his shotgun with a cop-killer bullet. In a test conducted by the California State Police, one armor-piercing bullet, the KTW variety, penetrated four bulletproof vests and five Los Angeles County phone books stacked behind them. According to the chief of the San Diego Police Department, W.B. Kolender, 9 of the 21 persons killed in the massacre at the McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, CA, last July, were slain by armor-piercing bullets imported from Czechoslovakia. And, I would add, dozens of police and SWAT officers positioned outside the restaurant were at risk as well from that ammunition.

Police chiefs and police departments around the country know all too well of the grave danger posed by cop-killer bullets, and have joined the call to ban them. Legislation to ban cop-killer bullets has been endorsed by the National Association of Police Organizations, the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association, the Fraternal Order of Police, the International Brotherhood of Police Organizations, the International Union of Police Organizations, the National Sheriffs' Association, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National Troopers' Coalition, the National Organization of Black Law Enforcement Officers, and hundreds of State and local law enforcement agencies. In my own State, such a measure has been unanimously endorsed by both the New York City Council and the New York State Assembly.

It has been a long struggle to bring this matter to the attention of Congress. In the 97th Congress, on February 22, 1982, I introduced S. 2128, my first attempt to ban cop-killer bullets; it received support from two cosponsors. Representative MARIO BIAGGI of New York, who also has been a tireless advocate of this cause, introduced identical legislation, H.R. 5437, in the House of Representatives. In the first month of the 98th Congress, on February 22, 1983, I introduced S. 555, legislation identical to the bill I had proposed the previous year. Representative BIAGGI again offered identical legislation. I was joined on S. 555 by 19 cosponsors, and I asked the administration to support a ban on cop-killer bullets. On May 31, 1983, Mr. Robert McConnell, Assistant Attorney General, wrote to say that the administration would support only penalties for criminal possession of armor-piercing ammunition, but not a ban on their manufacture, importation, or sale.

The effort continued, and the Judiciary Committee agreed to hold hearings on S. 555 last March. At those hearings, police officers representing many of the law enforcement agencies I have mentioned—officers who wear bulletproof vests and who run the risk every day of encountering criminals armed with bullets that can pierce those vests—testified for a more comprehensive ban on the ammunition.

On June 14, 1984, after much negotiation, a compromise was reached, albeit imperfect, and, with the support of the administration, Senators THURMOND, BIDEN, KENNEDY, and I introduced S. 2766. Twelve days later, the Senate Judiciary Committee reported out S. 2776 favorably.

When, near the end of last year's session, the measure had not yet been considered by the full Senate, I offered S. 2766 as an amendment to an omnibus spending bill. Unfortunately, the Senate chose not to act on the legislation at that time. And so, at the close of the 98th Congress, no ban was enacted on cop-killer bullets. The Nation's police were told to wait.

We still can, and must, act to reduce the threat armor-piercing bullets pose to law enforcement officers across the country. Speaking before the National Sheriffs' Association last June, President Reagan said, "I fully expect to be signing a cop-killer bullet bill before this Congress adjourns." For the thousands of policemen and policewomen who have pleaded for this legislation, I urge the Senate in the new Congress to give the President that opportunity, denied him in the last Congress. Now is the time to pass a strong and comprehensive ban on the manufacture and importation of this lethal ammunition.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as a cosponsor of legislation to ban the manufacture and sale of specially hardened bullets that were capable of penetrating the soft body armor worn by many of our Nation's law enforcement officers.

This legislation carefully balances the rights of law abiding citizens and the need to protect law enforcement and other personnel who are equipped with "bullet proof" vests. This balance has not been easy tc strike. It has taken years of study by the Treasury Department and others to define legislation that would outlaw those bullets made for illegal use, without also banning various hunting ammunitions made with steel-jackets or other substances that were capable of being fired by a handgun, and that are used for hunting and other legal purposes.

I am pleased to support legislation that has been so carefully constructed.

By Mr. PRYOR (for himself and Mr. BUMPERS):

S. 119. A bill to designate H.K. Thatcher Lock and Dam; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

DESIGNATING THE H.K. THATCHER LOCK AND DAM

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am joined by my colleague, the senior Senator from Arkansas, Mr. BUMPERS, in introducing legislation today that will honor one of the great pioneers in river navigation and development, and will commemorate for future generations, the leadership and contributions of an Arkansan who has made a difference.

Mr. President, H.K. Thatcher of Camden, AR, my hometown, has for over 40 years been the single most important factor in the development of the Ouachita River in Arkansas and Louisiana. As a young man growing up in Camden I came to know at an early age that this man, who had devoted his entire adult life to the economic development of the Ouachita River basin, was the most respected authority on river navigation in the area, and perhaps within the State of Arkansas. He is well known by the congressional committee chairmen before whom he has testified for so many years. I should add, Mr. President, that Mr. Thatcher was a very effective spokesman for the interests that he represented, and the development that we now see on the Ouachita River is proof of his influence in the Congress.

The legislation that we are introducing today to honor H.K. Thatcher will authorize the Army Corps of Engineers to name the lock and dam on the Ouachita River at Calion, AR, the H.K. Thatcher Lock and Dam. This facility is now known simply as the Calion Lock and Dam. We were asked to take this action by the Ouachita River Valley Association, and efforts will be made in the House of Representative, by Congressman BERYL ANTHONY to seek a similar change.

Mr. President, Mr. Thatcher's colleagues and fellow Arkansans know his place in our State's history and I urge the Senate to approve this bill so the rest of the Nation will know.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the text of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 119

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Calion Lock and Dam located on the Ouachita River near Calion, Arkansas, is named and designated as the "H.K. Thatcher Lock and Dam". Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, record, or other paper of the United States to such lock and dam shall be held to be a reference to the "H.K. Thatcher Lock and Dam".

By Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. BENTSEN, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. SASSER, Mr. D'AMATO, Mrs. HAWKINS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. CHILES, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. ABDNOR, and Mr. GORTON):

S. 120. A bill to amend the Tax Reform Act of 1984 to provide a transitional rule for the tax treatment of certain air travel benefits provided to employees of airlines; to the Committee on Finance.

TAX TREATMENT OF AIRLINE EMPLOYEES' TRAVEL BENEFITS

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise today, the first day of the 99th Congress, to offer legislation to correct an unintended effect of a provision of the Tax Reform Act of 1984, one affecting thousands of American men and women working for the Nation's airlines. I am pleased that my good friends and colleagues, Senators BENTSEN, SYMMS, SASSER, D'AMATO, HAWKINS, COCHRAN, CHILES, PRESSLER, INOUYE, ABDNOR, and GORTON have joined me in introducing this legislation.

The Tax Reform Act of 1984 maintains the nontaxable status of certain services provided to employees, including the traditional practice by airlines of providing free or reduced cost standby air travel to their employees. The recent tax legislation, however, stipulated that these flight benefits may be offered only to employees in the airline line of business. The so-called line-of-business rule was adopted to prevent conglomerates from providing employees in one line of business, such as hotels, tax-free benefits from another line, such as car rentals.

The new rules have had an unforeseen and unintended effect on many employees of Pan Am World Services, Inc. Many of them were employees of Pan American World Airways, Inc., and were transferred to Pan Am World Services, fully expecting that their flight benefits, long considered part of their compensation, would remain nontaxable. While Pan Am World Services, Inc., does not itself operate an airline, as the current line-of-business rule would require, its employees are directly involved in the airline's operation, in the maintenance and servicing of airplanes, airports, and aerospace facilities. The intent of the line-of-business rule, as I understood it when it was introduced in the Finance Committee, was to discourage large conglomerates from providing employees excessive amounts of nontaxable compensation, not to withhold traditional benefits from the employees of Pan Am World Services.

Many of these employees, I would add, are stationed abroad. They accepted such assignments with the understanding that their standby air travel benefits would provide them ready means to occasionally return to their homes in the United States. I also would mention that many of these employees are working under contracts with the Federal Government, operating airfields and communications systems around the world where there are no regional facilities available to our armed services. They are doing important work, often under disagreeable or dangerous circumstances. These employees have always shared the same tax-free flight benefits that Pan American Airways employees have enjoyed; now, a technicality in the 1984 tax law will take them away.

Mr. President, the legislation we introduce today would provide a narrow extension of the line-of-business rule to cover Pan Am World Services, Inc., employees, and applies only to persons employed as of September 12, 1984. This rule would protect only those who had legitimately anticipated continued nontaxable standby air travel benefits, not new employees.

At the conclusion of the last Congress, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, now the distinguished majority leader, Senator DOLE, agreed on the floor of this Chamber to hold hearings on this matter early in 1985. I would hope that the new chairman of the Finance Committee, my friend and colleague Senator PACKWOOD, will agree to do so as well.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this worthy legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 120

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 531 of the Tax Reform Act of 1984 is amended by redesignating subsections (g) and (h) as subsections (h) and (i), respectively, and inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection:

"(g) DETERMINATION OF LINE OF BUSINESS IN CASE OF AFFILIATED GROUP OPERATING AIRLINE.—If, as of September 12, 1984—

"(1) an individual was an employee (within the meaning of section 132 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, including subsecton (f) thereof) of one member of an affiliated group (as defined in section 1504 of such Code) and was eligible for non-additional-cost services in the form of air transportation provided by another member of such affiliated group,

"(2) at least 50 percent of the individuals performing services for the first such corporation were or had been employees of or had previously performed services for the second such corporation, and

"(3) the primary business of the affiliated group was air transportation of passengers, then, for purposes of applying paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 132(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, with respect to no-additional-cost services and qualified employee discounts provided for such individual by such other member, the employer of such individual shall be treated as engaged in the same line of business as such other member. For purposes of the preceding sentence and section 132 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, an individual who is performing services for the first such corporation who is an employee of the second such corporation shall be treated as also an employee of the first such corporation.".

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my good friend from New York in introducing this bill which will correct an unfair and unintended result of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984. This bill is similar to a bill, S. 2995, that my colleague and I introduced in the waning days of the 98th Congress. Although the full Senate did not have the opportunity to address this bill before adjournment, I hope my colleagues will join me in calling for the earliest possible consideration of this measure.

The Deficit Reduction Act added to the Internal Revenue Code for the first time a detailed set of rules governing the taxation of fringe benefits. Our principal intent in enacting this set of rules was to make it clear once and for all that customary fringe benefits received by employees are not subject to income taxation. For years, the Treasury Department had proposed to tax fringe benefits, and the Congress had repeatedly enacted legislation precluding action by Treasury. Last year, we felt it was time to set forth the tax-free status of fringe benefits in the code.

Another purpose of codifying the fringe benefit provisions in the code was to put an end to certain practices felt to be improper. Thus, we inserted a nondiscrimination standard into the law, so that employers cannot deprive lower-paid employees of the same fringe benefits offered to those higher on the ladder. We also put limits on the extent to which employees can receive as a fringe benefit free or discounted goods or services that are outside the the employees' line of business. What we did not intend to do in enacting the new rules was to cut back on legitimate benefits that current employees are enjoying. Rather, we made every effort to enact reasonable transition rules and exceptions to protect existing arrangements.

Unfortunately, we were not aware of the situation of the employees of Pan Am World Services. That company is an affiliate of Pan Am World Airways, and for years its employees have received airline passes as a fringe benefit. Those passes have been a significant inducement to the employees to work for the company—the passes have been available both during years of employment as well as during retirement. A number of employees have worked many years for the company in the expectation of receiving the passes during retirement. And many of the employees have transferred to the company in recent years from Pan Am World Airways, in the expectation that the airline pass privileges would continue.

Mr. President, the new fringe benefit rules will cause the airline passes received by the employees of Pan Am World Services to be treated as taxable income. This is so because of the line-of-business requirement of the new rules. Since these rules became effective the first of 1985, it is expected that Pan Am World Services will cancel the passes rather than either follow all the expensive recordkeeping and withholding requirements associated with the payment of taxable compensation or pay the new excise tax set forth in the new tax rules.

The bill that my colleagues and I have introduced today will simply provide a fair and reasonable transition rule for Pan Am World Services. The amendment will permit the current employees of the company to continue to receive airline passes tax free. The bill will not apply to new employees—new employees will join the company with the knowledge that the company may not provide them with free airline passes. I believe that the bill is a fair solution to an unfair problem caused by the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984, and I hope we can act on the measure soon.

By Mr. INOUYE (for himself and Mr. MATSUNAGA):

S. 121. A bill to provide financial assistance for demonstration grants designed to address the special needs of gifted and talented elementary and secondary school students who are Indian, Native Hawaiian, or Native American Pacific Islanders, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

NATIVE AMERICAN GIFTED AND TALENTED EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today, Senator MATSUNAGA and I are introducing legislation which would amend our Nation's educational statutes in order to authorize the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Education to establish special demonstration programs designed to address the unique needs of gifted and talented elementary and secondary school students who are American Indian, Native Hawaiian, or Native American Pacific Islanders (including American Samoans).

Mr. President, the bill which we are introducing today would authorize that up to $3 million be made available for this purpose during the next 3 fiscal years and would give a priority to programs developed by our Nation's community colleges.

In our judgment, it is very much in our national interest for the Federal Government to actively ensure that the true potential leadership of tomorrow's native Americans is given every opportunity to develop their potential to the fullest.

It is an unfortunate fact that unless the Federal Government reaches out to these talented individuals, we are afraid that it is unlikely that, as a Nation, we will ever have the opportunity to reap the benefit of their potential contributions.

It is sad, but nevertheless true, that native Americans simply are not given the type of educational resources that they so richly deserve. For the peoples that we have targeted in our legislative proposal, there is a special Federal responsibility for ensuring that this no longer is the case.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 121

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Native American Gifted and Talented Educational Assistance Act of 1985".

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

SEC. 2. It is the purpose of this Act to make demonstration grants to public agencies and nonprofit private organizations designed to address the special educational needs of elementary and secondary school students who are Indian, Native Hawaiian, or Native American Pacific Islanders (including American Samoans).

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purpose of this Act—

(1) the term "elementary school" has the same meaning given that term under section 198 (a) (17) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965;

(2) the term "local educational agency" has the same meaning given that term under section 198 (a) (10) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965;

(3) the term "Indian" has the same meaning given that term under section 4 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act;

(4) the term "institution of higher education" has the same meaning given that term by section 1201 (a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965;

(5) the term "junior or community college" has the same meaning given that term under section 322 (a) (4) of the Higher Education Act of 1965;

(6) the term "Native Hawaiian" means any individual whose ancestors were natives of the area which consisted of the Hawaiian Islands prior to 1778;

(7) the term "secondary school" has the same meaning given that term under section 198 (a) (7) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965;

(8) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education;

(9) the term "State" has the same meaning given that term by section 198 (a) (16) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

(10) the term "State educational agency" has the same meaning given that term by section 198 (a) (17) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

DEMONSTRATION GRANTS FOR GIFTED AND TALENTED CERTAIN ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL STUDENTS

SEC. 4. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to, and to enter into contracts with, public agencies and private nonprofit organizations, especially institutions of higher education, junior and community colleges, State educational agencies, and local educational agencies for demonstration projects designed to address the special needs of elementary and secondary school students who are Indians, Hawaiian Native, or Native American Pacific Islanders (including American Samoans)

(b) Demonstration projects assisted under this Act may include—

(1) the identification of the special educational needs of gifted and talented children who are eligible for assistance under this Act,

(2) the conduct of educational activities which hold reasonable promise of making substantial progress toward meeting the educational needs of such gifted and talented children;

(3) leadership programs designed to replicate programs for such children throughout the appropriate area, including the dissemination of information on the demonstration projects conducted with assistance under this Act; and

(4) appropriate research, evaluation and related activities pertaining to the special needs of such gifted and talented children.

(c)(1) No grant may be made and no contract may be entered into under this section unless an application is submitted to the Secretary in such form, in such manner and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary determines necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(2) The requirements of section 557 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (relating to the participation of pupils and teachers in private elementary and secondary schools) shall apply to demonstration projects assisted under this section unless such requirements cannot legally be met in the State (as determined by the State educational agency of the State in which the applicant for funds under this section is located).

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 5. There are authorized to be appropriated $3 million for the fiscal year 1986 and each of the three succeeding fiscal years.

By Mr. PRYOR (for himself and Mr. RIEGLE):

S. 122. A bill to reorganize the Department of Health and Human Services by establishing an independent agency, governed by a bipartisan board, to administer the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program and the supplemental security income program under titles II and XVI of the Social Security Act, to provide appropriate delegations of authority to such agency from the General Services Administration and the Office of Personnel Management, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

INDEPENDENT SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to create an independent Social Security agency to administer the old-age and survivors, disability, and supplemental security income benefit programs. I believe this change is clearly needed, and I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort. I introduced identical legislation in 1984, and although congressional hearings were held on the issue, no action was taken.

In 1935, the Social Security Program was established to provide some stability and insurance in old age against the loss of income in retirement. The size and scope of this agency has grown dramatically—in 1940 less than $1 billion in benefits were paid out, but by 1985 Social Security Administration expenditures are expected to be $200 billion, or 30 percent of the Federal domestic expenditures. In that year, SSA will issue approximately 600 million checks to over 40 million recipients. This is in addition to the administrative work necessary to process 6.2 million new claims, and action to keep present claims in order and accurate. And SSA's responsibilities will only increase as our population continues to age. By 1990 some estimate that almost $400 billion in benefits will be paid out.

It comes as no surprise—considering SSA's broad range of responsibilities, the recent concerns over the financial stability of the trust funds and general national budget concerns, and SSA's history of operating and management problems—that public confidence in this most important agency is at an all-time low.

One of the major factors contributing to SSA's operating and management problems has been the lack of strong and consistent leadership. Over the last 12 years there have been nine different commissioners of the Social Security administration, each with his own priorities and directives from the Administration by which he was appointed. And since January 1983, when then-Commissioner John Svahn was nominated for Under Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services, the Senate has not received a nomination for this most important position. Thus, the Congress has found it necessary to draft, debate, and approve two historic pieces of Social Security legislation, the 1983 reform bill and the 1984 disability reform bill, without a confirmed commissioner.

The structure of the legislation I am introducing would greatly improve the stability and continuity of the leadership at Social Security. The five-member board with staggered 10-year terms and a board-appointed commissioner with a 5-year term should prevent the frequent turnover and extended vacancies in leadership experienced in recent years.

But beyond these concerns, independence of the Social Security Administration at this time is a logical proposal. This agency has unique responsibilities, and its activities affect nearly every citizen in the United States at one time or another. Social Security benefits are funded through combined employer-employee contributions, and this program should not be viewed in the same manner as other general revenue financed programs are. Yet, as but one of the agencies under the Health and Human Services umbrella, Social Security has not received the independent attention it should have relative to its size and degree of importance to all Americans.

While administrative independence from the Department of Health and Human Services would not, or itself, correct all the Social Security Administration's management and image problems, and automatically restore public confidence, I believe that, as a separate agency organized under the structure in this legislation, the Social Security Administration should be able to attract capable management personnel and be held more accountable for its responsibilities. In addition, a separate agency, headed by a governing board which develops program policy, and manageed by an able administrator, will help to depoliticize Social Security issues, and insulate beneficiaries from the threat of precipitous benefit reductions and arbitrary budget cutting measures.

I also believe that this legislation would greatly improve the structure of the appeals council, and enhance procedural fairness in what has been an adjudicative nightmare over the last several years. During discussion on this legislation I would hope that some consideration be given to legisalation which I introduced in 1983 and plan to reintroduce which would create an independent review commission for Health and Human Services administrative law judges.

Perhaps one of the best arguments for restructuring the Social Security agency has been the deplorable manner in which the triannual reviews of disabled individuals have been conducted. These reviews are an excellent example of a way in which a simple directive to an agency can result in the wholesale benefit terminations of thousands of truly disabled individuals with the sole purpose of saving program dollars. These terminations represent a very dark period in our Nation's history. If the Social Security Administration had been an independent agency, free of political pressure, the crisis we have recently weathered with regard to Social Security disability might never have occurred.

In addition, over the last few years there has been growing concern over the interest yield on trust fund reserve investments, particularly in light of Social Security's recent financial crisis. I believe that a board of directors responsible for developing program policy could place emphasis on the investment of trust fund reserves and look forward to a higher yield on our citizens' contributions to Social Security through a carefully planned and monitored investment policy.

Originally the Social Security program was administered by an independent agency, governed by a board of directors. The 1981 Commission on Social Security and the 1983 Commission on Social Security Reform both recommended restoration of this original independent administrative structure for Social Security. On June 12, 1984, the Congressional Panel on Social Security Organization, headed by the distinguished former Comptroller General of the United States, Elmer B. Staats, recommended to the Congress a somewhat different independent administrative structure. I believe the legislation I am introducing today incorporates the best recommendations of previous studies and proposes an organizational structure that meets the unique requirements of this agency.

Last year Congressman ROYBAL, the distinguished chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, introduced identical legislation in the House. His staff is currently engaged in negotiations with Congressman PICKLE's Social Security Subcommittee staff on the independent Social Security agency issue. I expect that Chairman ROYBAL will introduce independent Social Security agency legislation this year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 122

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

ESTABLISHMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY AS AN INDEPENDENT AGENCY; SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

SEC. 2. (a) Section 701 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY; SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

"Establishment

"SEC. 701. (a) There is hereby established, as an independent agency of the executive branch of the Government, a Social Security Agency (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Agency').

"Social Security Board

"(b)(1) The Agency shall be headed by a Social Security Board (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Board').

"(2) The Board shall be composed of five members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The members shall be chosen, on the basis of their integrity, impartiality, and good judgment, from among individuals who, by reason of their education, experience, and attainments, are exceptionally qualified to perform the duties of members of the Board.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), members shall be appointed for terms of ten years. A member may be nominated by the President for appointment to a term of office only if the term of office commences before or during the President's then current term of office. A member of the Board may be removed only pursuant to a finding by the President of neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. The President shall transmit any such finding to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the majority leader of the Senate not later than five days after the date on which such finding is made.

"(B) Of the members first appointed—

"(i) one shall be appointed for a term ending January 31, 1989,

"(ii) one shall be appointed for a term ending January 31, 1991,

"(iii) one shall be appointed for a term ending January 31, 1993,

"(iv) one shall be appointed for a term commencing February 1, 1989, and ending January 31, 1995, and

"(v) one shall be appointed for a term commencing February 1, 1989, and ending January 31, 1997, as designated by the President at the time of appointment. Such members shall be appointed after active consideration of recommendations made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and of recommendations made by the chairman of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

"(C) Any member appointed for a term after the commencement of such term shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term. A member may, at the request of the President, serve for not more than one year after the expiration of his or her term until his or her successor has taken office.

"(4) Not more than three members of the Board shall be of the same political party.

"(5) A member of the Board may not, during his or her term as member, otherwise serve as an officer or employee of any government. If any member of the Board becomes an officer or employee of any government, he or she may continue as a member of the Board for not longer than the thirty-day period beginning on the date he or she becomes such an officer or employee.

"(6) Three members of the Board shall constitute a quorum, except that two members shall constitute a quorum until February 1, 1989. A lesser number may hold hearings.

"(7) A member of the Board shall be designated from time to time by the President to serve as Chairperson of the Board.

"(8) The Board shall meet at the call of the Chairperson or a majority of its members.

"Functions of the Board

"(c) The Board shall—

"(1) govern by regulation the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI,

"(2) appoint a Commissioner of Social Security, as described in section 702, to act for the Board as the chief operating officer of the Agency responsible for administering such programs,

"(3) constitute five of the members the Board of Trustees of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund,

"(4) make annual budgetary recommendations relating to the Agency and defend such recommendations before the appropriate committees of each House of the Congress,

"(5) make recommendations to the Congress and the President as to the most effective methods of providing economic security through social insurance, and, in consultation with the Commissioner of Social Security, as to legislation and matters of administrative policy concerning such programs,

"(6) provide the Congress and the President with the ongoing actuarial and other analysis undertaken by the Agency with respect to such programs and any other information relating to such programs, and

"(7) conduct policy analysis and research relating to such programs.

"Office of the Board

"(d)(1) The Office of the Board shall include an Office of the Actuary, to be headed by a Chief Actuary appointed by the Board. To the extent provided by the Board, the Office of the Actuary shall assist the Board in carrying out its actuarial functions.

"(2) The Office of the Board shall include an Office of Policy and Legislation, to be headed by a Director of Policy and Legislation appointed by the Board. To the extent provided by the Board, the Office of Policy and Legislation shall assist the Board in carrying out its functions relating to policy analysis, research, and legislation.

"(3) The Office of the Board shall include an Office of General Counsel, to be headed by a General Counsel appointed by the Board. To the extent provided by the Board, the General Counsel shall serve as the principal legal counsel in the Agency.

"(4)(A) The Board shall appoint such additional attorneys, actuaries, and other employees as it considers necessary to carry out its functions.

"(B) The Board may appoint, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, such technical or professional employees as the Board considers appropriate, and such employees may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates.

"(C) The Board may procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"(D) Notwithstanding section 3133 of title 5, United States Code, the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall authorize for the Agency a total number of Senior Executive Service positions equal to 150 percent of the number of such positions in the Social Security Administration of the Department of Health and Human Services as of immediately before the date of the enactment of the Social Security Reorganization Act of 1984, and the total number of such positions authorized for the Agency pursuant to such section 3133 shall not at any subsequent time be less than such number.

"(E) In addition to the positions of the Agency in the Executive Schedule specified in subchapter II of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, the Board may establish additional positions at levels IV and V of the Executive Schedule.

"Organization of the Agency; Delegation of Functions

"(d)(1) The Board may establish, alter, consolidate, or discontinue such organizational units or components within the Agency as the Board considers necessary or appropriate to carry out its functions, except that this paragraph shall not apply with respect to any unit or component established by this Act.

"(2) The Board may assign duties, and delegate, or authorize successive redelegations of, authority to act and to render decisions, with respect to the functions of the Board under this section. Within the limitations of such delegations, redelegations, or assignments to officers or employees of the Agency, all official acts and decisions of such officers and employees shall have the same force and effect as though performed or rendered by the Board.

"Inspector General

"(e) There shall be in the Agency an Office of the Inspector General, to be headed by an Inspector General appointed in accordance with the Inspector General Act of 1978.

"Coordination Between the Agency, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Department of the Treasury

"(f)(1) The Board, the Secretary, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall consult with each other and shall develop rules, regulations, practices, and forms which, to the extent appropriate for the efficient administration of titles II, XVI, and XVIII and the other provisions of this Act and the applicable provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, are designed to reduce duplication of effort, duplication of reporting, conflicting or overlapping requirements, and the burden on beneficiaries and other persons of compliance with the provisions of this Act.

"(2) In order to avoid unnecessary expense and duplication of functions, the Board, the Secretary, and the Secretary of the Treasury may make such arrangements or agreements for cooperation or mutual assistance in the performance of their functions under titles II, XVI, and XVIII and the other provisions of this Act and the applicable provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as they find to be practicable and consistent with law.".

(b)(1) Section 5313 of title 5, United States Code (relating to level II of the Executive Schedule), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Chairperson of the Social Security Board, Social Security Agency.".

(2) Section 5314 of such title (relating to level III of the Executive Schedule) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Members of the Social Security Board, Social Security Agency (4).".

(3) Section 5315 of such title (relating to level IV of the Executive Schedule) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new items:

"Inspector General, Social Security Agency.

"Chief Actuary, Social Security Agency.

"Director of Policy Analysis and Legislation, Social Security Agency.

"General Counsel, Social Security Agency.".

COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY

SEC. 3. (a) Section 702 of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY

"Establishment

"SEC. 702. (a) There shall be in the Agency an Office of the Commissioner, to be headed by a Commissioner of Social Security (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Commissioner') appointed by the Board.

"(A) the individual first appointed to the office of Ombudsman shall serve for a term ending December 31, 1991,

"(B) an individual appointed Ombudsman for a term after commencement of such term shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term, and

"(C) an individual may, at the request of the Chairperson of the Board, serve as Ombudsman after the expiration of his or her term for not more than one year until his or her successor has taken office.

An individual may be appointed as Ombudsman for successive terms.

"(2) An individual may be removed from the office of Ombudsman before completion of his or her term only upon the vote of a majority of the full membership of the Board, pursuant to a finding by the Board of neglect of duty or malfeasance in office. The Board shall transmit any such finding to the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate not later than five days after such finding is made.

"Functions of the Ombudsman

"(c) The Ombudsman shall—

"(1) represent the concerns of the public, including beneficiaries, relating to the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI, to the Commissioner, the Board, the President, and the Congress, and

"(2) conduct such studies and surveys of the administrative effectiveness and program policy goals of the Agency as he or she considers appropriate or as requested by the Citizens' Advisory Committee.

"Staff of the Ombudsman

"(d) The Ombudsman shall appoint such additional employees as he or she considers necessary to carry out his or her functions and may procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code.

"Citizens' Advisory Committee

"(e)(1) There shall be in the Office of the Ombudsman a Citizens' Advisory Committee (hereinafter in the subsection referred to as the 'Committee').

"(2) The Committee shall consist of—"(A) three members appointed by the Board,

"(B) three members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives (in consultation with the Chairperson of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Chairperson of the Committee on Government Operations), and

"(C) three members appointed by the majority leader of the Senate (in consultation with the chairperson of the Committee on Finance and the chairperson of the Committee on Governmental Affairs).

"(3)(A) The members of the Committee shall be chosen on the basis of their integrity, impartiality, and good judgment, from among individuals who, by reason of their education, experience, and attainments, are exceptionally qualified to perform the duties of members of the Committee.

"(B) Of the members appointed under each of subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (2)—

"(i) one shall be appointed from individuals representing the interests of employers (including self-employed individuals),

"(ii) another shall be appointed from individuals representing the interests of employees, and

"(iii) the remaining member shall be appointed from individuals representing the interests of beneficiaries.

"(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C), the appointed members shall be appointed for terms of three years.

"(B) Of the members first appointed—

"(i) the member appointed under paragraph (2)(A) representing the interests of employees, the member appointed under paragraph (2)(B) representing the interests of employers, and the member appointed under paragraph (2)(C) representing the interests of beneficiaries shall each be appointed for a term of one year,

"(ii) the member appointed under paragraph (2)(A) representing the interests of employers, the member appointed under paragraph (2)(B) representing the interests of beneficiaries, and the member appointed under paragraph (2)(C) representing the interests of employees shall each be appointed for a term of two years, and

"(iii) the member appointed under paragraph (2)(A) representing the interests of beneficiaries, the member appointed under paragraph (2)(B) representing the interests of employees, and the member appointed under paragraph (2)(C) representing the interests of employers shall each be appointed for a term of three years.

"(C) Any member appointed for a term after the commencement of such term shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term.

"(5) Members of the Committee appointed under paragraph (2) shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service. Such members, while attending meetings or conferences thereof or otherwise serving on the business of the Committee, shall be paid at rates fixed by the Board, but not exceeding $100 for each day, including traveltime, during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Committee; and while so serving away from their homes or regular places of business they may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

"(6) The Committee may engage such technical assistance as may be necessary to carry out its functions. The Ombudsman shall make available to the Committee such secretarial, clerical, and other assistance available in the Office of the Ombudsman, and the Commissioner shall make available any pertinent data prepared by the Office of the Commissioner, as the Committee may require to carry out its functions.

"(7) The Committee shall—

"(A) prepare and transmit to each House of the Congress a biennial report, in May of each odd-numbered year, assessing the administration and objectives of the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance program under title II and the supplemental security income program under title XVI, and

"(B) as it considers appropriate, request, and assist in the preparation of, studies and surveys by the Ombudsman pursuant to subsection (c)(2).".

(b) Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code (relating to level IV of the Executive Schedule) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"Social Security Ombudsman, Social Security Agency.".

TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS

SEC. 5. (a) There are transferred to the Social Security Agency all functions carried out by the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to the programs and activities the administration of which is vested in the Social Security Agency by reason of this Act and the amendments made thereby. The Social Security Board shall prescribe such regulations as are necessary to allocate such functions in accordance with sections 701, 702, and 703 of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act).

(b)(1) There are transferred from the Department of Health and Human Services to the Social Security Board, for appropriate allocation by the Board by regulation in the Social Security Agency—

(A) the personnel employed in connection with the functions transferred by this Act and the amendments made thereby, and

(B) the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, or used in connection with such functions, arising from such functions, or available, or to be made available, in connection with such functions.

(2) Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this subsection shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

(c) The position of Commissioner of Social Security in the Department of Health and Human Services is abolished.

TRANSITIONAL RULES

SEC. 6. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, regulations, permits, contracts, certificates, licenses, and privileges—

(1) which have been issued, made, promulgated, granted, or allowed to become effective, in the exercise of functions (A) which were exercised by the Secretary of Health and Human Services (or his delegate), and (B) which relate to functions which, by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder, are vested in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security, and shall (to the extent that they relate to functions described in paragraph (1)(B)) continue in effect according to their terms until modified, terminated, suspended, set aside, or repealed by such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be).

(2) which are in effect at the time this Act takes effect,

(b) The provisions of this Act (including the amendments made thereby) shall not affect any proceeding pending at the time this Act takes effect before the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to functions vested (by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder) in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security, except that such proceedings, to the extent that they relate to such functions, shall continue before such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be). Orders shall be issued under any such proceeding, appeals taken therefrom, and payments shall be made pursuant to such orders, in like manner as if this Act had not been enacted, and orders issued in any such proceeding shall continue in effect until modified, terminated, superseded, or repealed by such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be), by a court of competent jurisdiction, or by operation of law.

(c) Except as provided in this subsection—

(1) the provisions of this Act shall not affect suits commenced prior to the date this Act takes effect; and

(2) in all such suits proceedings shall be had, appeals taken, and judgments rendered, in the same manner and effect as if this Act had not been enacted.

No cause of action, and no suit, action, or other proceeding commenced by or against any officer in his official capacity as an officer of the Department of Health and Human Services, shall abate by reason of the enactment of this Act. Causes of action, suits, actions, or other proceedings may be asserted by or against the United States and the Social Security Agency, or such official of such Agency as may be appropriate, and, in any litigation pending when this section takes effect, the court may at any time, on its own motion or that of a party, enter an order which will give effect to the provisions of this subsection (including, where appropriate, an order for substitution of parties).

(d) This Act shall not have the effect of releasing or extinguishing any criminal prosecution, penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred as a result of any function which (by reason of this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder) is vested in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security.

(e) Orders and actions of the Social Security Board and the Commissioner of Social Security in the exercise of functions vested in such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be) under this Act (and the amendments made thereby) shall be subject to judicial review to the same extent and in the same manner as if such orders and actions had been taken by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in the exercise of such functions immediately preceding the effective date of this Act. Any statutory requirements relating to notice, hearings, action upon the record, or administrative review that apply to any function so vested in such Board or Commissioner shall continue to apply to the exercise of such function by such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be).

(f) In the exercise of the functions vested in the Social Security Board or the Commissioner of Social Security under this Act, the amendments made thereby, and regulations prescribed thereunder, such Board or Commissioner (as the case may be) shall have the same authority as that vested in the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to the exercise of such functions immediately preceding the vesting of the same in such Board or Commissioner, and actions of such Board or Commissioner shall have the same force and effect as when exercised by such Secretary.

BUDGETARY AND FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY

SEC. 7. Title VII of the Social Security Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"BUDGETARY AND FISCAL AFFAIRS OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY AGENCY

"Apportionment of Appropriations

"SEC. 711. (a) Appropriations requests of the Social Security Agency for staffing and personnel shall be based upon comprehensive workforce plans. The entire amount of appropriations provided for the administrative costs of the Social Security Agency shall be apportioned in the time period provided in title 31, United States Code, for apportionment and shall be apportioned for the entire period of availability without restriction or deduction by the apportioning officer or employee of the Office of Management and Budget or any other entity within the executive branch of the Federal Government, except as otherwise provided in this section.

"Appropriations for Administrative Expenses; Contract Authority; Availabilty of Trust Funds; Contingent Appropriations

"(b)(1) Authority of the Social Security Agency for automated data processing procurement and facilities construction shall be provided in the form of contract authority covering the total costs of such acquisitions, to be available until expended.

"(2) Amounts necessary for the liquidation of contract authority provided pursuant to this section are hereby made available from the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund to the extent that the Social Security Board, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, determines that any of such amounts to be provided from either such Trust Fund are not necessary to meet the current obligations for benefit payments from such Trust Fund.

"(3) Funds appropriated for the Social Security Agency to be available on a contingency basis shall be apportioned only upon the occurrence of the stipulated contingency, as determined by the Social Security Board and reported to each House of the Congress.

"Mandatory Delegations from Administrator of General Services

"(c)(1) To the extent requested by the Commissioner, the Commissioner shall have—

"(A) all authorities permitted to be delegated under title 40, of the United States Code, that the Commissioner considers are necessary for the acquiring, operating, and maintaining of the facilities needed for the administration of programs for which the Commissioner is given responsibility under this Act,

"(B) all authorities permitted to be delegated under section 111 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 759), relating to the lease, purchase, or maintenance of automated data processing equipment, and

"(C) the authority to contract for any automated data processing equipment or services which the Commissioner considers necessary for the efficient and effective operation of such programs.

"(2) The Administrator of the General Services Administration shall provide any assistance requested by the Commissioner in assuming the delegations required under paragraph (1).".

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS; RULES OF CONSTRUCTION

SEC. 8. (a) Title II (other than section 201, section 231(c), section 226, and section 226A) and title XVI of the Social Security Act are each amended—

(1) by striking out, wherever it appears therein, "Secretary of Health and Human Services" or "Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "Commissioner",

(2) by striking out, wherever it appears therein, "Department of Health and Human Services" or "Department of Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "Social Security Agency",

(3) by striking out, wherever it appears therein, "Department" (but only if it is not immediately succeeded by the words "of Health and Human Services" or "of Health, Education, and Welfare", and only if it is used in reference to the Department of Health and Human Services or the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare) and inserting in lieu thereof "Social Security Agency", and

(4) by striking out, wherever it appears therein, each of the following words (but, in the case of any such word only if such word refers to the Secretary of Health and Human Services or to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare): "Secretary", "Secretary's", "his", "him", and "he", and inserting in lieu thereof (in the case of the word "Secretary") "Commissioner", (in the case of the word "Secretary's") "Commissioner's", (in the case of the word "his") "the Commissioner's", (in the case of the word "him") "the Commissioner", and (in the case of the word "he") "the Commissioner".

(b)(1) Section 201(a)(3) of such Act is amended by striking out "Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "Commissioner".

(2) Section 201(c) of such Act is amended—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking out "shall be composed of" and all that follows down through "ex officio" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "shall be composed of the members of the Social Security Board, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, all ex officio";

(B) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "The Chairperson of the Social Security Board shall be the Chairperson of the Board of Trustees."; and

(C) in the seventh sentence (before application of subparagraph (B)), by striking out ": Provided, That the certification shall not refer to economic assumptions underlying the Trustee's report".

(3) Section 201(g)(1)(A) of such Act is amended—

(A) in clause (i), by striking out "by him and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "by him, the Commissioner, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services", and by striking out "by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Treasury Department" and inserting in lieu thereof "by the Social Security Agency, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Department of the Treasury";

(B) in clause (ii), by striking out "method prescribed by the Board of Trustees under paragraph (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "applicable method prescribed under paragraph (4)", by striking out "the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Commissioner and the Secretary of Health and Human Services", and by striking out "the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "the Social Security Agency and the Department of Health and Human Services"; and

(C) by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "There are hereby authorized to be made available for expenditure, out of any or all of the Trust Funds, such amounts as the Congress may deem appropriate to pay the costs of the part of the administration of this title and title XVI for which the Commissioner is responsible, the costs of title XVIII for which the Secretary of Health and Human Services is responsible, and the costs of carrying out the functions of the Social Security Agency, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of this subparagraph.".

(4) Section 201(g)(1) of such Act is amended—

(A) in the fourth sentence of subparagraph (A), by inserting "(if any)" after "amounts"; and

(B) by striking out subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) After the close of each fiscal year—

"(i) the Commissioner shall determine (I) the portion of the costs, incurred during such fiscal year, of administration of this title and title XVI and of carrying out the functions of the Social Security Agency, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of subparagraph (A)), which should have been borne by the general fund in the Treasury, (II) the portion (if any) of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, and (III) the portion (if any) of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, and

"(ii) the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall determine (I) the portion of the costs, incurred during such fiscal year, of administration of title XVIII which should have been borne by the general fund in the Treasury, (II) the portion (if any) of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, and (III) the portion (if any) of such costs which should have been borne by the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, except that the determination of the amounts to be borne by the general fund in the Treasury with respect to expenditures incurred in carrying out such functions specified in section 232 shall be made pursuant to the applicable method prescribed under paragraph (4) of this subsection.

"(C) After the determinations under subparagraph (B) have been made for any fiscal year, the Commissioner and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall each certify to the Managing Trustee the amounts (if any) which should be transferred from each of the Trust Funds to the general fund in the Treasury and from the general fund in the Treasury to each of the Trust Funds, in order to ensure that each of the Trust Funds and the general fund in the Treasury have borne their proper share (if any) of the costs, incurred during such fiscal year, for (i) the part of the administration of this title and title XVI for which the Commissioner is responsible, (ii) the part of the administration of title XVIII for which the Secretary of Health and Human Services is responsible, and (iii) carrying out the functions of the Social Security Agency, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of subparagraph (A)). The Managing Trustee shall transfer any such amounts in accordance with any certification so made.".

(5) Section 201(g)(2) of such Act is amended, in the second sentence, by striking out "established and maintained by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare" and inserting in lieu thereof "maintained by the Commissioner", and by striking out "Secretary shall furnish" and inserting in lieu thereof "Commissioner shall furnish".

(6) Section 201(g)(4) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(4) The Commissioner shall utilize the method prescribed pursuant to this paragraph, as of immediately before the date of the enactment of the Social Security Reorganization Act of 1984, for determining the costs which should be borne by the general fund in the Treasury of carrying out the functions of the Commissioner, specified in section 232, which relate to the administration of provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (other than those referred to in clause (i) of the first sentence of paragraph (1)(A)). If at any time or times thereafter the Commissioner considers such action advisable, it may modify the method of determining such costs.".

(7) Section 201(i)(1) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(i)(1) The Managing Trustee may accept on behalf of the United States money gifts and bequests made unconditionally to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, or the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund or to the Social Security Agency, the Department of Health and Human Services, or any part or officer thereof, for the benefit of any of such Funds or any activity financed through such Funds.".

REPORTS ASSESSING ORGANIZATIONAL CHANGES

SEC. 9. (a) Five years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Social Security Board, the Comptroller General of the United States, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall each submit to each House of the Congress a report setting forth in detail an assessment of the organizational changes made by this Act and the amendments made by this Act.

(b) Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Social Security Board, the Comptroller General of the United States, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to each House of the Congress their recommendations for further technical and conforming amendments necessary to effectively and efficiently carry out the purposes of this Act.

BENEFICIARY BILL OF RIGHTS

SEC. 10. Title VII of the Social Security Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"BENEFICIARY BILL OF RIGHTS

"Principles for Implementation of Act

"SEC. 713. (a) The provisions of this Act should be implemented consistent with the following principles:

"(1) All persons should be treated fairly and equitably by the Social Security Board, the Commissioner, and the Secretary with proper regard and protection for their rights under this Act, their constitutional rights, and their privacy.

"(2) The Social Security Board, the Commissioner, and the Secretary should not discriminate against persons on account of their age, sex, race, creed, color, handicap, national origin, or economic condition.

"(3) The Commissioner and the Secretary should each maintain prompt, professional, and effective service which is accessible and responsive to the communities and persons which they serve.

"(4) Each beneficiary under this Act should receive timely and proper payment of benefits to which he or she is entitled. Benefits under this Act should not be reduced, ceased, or withheld by the Commissioner or the Secretary or assigned to any representative payee by the Commissioner or the Secretary without due process of law or without adequate safeguards to protect those who may be adversely affected by any injustices or undue hardships which may result from such actions.

"(5) Each beneficiary under this Act should be provided a personal conference with a competent officer or employee of the Social Security Agency or the Department of Health and Human Services with respect to any determination by the Commissioner or the Secretary (as the case may be) which adversely affects him or her.

"(6) In any administrative matter subject to appeal under this Act, each beneficiary should be provided a full, fair, and impartial evidentiary hearing before an administrative law judge who is authorized to render independent judgment of the issue, consistent with applicable laws and regulations, and who is not subject to coersion, discrimination, or interference with, in the exercise of his responsible judgment.

"Enforcement of Principles

"(b) In carrying out their responsibilities under this Act, the Social Security Board and the Secretary, pursuant to authority otherwise available, shall take any action, including the issuance of rules, regulations, or directives, which is consistent with the provisions of this Act and which the Social Security Board or the Secretary (as the case may be) determines is necessary to ensure that the administration of this Act is based on and embodies the principles set forth in subsection (a) and that such principles are publicly displayed in each office of the Social Security Agency.".

EFFECTIVE DATE AND INTERIM RULES

SEC. 11. (a)(1) Sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 8 of this Act shall take effect October 1, 1986.

(2) Notwithstanding the effective date set forth in paragraph (1), effective on the date of the enactment of this Act—

(A) the initial members of the Social Security Board whose terms of office begin before February 1, 1989, may be appointed before such effective date, after the date of the enactment of this Act, and the Commissioner of Social Security, the Social Security Ombudsman, the Inspector General, the Chief Actuary, the Director of Policy Analysis and Legislation, and the General Counsel of the Social Security Agency may be appointed by such Board at any time after such initial members of the Social Security Board have been appointed,

(B) the persons appointed under subparagraph (A) shall be compensated from the date they first take office, at the rates provided for in the amendments to title 5, United States Code, made by sections 2(b), 3(b), and 4(b) of this Act,

(C) such compensation and related expenses of such persons shall be paid from funds available in the Department of Health and Human Services for the functions vested in the Social Security Agency

by this Act and the amendments made thereby, and

(D) the Social Security Board and the Commissioner of Social Security may each utilize, as appropriate, the services of such officers, employees, and other personnel of the Department of Health and Human Services, and funds appropriated to the functions of such Department to be transferred by this Act and the amendments made thereby, for such period of time as may reasonably be needed to facilitate the orderly implementation of this Act.

(b) The amendment made by section 7 of this Act shall apply with respect to fiscal years beginning on or after October 1, 1986.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 123. A bill to amend titles XVII and XIX of the Social Security Act, to provide that psychologist services shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to modify our Nation's Medicare and Medicaid programs in order to ensure that the services of professional psychologists will be truly autonomous throughout both of these important initiatives.

This is a matter on which I have been working with my colleagues in the Senate Finance Committee for well over a decade now and I was pleased that back in 1978, a formal day of hearings was held on this issue.

It is an unfortunate fact that mental health care under the Social Security Act is simply not given the priority that it deserves. Not only is the basic benefit less than that provided for physical health care, but, further, the law does not provide for the type of professional autonomy for each of the mental health disciplines which reflects the current state of practice across our Nation.

Clinical psychologists, for example, receive on the average of 5½ years of graduate professional training which includes at least 1 full year of a clinical internship. Not only are they trained in various therapeutic and diagnostic skills, but they also are on the cutting edge of developing various innovative programs such as biofeedback services and crisis intervention care.

During the last congressional session, we are successful in amending the Federal Criminal Code in order to ensure that their practitioners would be given complete parity whenever the issue of mental competence was raised in the Federal criminal system. Further, in the closing hours of the 98th Congress, my colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee were supportive of modifying the HMO Medicare provision to ensure, for the first time, that psychologists in HMO's would be deemed autonomous professionals. Hopefully, during this session of Congress we will be able to similarly modify other relevant aspects of the Medicare and Medicaid Programs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 123

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (G);

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (H); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(I) psychologist services;".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"PSYCHOLOGIST SERVICES

"(ee)(1) The term 'psychologist services' means services performed by an individual who is a psychologist (as defined in paragraph (2)) that such individual is legally authorized to perform under the law (or the regulatory mechanism provided by law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not such individual is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'psychologist' means an individual who (A) is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which such individual so practices, (B) possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or in the case of an individual licensed or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possesses a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of mental health service providers in psychology approved by the Secretary, and (C) possesses at least two years of supervised experience in health service, at least one year of which is postdegree.".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) psychologist services (as defined in section 1861(ee)); and".

(b) Section 1902 (a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)";

(2) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)"; and

(3) by striking out "paragraphs numbered (1) through (17)" in paragraph (10)(C)(iv) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs numbered (1) through (18)".

SEC. 3. (a) The amendments made by the first section of this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month which begins more than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by section 2 of this Act shall be effective with respect to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning more than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act that is determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to require State legislation in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by section 2, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet these additional requirements before the first day of the calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. DURENBERGER (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. HUMPHREY):

S. 124. A bill entitled "Safe Drinking Water Amendments Act of 1985"; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I am today introducing amendments to the Safe Drinking Water Act of 1974. These amendments will extend the authorization for the program and make substantive changes in the structure of existing law. These amendments are cosponsored by Senator STAFFORD, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Environmental and Public Works, and by Senators BAUCUS and HUMPHREY who also serve on the Environmental Committee.

For a time it looked like there might be a chance to reauthorize the Drinking Water Act in the last few days of the 98th Congress. After months of hearings and discussions, the House Energy and Commerce Committee reported a bill which was passed by the other body a few days later. That bill was not unlike legislation that I had introduced in March of 1984 and it appeared that the prospects for quick and successful action were good.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works proceeded to mark up on a bill and reported it to the floor of the Senate. However, disputes over sections on groundwater protection and the health standard contained in the act ultimately prevented the Senate from taking action in the waning days. Although Agency officials, staff of the House and the Senate and representatives of various segments of the public with an interest put in their best efforts to reach agreement on all the differences between the House and Senate language, a complete package was not achieved.

Mr. President, I review this history in part to explain the nature of the introduction I am making today. In addition to the bill incorporating a reauthorization and substantive changes, I am also introducing amendments to the bill. There are three amendments covering the health standard, disposal of production brines and judicial review of Agency actions under SDWA. These amendments reflect issues that remained unresolved at the conclusion of the last Congress. To make sure that the committee has all the necessary language before it when it proceeds to markup in this Congress, I offer these amendments to be printed in the RECORD. My introduction of each of these items should not be interpreted as an intention to support such amendments, or amendments of a similar nature, at markup.

In most respects, the bill I am offering today is the same as the legislation reported in the last Congress. However, there is one change incorporated in the bill which deserves mention. Senator MOYNIHAN on behalf of the city of New York strenuously objected to the filtration language in the bill reported by the committee. Working with EPA, New York City and State officials and Senator MOYNIHAN, we have been able to craft a new filtration section which achieves the same level of protection for public health without making large systems of good quality like the New York City water supply system go through unnecessary governmental redtape.

Mr. President, the Safe Drinking Water Act was passed by the Congress in 1974 to address the problem of contamination of public water systems by synthetic organic chemicals. Studies by the Environmental Protection Agency early in the decade had found high concentrations of these contaminants in the drinking water of several major U.S. cities. It was the toxic soup syndrome that the Congress intended to eliminate with this statute. More than 10 years later, Congress can take little satisfaction in the effectiveness of the law.

The Safe Drinking Water Act was an amendment to the Public Health Act. Since the 1960's, the Public Health Service had been establishing health standards for drinking water. In 1974 there were a handful of standards primarily for inorganics, conventional pollutants, and biological contaminants. In 1974, Congress sought to build on the work of the Public Health Service. It assigned the program to EPA and instructed the Agency to set standards for every contaminant that may have any adverse effect on human health. Today, there are still only a handful of standards. The Environmental Protection Agency has done virtually nothing to use the authority granted to it by the Congress in the Safe Drinking Water Act to protect public health. The amendments we offer today are designed to correct that deficiency.

The corrections take two major forms. First, the bill will require the Administrator to issue standards for a list of chemical contaminants by a date certain. The chemicals listed have already been noticed by EPA in the Federal Register as matters of concern. If the Administrator should decide that any particular contaminant on this list does not pose a threat to human health, the Administrator may publish a finding that regulation by standard setting is not necessary in his judgment.

But even this automatic listing process will not assure that every contaminant of drinking water that threatens health is reviewed by the Agency. Therefore a second step is included in the bill. The bill requires EPA to establish a schedule that will assure monitoring for unregulated contaminants by all public water supply systems. If this monitoring should indicate contamination, even if there is no national health standards for the contaminant, the water supply system is required to notify the public, the State agency and those consuming the water of the presence of the contaminant.

Mr. President, there is one final issue that I need to mention in these introductory remarks. The subject is groundwater protection. The Safe Drinking Water Act currently on the books provides the principal form of protection for groundwater quality in the United States. SDWA establishes a program to regulate the injection of hazardous waste into underground depositories. Today, 59 percent of all the hazardous waste disposed of in the United States is injected by deep well into the underground.

The bill I am introducing and the legislation which passed the House in the last Congress seeks to build further protection for groundwater quality into the drinking water law. Both contain modest programs to protect aquifers which provide the sole source of drinking water for a community. The House bill also contained an omnibus groundwater protection program. And both bills tighten up the existing regulation of underground injection of hazardous waste.

Mr. President, I am one who strongly believes that the Federal Government needs to take further steps to protect groundwater quality. In fact, I believe that omnibus legislation is necessary. But I do not think that groundwater protection should be addressed by the Congress in the context of amendments to the Drinking Water Act. A new demonstration program on sole source aquifers is appropriate. Tightening the existing injection control program is appropriate. But if we set out to develop an across-the-board program to protect the groundwater resource, then I think that we should do so in a separate bill. It is likely to take us some time for hearings, thought and discussion. Not much time. We can get it done in this Congress, if we are diligent. But the effort to develop a national groundwater policy should not retard our efforts to fix the drinking water program.

I intend to begin hearings on groundwater protection early in February, or as soon thereafter as committee assignments are made. We need to look at the recent report of the Office of Technology Assessment. We need to look at the EPA groundwater strategy, at existing State protection programs, at the contaminants and the sources. After a series of hearings but not much later than April of this year, I intend to introduce groundwater protection legislation. But it is my sincere hope that well before the first of April the bill I am introducing today will be back before the full Senate and that the prospects for sending it to the President at an early date are good.

I know that the chairman of the Environment Committee shares those sentiments. The Safe Drinking Water Act is high on his list of priorities. And I have appreciated his support for my efforts to reauthorize and correct the program at an early date.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 124

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

PUBLIC WATER SYSTEMS

NATIONAL PRIMARY DRINKING WATER REGULATIONS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1412(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Effective on the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, each national interim primary drinking water regulation promulgated under this section before such date of enactment shall be deemed to be a national primary drinking water regulation under subsection (b). No such regulation shall be required to comply with the standards set forth in subsection (b)(2) unless such regulation is amended to establish a different maximum contaminant level after the date of enactment of such amendments.".

(b) Section 1412(b) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking paragraphs (1), (2) and (3), and inserting in lieu thereof the following;

"(b)(1)(A) In the case of the 14 contaminants listed in the Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking published in volume 47, Federal Register, page 9352, not later than 15 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall—

"(i) simultaneously propose maximum contaminant level goals and national primary drinking water regulations and, after opportunity for public comment, simultaneously publish maximum contaminant level goals and promulgate national primary drinking water regulations for those contaminants which may have any adverse effect on the health of persons; or

"(ii) make and publish in the Federal Register a determination that promulgation of a national primary drinking water regulation is not justified under the criterion in clause (i). Such determination by the Administrator shall be considered a final agency action for purposes of judicial review under Chapter VII of Title V of the United States Code.

"(B) In the case of each of the contaminants listed in the Advance Notice of Proposed Rulemaking published in volume 48, Federal Register, page 45502, not later than 36 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall—

"(i) simultaneously propose maximum contaminant level goals and national primary drinking water regulations and, after opportunity for public comment, simultaneously publish maximum contaminant level goals and promulgate national primary drinking water regulations for those contaminants which may have any adverse effect on the health of persons; or

"(ii) make and publish in the Federal Register a determination that promulgation of a national primary drinking water regulation is not justified under the criterion in clause (i). Such determination by the Administrator shall be considered a final agency action for purposes of judicial review under Chapter VII of Title V of the U.S. Code.

"(C)(i) The Administrator shall publish maximum contaminant level goals and simultaneously promulgate national primary drinking water regulations for each substance (other than a substance referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) for which a national primary drinking water regulation was promulgated) which, in the judgment of the Administrator, may have any adverse effect on the health of persons. On January 1, 1988, and at annual intervals thereafter, the Administrator shall publish a list establishing priorities for the review of substances (other than substances referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B)) which may require regulation under this Act in order to prevent known or anticipated adverse effects on the health of persons. Such priorities shall be based upon the extent to which such contaminant occurs in public water systems throughout the United States or on the known or anticipated adverse effects of such substance on the health of persons. In establishing such priorities the Administrator's consideration shall include, but not be limited to, substances regulated as toxic water pollutants under section 307 of the Clean Water Act and substances registered as pesticides under the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

"(ii) For each contaminant listed on the priority list, the Administrator shall, within three years of listing,

"(I) simultaneously propose a maximum contaminant level goal and a national primary drinking water regulation and, after opportunity for public comment, simultaneously publish a maximum contaminant level goal and promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation for those contaminants which may have adverse effects on the health of persons; or

"(II) make and publish in the Federal Register a determination that promulgation of a national primary drinking water regulation is not justified under the criterion in subclause (I). Such determination by the Administrator shall be considered a final agency action for purposes of judicial review under Chapter VII of Title V of the U.S. Code.

"(2) Each maximum contaminant level goal established under this subsection shall be set at the level at which no known or anticipated adverse effects on the health of persons occur and which allows an adequate margin of safety. Each national primary drinking water regulation for a contaminant for which a maximum contaminant level goal is established under this subsection shall specify a maximum level for such contaminant which is as close to the maximum contaminant level goal as is feasible.

"(3) The Administrator may, after opportunity for public comment, change maximum contaminant level goals, or the list established under paragraph (C), and shall simultaneously with such change, amend the national primary drinking water regulations concerned accordingly.

"(4) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'feasible' means feasible with the use of the best technology, treatment techniques and other means which the Administrator finds, after examination for efficacy under field conditions and not solely under laboratory conditions, are available (taking cost into consideration). For the purpose of paragraph (2), the use of granular activated carbon is available (taking costs into consideration) for the control of synthetic organic chemicals, and any technology, treatment technique, or other means found to be the best available for the control of synthetic organic chemicals must be at least as effective in controlling synthetic organic chemicals as the use of granular activated carbon.

"(5) Each national primary drinking water regulation which establishes a maximum contaminant level shall list the technology, treatment techniques, and other means which the Administrator finds to be feasible for purposes of meeting such maximum contaminant level, but a primary drinking water regulation under this paragraph shall not require that a specified technology, treatment technique, or other means be used for purposes of meeting such contaminant level.".

"(6)(A) The Administrator is authorized to promulgate a national primary drinking water regulation that requires the use of a treatment technique in lieu of establishing a maximum contaminant level, if the Administrator makes a finding that it is not economically or technologically feasible to ascertain the level of the contaminant. In such case, the Administrator shall identify those treatment techniques which, in the Administrator's judgment, would prevent known or anticipated adverse effects on the health of persons to the extent feasible. Such regulations shall specify each treatment technique known to the Administrator which meets the requirements of this paragraph, but the Administrator may grant a variance from any such specified treatment technique in accordance with section 1415(a)(3).

"(B) If any contaminant referred to in paragraphs (b)(1) (A) or (B) is listed under this paragraph (and a national primary drinking water regulation requiring the use of treatment techniques is simultaneously promulgated under this paragraph for such contaminant), the listing and promulgation under this paragraph shall be made on the date referred to in paragraphs (b)(1) (A) and (B) for the establishment or primary drinking water regulations.

"(C)(i) Not later than 12 months after the enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall propose and promulgate national primary drinking water regulations specifying criteria under which filtration (including coagulation and sedimentation, as appropriate) is required as a treatment technique for public water systems supplied by surface water sources. In promulgating such rules, the Administrator shall consider the quality of source waters, protection afforded by watershed management, treatment practices (such as disinfection and length of water storage) and other factors relevant to protection of health.

"(ii) In lieu of the provisions of section 1415 the Administrator shall specify procedures by which the State determines which public water systems within its jurisdiction shall adopt filtration under the criteria of clause (i). The State may require the public water system to provide studies or other information, to assist in this determination. The procedures shall provide notice and opportunity for public hearing on this determination. If the State determines that filtration is required, the State shall prescribe a schedule for compliance by the public water system with the filtration requirement. A schedule shall require compliance as expeditiously as practicable (as the state may reasonably determine).

"(iii) Within 18 months from the time that the Administrator establishes the criteria and procedures in this subparagraph, a State with primary enforcement responsibility shall adopt any necessary regulations to implement this subparagraph. Within two years of adoption of such regulations the State shall make determinations regarding filtration for all the public water systems within its jurisdiction supplied by surface waters.

"(iv) If a State does not have primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems, the Administrator shall have the same authority to make the determination in clause (ii) in such State as the State would have under that clause. Any filtration requirement or schedule under this subpara-graph shall be treated as if it were a requirement of a national primary drinking water regulation.

"(D) The Administrator shall propose and promulgate regulations requiring disinfection as a treatment technique for all public water systems. The Administrator shall promulgate a rule specifying criteria that will be used by the Administrator or delegated State authorities to grant variances from this requirement according to the provisions of sections 1415(a)(1)(B) and 1415(a)(3), prior to implementation of this paragraph. The Administrator or the delegated State authority shall, to the extent feasible, provide technical assistance to small public water systems in complying with this subsection.

(d) Paragraphs (4) and (5) of section 1412(b) of the Safe Drinking Water Act are amended by striking "Revised national" both times the words occur and inserting both times in lieu thereof "National". Paragraphs (4), (5) and (6) of section 1412(b) of the Safe Drinking Water Act are redesignated as paragraphs (7), (8), and (9) respectively.

"(e) Section 1412(e) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(f) The Administrator shall provide the Science Advisory Board, established under the Environmental Research, Development and Demonstration Act of 1978, an opportunity to comment prior to proposal of a maximum contaminant level goal and national primary drinking water regulation.".

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1414(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by inserting "and such public water system" after the words "notify the State".

"(b) Section 1412(a)(1)(B) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as following:

"(B) If beyond the thirtieth day after the Administrator's notification the State has not commenced appropriate enforcement action, the Administrator shall issue an order under subsection (g) requiring the public water system to comply with such regulation or requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b).".

(c) Section 1414(a)(2) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "he may commence a civil action under subsection (b)" and inserting the following: "he shall issue an order under subsection (g) requiring the public water system to comply with such regulation or requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b)".

(d) Section 1414 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) In any case in which the Administrator is authorized to bring a civil action under this section with respect to any regulation, schedule, or other requirement, the Administrator also may issue an order to require compliance with such regulation, schedule, or other requirement.

"(2) An order issued under this subsection shall not take effect until after notice and opportunity for public hearing and, in the case of a State having primary enforcement responsibility, until after the Administrator has provided the State with an opportunity to confer with the Administrator regarding the proposed order. A copy of any order proposed to be issued under this subsection shall be sent to the appropriate State agency of the State involved if the State has primary enforcement responsibility for public water systems in that State. Any order issued under this subsection shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the violation. In any case in which an order under this subsection is issued to a corporation, a copy of such order shall be issued to appropriate corporate officers.

"(3)(A) Any person who violates, fails, or refuses to comply with an order under paragraph (2) shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 per day of violation.

"(B) Whenever a civil penalty sought by the Administrator under this paragraph does not exceed a total of $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by the Administrator after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of title 5 of the United States Code. The Administrator shall have the discretion to compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty assessed under this subsection against any person.

"(C) Whenever a civil penalty sought by the Administrator exceeds $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by a civil action brought by the Administrator in the appropriate United States district court (as determined under the provisions of title 28 of the United States Code).

"(D) If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Administrator, the Attorney General shall recover the amount for which such person is liable in any appropriate district court of the United States. In any such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.".

"(e) Section 1414 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "Failure by State to Assure" from the title.

PUBLIC NOTIFICATION

SEC. 4. (a) Section 1414(c) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking everything after the sentence "The Administrator shall by regulation prescribe the form, manner, and frequency for giving notice under this subsection," to the sentence beginning "The Administrator may also require" and inserting the following: "Within 12 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall amend such regulations to provide for different types and frequencies of notice based on the differences between violations which are intermittent or infrequent and violations which are continuous or frequent. Such regulations shall also take into account the seriousness of any potential adverse health effects which may be involved. Notice of any violation of a maximum contaminant level and any other notice of a violation designated by the Administrator as continuous or posing a serious potential adverse health effect shall be given no less frequently than every three months and in no case shall notice be given less frequently than annually. Such notice shall include notification in a newspaper of general circulation serving the area served by the public water system. Notice under this subsection shall provide a clear and readily understandable explanation of the violation, the steps that the system is taking to correct such violation, and the necessity for seeking alternative water supplies, if any, until the violation is corrected. Until such amended regulations are promulgated, the regulations in effect on the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985 shall remain in effect.".

VARIANCES

SEC. 5. (a) Section 1415(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the word "despite" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ". A variance may only be issued to a system after the system's".

(b) Section 1415(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the word "best" before technology; by striking the word "generally" before the word "available" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "best"; and by adding after "(taking costs into consideration.)" the following: "The Administrator shall propose and promulgate his finding of the best available technology, treatment techniques or other means available for each contaminant for purposes of this subsection at the time he proposes and promulgates a maximum contaminant level for each such contaminant. The Administrator's finding of best available technology, treatment techniques or other means for purposes of this subsection may vary depending on the number of persons served by the system or for other physical conditions related to engineering feasibility and costs of compliance with maximum contaminant levels as considered appropriate by the Administrator.".

(c) Section 1415(a)(1)(A) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "within one year of the date" and inserting in lieu thereof "at the time".

(d) Section 1415(a)(1)(A)(ii) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding after the words "water system of such" the word "additional".

EXEMPTIONS

SEC. 6. (a) Section 1416(b)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "within one year of the date" and inserting in lieu thereof "at the time".

(b) Section 1416(b)(2)(A)(i) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the word "interim" and striking the words "not later than January 1, 1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985.

(c) Section 1416(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the word "revised"; and by striking the words "not later than seven years after the date such requirement takes effect" and inserting in lieu thereof "other than a regulation referred to in section 1412(a), 12 months after the date of the issuance of the exemption".

(d) Section 1416(b)(2)(B) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended to read as follows:

"(B) The final date for compliance provided in any schedule in the case of any exemption may be extended by the State (in the case of a State which has primary enforcement responsibility) or by the Administrator (in any other case) for a period not to exceed 3 years after the date of the issuance of the exemption if the public water system establishes that—

"(i) the system cannot meet the standard without capital improvements which cannot be completed within the period of such exemption;

"(ii) in the case of a system which needs financial assistance for the necessary improvements, the system has entered into an agreement to obtain such financial assistance; or

"(iii) the system has entered into an enforceable agreement to become a part of a regional public water system; and the system is taking all practicable steps to meet the standard.

"(C) In the case of a system which does not serve more than 500 service connections and which needs financial assistance for the necessary improvements, an exemption granted under subsection (b)(2)(A) (i) or (ii) may be renewed for one or more additional 2-year periods if the system establishes that it continues to meet the requirements of subsection (B).".

MONITORING FOR UNREGULATED CONTAMINANTS

SEC. 7. (a) Section 1445(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In requiring a public water system to monitor under this subsection, the Administrator may take into consideration the system size and the contaminants likely to be found in the system's drinking water.".

(b) Section 1445(a) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding "(1)" after "(a)" and adding the following at the end thereof:

"(2) Not later than 18 months after date of enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall promulgate regulations for every public water system to conduct a monitoring program for unregulated contaminants. Such regulations shall require monitoring of drinking water supplied by the system, and shall vary the frequency and schedule of monitoring requirements for systems based on the number of persons served by the system, the source of supply, and the contaminants likely to be found. Each system shall be required to monitor at least once within five years of the effective date of such regulations unless the Administrator requires more frequent monitoring.".

"(3) Regulations under paragraph (2) shall list unregulated contaminants for which systems may be required to monitor, and shall include criteria by which the primary enforcement authority in each State could show cause for deletion of a contaminant from the designated list. The primary State enforcement authority may delete contaminants for an individual system, in accordance with these criteria, with an approved assessment of the contaminants potentialiy to be found in the system. Any such State must submit an assessment to the Administrator which shall be regarded as approved 60 days after its submission unless the Administrator disapproves the assessment.

"(4) Notification of the availability of the results of the monitoring program required under paragraph (2), and notification of the availability of the results of the monitoring program referred to in paragraph (5), shall be given to the persons served by the system and the Administrator.

"(5) The Administrator may waive the monitoring requirement of this subsection for a system which has conducted a monitoring program after January 1, 1983, if the Administrator determines the program to have been consistent with the regulations promulgated under this section.

"(6) Any system supplying less than 150 service connections shall be regarded as complying with this subsection if such system provides water samples according to the rules established by the Administrator. There are authorized to be appropriated $30,000,000 in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986 to remain available until expended to carry out the provisions of this subsection."

TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 8. (a) Section 1442 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(g) The Administrator is authorized to provide technical assistance to small public water systems to enable such systems to achieve and maintain compliance with national drinking water regulations. Such assistance may include 'circuit-rider' programs, training, and preliminary engineering studies. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subsection $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986 through 1989.".

TAMPERING WITH PUBLIC WATER SYSTEMS

SEC. 9. Part D of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"TAMPERING WITH PUBLIC WATER SYSTEMS

"SEC. 1432. (a) Any person who tampers with a public water system shall be fined not more than $50,000, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(b) Any person who attempts to tamper, or makes a threat to tamper, with a public drinking water system shall be fined not more than $20,000, or imprisoned for not more than 3 years, or both.

"(c) The Administrator may bring a civil action in the appropriate United States district court (as determined under the provisions of title 28 of the United States Code) against any person who tampers, attempts to tamper, or makes a threat to tamper with a public water system. The court may impose on such person a civil penalty of not more than $50,000 for such tampering or not more than $20,000 for such attempt or threat.

"(d) For the purposes of this section, the term 'tamper' means—

"(1) to introduce a contaminant into a public water system with the intention of harming persons; or

"(2) to otherwise interfere with the operation of a public water system with the intention of harming persons.".

PROTECTION OF UNDERGROUND SOURCES OF DRINKING WATER

RESTRICTIONS ON UNDERGROUND INJECTION OF HAZARDOUS WASTE AND REGULATION OF STATE PROGRAMS

SEC. 10. (a) Section 1421(b)(2)(A), section 1422(c)(1), and section 1425(a)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act are each amended by inserting "or natural gas storage operations" after "production".

(b) Part C of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"PROHIBITION ON HAZARDOUS WASTE INJECTION

"SEC. 1426. (a) No hazardous waste may be disposed of by underground injection—

"(1) into a formation which contains (within one quarter mile of the well used for such underground injection) an underground source of drinking water; or

"(2) above such a formation.

The prohibitions established under this section shall take effect 6 months after the enactment of the Hazardous and Solid Waste Amendments of 1985 except in the case of any State in which identical or more stringent prohibitions are in effect before such date. The prohibition established under this subsection shall be treated for purposes of this Act as a prohibition established pursuant to an applicable underground injection program.

"(b) Subsection (a) shall not apply to the injection of contaminated ground water into the aquifer from which it was withdrawn, if—

"(1) such injection is—

"(A) a response action taken under section 104 or 106 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, or

"(B) part of corrective action required under the Solid Waste Disposal Act intended to clean up such contamination;

"(2) such contaminated ground water is treated to substantially reduce hazardous constituents prior to such injection; and

"(3) such response action or corrective action will, upon completion, be sufficient to protect human health and the environment.

"(c)(1) Each State which assumes primary enforcement responsibility under this Act shall adopt a program to carry out the prohibition established under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) (unless such State has adopted and is carrying out a more stringent prohibition).

"(2) The Administrator shall promulgate regulations to carry out the prohibitions established under paragraph (1) and (2) of subsection (a) for each State which is not exercising primary enforcement responsibility under this Act for enforcement of such prohibitions.

"(d) The term 'hazardous waste' as used in this section means any hazardous waste, as defined in the Solid Waste Disposal Act, which is listed or identified under section 3001 of that Act.".

"REGULATION OF STATE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 1427. (a) No later than 18 months after enactment of the Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments of 1985, the Administrator shall revise regulations issued under this Act to require ground water monitoring at locations and in such a way that would provide the earliest possible detection of fluid migration into, or in the direction of, underground drinking water sources from a Class I injection well unless the Administrator or delegated State authority concludes, on the basis of the applicant's demonstration, that such monitoring is not necessary because no potential exists for migration from the injection zone that may be harmful to human health or the environment.

"(b) The Administrator shall submit a report to Congress no later than September, 1987, summarizing the results of State surveys, currently required by the Administrator, three years after the delegation of the program, under this section to a primary State enforcement authority. The report shall include the following information:

"(1) the numbers and categories of Class V wells which discharge non-hazardous waste into or above an underground source of drinking water.

"(2) the primary contamination problems associated with different categories of these disposal wells, and

"(3) recommendations for minimum design, construction, installation, and siting requirements that should be applied to protect ground water from such contamination wherever necessary.".

ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 11. (a)(1) Section 1423(a)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking out all after the first sentence and substituting the following: "If beyond the thirteenth day after the Administrator's notification the State has not commenced appropriate enforcement action, the Administrator shall issue an order under subsection (d) requiring the person to comply with such requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b)(1).".

(2) Section 1423(a)(2) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "he may commence a civil action under subsection (b)(1)" and substituting the following: "he shall issue an order under subsection (d) requiring the person to comply with such requirement or shall commence a civil action under subsection (b)(1).".

(3) Section 1423(b)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water is amended by striking out the first sentence thereof and substituting the following: "Civil actions referred to in paragraphs (1) and (2), subsection (a) shall be brought in the appropriate United States district court and such court shall have jurisdiction to require compliance with any requirement of an applicable underground injection program.".

(b) Section 1423(b)(1) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking in the last sentence "$5,000" and substituting "$25,000" and striking "60" and substituting "30".

(c) Section 1423 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(d)(1) In any case in which the Administrator is authorized to bring a civil action under this section with respect to any requirement of an applicable underground injection control program, the Administrator may also issue an order to require compliance with such requirement.

"(2) An order issued under this subsection shall not take effect until after notice and opportunity for public hearing and, in the case of a State having primary enforcement responsibility for underground water sources (within the meaning of section 1422(b)(3) or 1425(c)) until after the Administrator has provided the State with an opportunity to confer with the Administrator regarding the proposed order. A copy of any order proposed to be issued under this subsection shall be sent to the appropriate State agency involved if the State has primary enforcement responsibility. Any order issued under this subsection shall state with reasonable specificity the nature of the violation. In any case in which an order under this subsection is issued to a corporation, a copy of such order shall be issued to appropriate corporate officers.

"(3)(A) Any person who violates, or fails or refuses to comply with an order under paragraph (2) shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty of not more than $25,000 per day of violation.

"(B) Whenever the civil penalty sought by the Administrator under this paragraph does not exceed $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by the Administrator after notice and opportunity for a hearing on the record in accordance with section 554 of title 5 of the United States Code. The Administrator shall have the discretion to compromise, modify, or remit, with or without conditions, any civil penalty assessed under this subsection against any person.

"(C) Whenever the civil penalty sought by the Administrator under this paragraph exceeds $5,000, the penalty shall be assessed by a civil action brought by the Administrator in the appropriate United States district court (as determined under the provisions of title 28 of the United States Code).

"(D) If any person fails to pay an assessment of a civil penalty after it has become a final and unappealable order, or after the appropriate court of appeals has entered final judgment in favor of the Administrator, the Attorney General shall recover the amount for which such person is liable in any appropriate district court of the United States. In any such action, the validity and appropriateness of the final order imposing the civil penalty shall not be subject to review.".

(d) Section 1423 of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking the words "FAILURE OF STATE TO ASSURE" from the title.

CRITICAL AQUIFER PROTECTION AREA DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 12. Part C of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following new section:

"CRITICAL AQUIFER PROTECTION AREA DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 1428(a) The purpose of this section is to establish procedures for development, implementation, and assessment of demonstration programs designed to protect critical aquifer protection areas located within areas designated as sole or principal source aquifers under section 1424(e) of the Safe Drinking Water Act.

(b) For purposes of this section, critical aquifer protection area means an area located within an area for which an application for designation as a sole or principal source aquifer pursuant to section 1424(e) has been submitted to or approved by the Administrator as of the date of enactment of this section and which satisfies the criteria established by the Administrator under subsection (d).

(c) Any State, municipal, or local government or political subdivision thereof or any planning entity (including any interstate regional planning entity) that identifies a critical aquifer protection area over which it has authority or jurisdiction may apply to the Administrator for the selection of such area for a demonstration program under subsection (e). Any applicant shall consult with other appropriate government or planning entities with authority or jurisdiction in such area prior to application. The application shall include a certification by the Governor that the plan is consistent with State laws, regulations, and policies.

(d) Within 12 months of the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall, by rule, establish criteria for identifying critical aquifer protection areas under this section. In establishing such criteria, the Administrator shall consider the following:

(1) the existence of one or more recharge zones through which significant volumes of ground water flow to an underground source of drinking water;

(2) the number of persons or the proportion of population using the ground water as a drinking water source;

(3) the availability of alternative supplies of drinking water;

(4) the vulnerability of the aquifer to contamination due to hydrogeologic characteristics;

(5) the economic, social and ecological benefits that would result to the area from maintenance of high quality water recharging the aquifer; and

(6) the economic, social, and ecological costs that would result from degradation of the quality of recharged water.

(e) An application submitted to the Administrator by any applicant shall propose boundaries for the critical aquifer protection area within their jurisdiction and may include a comprehensive management plan for the proposed protection area. Such plan shall be designed to maintain the quality of the ground water in the critical protection area through maintenance, to the maximum extent possible, of the natural vegetative and hydrogeological conditions. The following elements may be included in such a protection plan:

"(A) a map showing the detailed boundary of the critical protection area;

"(B) a determination of the quality and quantity of the ground water recharged within the critical protection area;

"(C) an identification of existing and potential point and nonpoint sources of ground water degradation, ground water flow patterns, and the relationship between surface water management and ground water quality and recharge;

"(D) a resource assessment of the amount, location, and type of human development and activity which the ecosystem can sustain while still maintaining existing ground and surface water quality and protecting unique ecological features related to maintenance of water quality;

"(E) specific actions and management practices to be implemented in the critical protection area to prevent adverse impacts on water quality and recharge capabilities;

"(F) a program for State and/or local implementation of the plan in a manner that will insure the continued, uniform, consistent protection of the critical protection area in accord with the purposes of this section;

"(G) adequate personnel, funding, and authority to carry out the plan;

"(H) proposed limits on activities and projects financially assisted by Federal, State, or local government which may contribute to degradation of such ground water or any loss of natural surface and subsurface infiltration or purification capability of the critical protection area watershed;

"(I) consideration of specific techniques, which may include clustering, transfer of development rights, and other innovative measures sufficient to achieve the objectives of this section;

"(J) consideration of the establishment of a State institution to facilitate and assist in funding a development transfer credit system.".

(f) Within 120 days after receipt of an application under this section, the Administrator must approve or disapprove the application based on a determination that the critical protection area satisfies the criteria established under subsection (d) and that a demonstration program for the area would provide a useful model for other ground water protection programs. Any petitioner may modify and resubmit any application which is not approved. Upon approval of an application, the Administrator may enter into a cooperative agreement with the applicant to establish a demonstration program. Such program shall include the development and implementation of a plan for the protection of the ground water recharged through the critical aquifer protection area.

(g) Upon entering a cooperative agreement under subsection (e), the Administrator may provide to the applicant, on a matching basis, a grant of 50 per centum of the costs of developing and implementing the plan established under this section. The total amount of grants under this section for any one aquifer, designated under section 1424(e), shall not exceed $2,000,000 in any fiscal year.

(h) No funds authorized under this subsection may be used to fund activities funded under other sections of this Act or the Clean Water Act, the Solid Waste Disposal Act, the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, or other federal statutes.

(i) No funds authorized to be appropriated under this section may be used to clean up individual sources of contamination or to bring such sources into compliance with Federal, State or local statutes.

(j) Nothing under this section shall be construed to amend, supercede or abrogate rights to quantities of water which have been established by interstate water compacts, Supreme Court decrees, or State water laws; or any requirement imposed or right provided under any Federal or State environmental or public health statute.

(k) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section $25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1986 through 1989.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 13. (a) Section 1442(f) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by inserting the following at the end thereof: "There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out subsection (a)(2)(B), $9,600,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $11,300,000 for the fiscal year 1989. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this section (other than subsection (g), subsection (a)(2)(B), and provisions relating to research), $42,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $47,000,000 for the fiscal year 1989.".

(b) Section 1443(a)(7) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "For the purposes of making grants under paragraph (1) there are authorized to be appropriated $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $45,000,000 for the fiscal year 1989.".

(c) Section 1443(b)(5) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "For the purpose of making grants under paragraph (1) there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986, $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1987, $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1988, and $28,000,000 for the fiscal year 1989.".

(d) Section 1441(f) of the Safe Drinking Water Act is amended by striking out "in effect" and all that follows and substituting "in effect for more than one year.".

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 125. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, to require that the revenues of any new taxes be used to reduce the Federal deficit, and for other purposes.

DEFICIT REDUCTION TRUST FUND

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am reintroducing a bill to establish a Deficit Reduction Trust Fund and provide that any new revenues generated by new tax laws and received by the Treasury Department after today shall be put into the fund.

In November 1983, I first presented this idea during Finance Committee deliberations on deficit reduction proposals. Since then it has generated considerable interest and support. I am, therefore, pleased to reintroduce legislation to implement this concept.

Mr. President, the purpose of this measure is simple—to put any new revenues into a fund that is off limits and make sure that the money is used for deficit reductions.

For several years every candidate for Congress has attacked Government spending and criticized budget deficits. Everyone wants prompt action in bringing down the horrendous budget deficits we face—current estimates of about $200 billion per year until the end of this decade.

The debt limit went over the $1 trillion mark 3 years ago. It took us over 200 years to reach that awful figure; yet, we will reach the $2 trillion figure before 1990 at the current rate. In short, we are rolling up new debt at an unbelievable rate, and in the process we are putting severe and unreasonable burdens on future generations.

We all know the problem, Mr. President. The question is—how do we tackle these deficits and get them down? Everyone has his or her own solution. Although the deficit cries out for action, it may be that little will be done about the problem this year. Regardless, we need to have the necessary machinery in place so that if new revenues are used to tackle the deficits in the future, that those efforts could be successful.

Accordingly, I am proposing a trust fund concept. I want to make it clear, Mr. President, that this legislation does not deal with taxes in any way—that debate is for another day—but it does set up a trust fund that will be used for deficit reduction. If we are going to reduce the deficit, we should do so, and not use any new revenues to start new programs, or expand existing ones. It is for this reason that my bill also contains a provision which would prohibit any new program from being started while the budget contains a deficit.

Mr. President, I know that some will disagree with the trust fund idea, but I believe it is the proper way to proceed. Trust funds have worked very well in this country when they have been used, and I think the American people have supported their creation when the money going into the fund was used for a specific purpose.

The most familiar example is the trust fund set up to build the Interstate Highway System. We used the new revenues flowing into that fund to build an extraordinary highway system, and it has worked very well. Another example is the fund set up by the Dingell-Johnson Act which provides money for the promotion of sport fishing. Both of these examples prove that if we commit ourselves to the task at hand, and use the trust fund, it will work.

Mr. President, I would like to point out that other steps could be taken in addition to what I'm proposing today. For example, a budget freeze would be workable and would give the trust fund an opportunity to begin to reduce the debt. I joined the efforts of many Senators the last 2 years, and I will certainly work with them again.

Another example, Mr. President, would be the proposed constitutional amendment to balance the budget, which I also supported. It would provide the necessary structure for the Congress to eliminate annual deficits, and I think a deficit reduction trust fund would work very well in conjunction with that amendment.

Mr. President, this proposal provided a useful mechanism that can be helpful in holding the line on Government spending, reducing deficits, and getting our fiscal affairs in order.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 125

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) subchapter A of chapter 98 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to establishment of Trust Funds) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 9504. DEFICIT REDUCTION TRUST FUND.

"(a) CREATION OF TRUST FUND.—There is established within the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the 'Deficit Reduction Trust Fund' which shall consist of such amounts as may be appropriated to such fund under this section.

"(b) APPROPRIATION OF CERTAIN AMOUNTS TO TRUST FUND.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There are hereby appropriated to the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund amounts equivalent to the revenues received into the Treasury of the United States by reason of any provision of law enacted after January 1, 1985.

"(2) EXTENSIONS.—No amount shall be appropriated to the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund under paragraph (1) with respect to any revenues received into the Treasury of the United States by reason of any provision of an Act or joint resolution which merely extends a tax, or any other provision of law, that was in effect on September 10, 1984.

"(c) EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS FROM TRUST FUND.—Amounts in the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund shall be available only:

(1) to pay at maturity, or to redeem or purchase before maturity, obligations of the Federal Government included in the public debt which are canceled and retired upon such payment, redemption, or purchase, but only to the extent provided by appropriations Acts and joint resolutions; and

(2) to the extent such funds are not expended before the last day of the Fiscal year pursuant to the provisions of subparagraph (1) above, to be transferred to the general receipts account of the Department of the Treasury on the last day of each fiscal year.

(b)(1) Subsection (b) of section 9602 of such Code (relating to investment) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) NO APPLICATION TO DEFICIT REDUCTION TRUST FUND.—This subsection shall not apply to the Deficit Reduction Trust Fund."

(2) The table of contents for subchapter A of chapter 98 of such code is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"Section 9504. Deficit Reduction Trust Fund.".

SEC. 2. (a) No appropriation may be made for any deficit fiscal year with respect to any program for which appropriations for fiscal year 1986 were not authorized.

(b) For purposes of this section, the term "deficit fiscal year" means any fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1985 for which the total budget outlays specified in the first concurrent resolution for such fiscal year exceed the revenues specified in such concurrent resolution.

S. 126. A bill to improve the Department of State; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CREATION OF THE POSITION OF UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR AGRICULTURAL AFFAIRS

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would create within the Department of State the position of Under Secretary for Agricultural Affairs.

I propose this new senior position because it has become clear that agriculture policy is being made today by those officials who make foreign policy. Time and again, foreign policy decisions are made with little consideration of the effect of the decisions on American farmers.

Because the State Department has assumed a major role in agriculture matters, we need to make certain that the State Department has experts on hand who understand the effects on agriculture of U.S. foreign policy. The Foreign Service must be made more aware of the domestic consequences of its actions.

The most obvious example of a foreign policy decision's backfiring on our own people is the recent grain embargo directed against the Soviet Union. There are times, such as the 1979 invasion of Afghanistan, when it is necessary to take dramatic steps to counter Soviet aggression, and the U.S. farmer will be the first one to step forward to support appropriate efforts. But the results of the embargo were not what the policymakers had in mind.

The only countries to benefit from the action were Argentina, Australia, and Canada, whose grain exports to the U.S.S.R. soared. The Soviet Union apparently suffered no ill effects at all. So who was hurt by the embargo? Only the American farmer, who saw his grain market sharply reduced, his prices lowered, and his future buyers made suspicious of his reliability as a supplier.

In the past decade, there have been four embargoes of agricultural goods. We must make it convincingly clear to our customers around the world that they should not expect embargoes from the United States. They should expect us to be reliable suppliers. Any uncertainty about the reliability of U.S. food exports will cause our trading partners to make arrangements with other suppliers.

An agriculture specialist understands this. The average diplomat may not. A high-level State Department official attuned to the special cosideration of American agricultural policy might have advised against the embargo or at least made sure its effects on farmers were fully considered.

Agricultural products account for 20 percent of all U.S. exports and contribute $26 billion to the balance of trade. Agricultural exports account for $95 billion of our domestic economic activity and provide 1.2 million jobs. Each extra $1 billion in exports creates as many as 35,000 new jobs.

Today, however, depressed farm prices and high production costs are creating an enormous hardship for our farmers. Increased agricultural trade would provide a welcome outlet for farm products and create jobs in food processing industries. The European Community is already seeking to expand its exports to the Third World, and an aggressive role by State Department officials here and abroad will be necessary if we are to maintain our preeminence as a supplier of the world's food.

Aggressive U.S. export policies will expand trading partnerships, especially in the developing nations, and where trade increases, so does U.S. influence.

We must remember that it is not just the Commerce Department and the Agricultural Department that have a responsibility to encourage U.S. exports. The State Department has recognized its role in the promotion of agricultural exports. As former Secretary of State Alexander Haig stressed in a cable to all U.S. ambassadors:

> The effort to promote agricultural exports is one of major importance for the United States. I consider it a major objective of our overseas missions. I know that I can count on you to take a strong personal interest in the achievement of this objective in your country.

The State Department has also been working with the Farm Bureau and labor unions to increase exports of processed foods. Many of the farmers I have spoken with, however, believe that State needs to give a higher priority to, and be much more aggressive with, agricultural exports. This is especially true of the Public Law 480 Food-for-Peace Program.

Before we can see an expansion of U.S. food sales abroad, however, we need to get rid of some of the barriers that stand in the way of fair competition for food customers, particularly the rigid protectionst policies of Japan and the European Community. Not surprisingly, serious trade disputes increase tensions and damage overall relations with the countries involved.

U.S. Foreign Service personnel are in an ideal position to monitor the slightest changes in trade policy around the world, and under the guidance of an Under Secretary for Agricultural Affairs their efforts could help to head off the creation of the sort of trade barriers which the Special Trade Representative is now trying to eliminate.

In the area of trade promotion the Secretary of Agriculture and Special Trade Representative have made commendable efforts but there is a need for an agricultural expert at a high level within the State Department. Moreover, there are many issues which fall under the day-to-day purview of the State Department that require the input of an official who is aware of the domestic importance of U.S. agriculture and be sensitive to its needs.

An extremely sensitive issue has been the matter of Commodity Credit Corporation guarantees of loans to Poland and Romania for the purchase of U.S. farm goods. The foreign policy ramifications of this controversy are varied and difficult to predict, but before this issue is resolved, the American farmer must be considered and consulted.

The Caribbean Basin Initiative is directed not only at the Caribbean region but also at our own producers of certain agricultural products.

As the Administrator of the Food-for-Peace Program, promoter of agricultural exchange programs, and monitor of economic trends abroad, the State Department is closely involved with the activities of the U.S. farmers and is in a position to affect the farmer in numerous bilateral and multilateral negotiations.

In testimony before the Senate Agriculture Committee, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic and Business Affairs, Robert D. Hormats acknowledged "the State Department's special role in meshing our trade, economic, and foreign policy interests." The creation of an Under Secretary of State for Agricultural Affairs is a logical step toward improved management of our trade policy, our foreign policy, and our agricultural policy.

More often than not, agriculture and foreign policy objectives coincide, and our farmers will enthusiastically support U.S. foreign policy if only they feel that their own interests are being represented. Today, however, the American farmer has little or no access to the makers of our foreign policy. We need to provide a permanent, specialized conduit for the concerns of the farmer. We need a link between the striped pants in Foggy Bottom and the overalls in our fields that produce so much of the world's food.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 126

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the Act entitled "An Act to strengthen and improve the organization and administration of the Department of State, and for other purposes", approved May 26, 1949 (22 U.S.C. 2652), is amended—

(1) by inserting in the first section "an Under Secretary of State for Agricultural Affairs," after "Management,"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. (a) The Under Secretary of State for Agricultural Affairs, referred to in the first section and appointed pursuant to section 2, shall be appointed from among individuals having experience in the international commerce of agricultural commodities.

"(b) The Under Secretary for Agricultural Affairs shall be responsible to the Secretary of State for matters pertaining to agricultural affairs, including United States policy toward the export of agricultural commodities.".

(b) The seventh undesignated paragraph of section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by inserting "and an Under Secretary of State for Agricultural Affairs" after "Management".

S. 127. A bill to authorize the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a clinical trial to determine the efficiency and economic feasibility of providing Medicare coverage for personal emergency response systems; to the Committee of Finance.

CLINICAL TRIAL OF MEDICARE COVERAGE FOR HOME EMERGENCY RESPONSE SYSTEMS

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which upon approval would provide the Congress with significant new information which will help us to decide how we can best use new technologies to help elderly and disabled citizens remain in their homes and to conserve valuable health care dollars.

In my more than 20 years of public service, I have witnessed the development of many programs which have helped to significantly improve the quality of life for older Americans. One major area, however, in which we have been painfully negligent, has been in the development of a health care network within which the elderly and disabled are encouraged and able to remain in their homes for as long as possible, despite the fact that the elderly are better served when they are helped to maintain their independence. New technologies have provided us with a variety of new devices which may prove very effective in eliminating the need for costly institutionalization. Among these are the emergency response systems that have been developed over the last 10 years or so.

Emergency response systems have three basic components: First, the electronic communication equipment located in the home which signals for outside assistance; second, the 24-hour response center which receives the emergency signal; third, the local emergency response organization—which could be a local relative or neighbor, local police, visiting nurses, ambulance service, or hospital—which responds to the emergency signal.

While there is widespread use of these response systems—it is estimated that they are available in every State—there is no consistent coverage of this service. Currently, some States provide coverage of emergency response systems under section 2176 community-based health care Medicaid waivers, and several other States have developed State-funded programs to provide these services. The Older Americans Act also funds such systems under title II. So there is a broad concensus in the State and local communities that such a service can be helpful, particularly for the frail elderly who live alone.

In 1975 the National Center for Health Services Research authorized a study based in Boston of the usefulness of emergency response systems in the Boston-Cambridge area. Results of the study were favorable, but there have been no additional, comprehensive studies of these systems. And the Boston study did not explore the effectiveness of such systems in rural areas, where it is suspected that they might be even more effective in allowing the elderly to remain in their homes.

The legislation which I am introducing today is a slightly modified version of S. 2941, which I introduced in the 98th Congress. That legislation was not acted upon because of the abbreviated legislative session in 1984. The legislation authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services to conduct a clinical trial to determine the efficiency and economic feasibility of providing Medicare coverage for personal emergency response systems. The legislation specifies that the Secretary must consider, during the course of the study, a broad range of health, psychological, and environmental characteristics of the group under study, as well as a control group. The Secretary must report back to the Congress within 3 years on the outcome of the study.

Mr. President it is my hope that this study will provide us with the most comprehensive and conclusive evidence to date on the usefulness of home emergency response systems.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 127

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

CLINICAL TRIAL

SECTION 1. (a) In order to determine the efficiency and economic feasibility of providing medicare coverage under title XVIII of the Social Security Act for personal emergency response systems, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") shall conduct a clinical trial in which—

(1) beneficiaries of medicare coverage under such title voluntarily participate in such trial and are randomly arranged into an experimental group which receives access to personal emergency response systems described in section 2 and a control group which does not receive such access;

(2) agencies which offer medical, public safety, or similar services as their primary function establish and maintain such response systems (hereinafter in this Act referred to as "monitoring agencies"); and

(3) such monitoring agencies monitor and respond to signals for emergency medical assistance transmitted over such response systems by notifying medical personnel or other persons designated to attend to members of the experimental group.

(b) To facilitate the purpose of the clinical trial, the Secretary shall examine data from such trial and consider—

(1) the effect access to personal emergency response systems has on members of the experimental group, including—

(A) changes in their physical and psychological health,

(B) changes in their disability or impairment status,

(C) causes of, or circumstances involving, their death or recovery from any illness or injury,

(D) their use of medical services, including number and causes of hospitalization, visits with physicians, admissions to nursing homes, and use of home health services, and

(E) their use of other medical, public safety, or similar services provided by monitoring agencies;

(2) the personal characteristics of members of the experimental and control groups, including their—

(A) race, age, and sex, and

(B) social relations and living arrangements with relatives, friends, and neighbors before and during the clinical demonstration;

(3) the frequency, purpose, and outcome of use of any personal emergency response system by members of the experimental group;

(4) the total health care expenditures incurred by members of the experimental group as compared with those incurred by members of the control group, including—

(A) health care costs reimbursable under medicare, and

(B) other health insurance payments or health care expenses paid by, or on behalf of, such persons; and

(5) the costs, including acquisition and operation expenditures, of providing personal emergency response systems for members of the experimental group.

(c) For purposes of such trial, the Secretary may, only to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts, enter into a contract with each monitoring agency which assures the Secretary that such agency will provide, maintain, and monitor the personal emergency response system throughout such trial.

CRITERIA FOR EACH PERSONAL EMERGENCY RESPONSE SYSTEM

SEC. 2. For purposes of the clinical trial, each personal emergency response system shall include—

(1) communication equipment located in the home of any member of the experimental group which transmits signals for emergency medical assistance over an existing telephone line to a 24-hour response center;

(2) a 24-hour response center operated by a monitoring agency to monitor such incoming signals; and

(3) medical personnel or other persons designated to attend to any member of the experimental group whenever emergency medical assistance is requested for such member.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

REPORT

SEC. 4. The Secretary shall, within three years after the date of the enactment of this Act, transmit a report to the Congress containing the findings and conclusions of the clinical trial authorized by this Act, along with any legislative recommendations concerning the efficiency and economic feasibility of providing medicare coverage under title XVIII of the Social Security Act for personal emergency response systems.

By Mr. PRYOR (for himself and Mr. BUMPERS):

S. 128. A bill to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 and Executive Order No. 12348 of February 25, 1982 (47 FR 8547); to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, on May 17 of last year I introduced legislation to prohibit the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers from proceeding with plans to sell some 850 acres of land currently owned by the Federal Government around Bull Shoals Lake in northern Arkansas. This sale of land declared to be excess to corps' needs was initiated pursuant to Executive Order 12348 dated February 25, 1982, which was designed to reduce Federal ownership of land in an effort to help reduce the Federal deficit. The bill I introduced was adopted by the Senate as an amendment to other legislation, but was not included by the conferees in the final bills.

Today I am reintroducing this legislation along with my colleague from Arkansas, Mr. BUMPERS, and I ask the committee that will consider it to act swiftly before the corps can carry out its intentions. The people of Arkansas do not want to see these lands opened to private development. This lake is a major attraction in Arkansas and Missouri and draws attention nationally. I cannot believe that further high in-density development of the lakeshore here would not create multimillion-dollar problems later on in the future.

Last February I wrote a letter to the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works to express my concerns about the effects that this proposed sale would have on the lake and on the people who live around the lake. I also expressed my doubts about the miniscule effect this sale would have on any effort to reduce the Federal deficit. It is my opinion that this sale would lead to commercial development in the area and has the definite potential for resulting in pollution of the lake. I am convinced that the people who have already purchased homes on the lake for retirement and recreational purposes would feel a breach of faith has occurred if lands that they were assured would remain in public ownership and in their natural state were suddenly cleared and readied for condominium development.

I also expressed my concern for another group of persons who will be affected by this action. I am speaking of the people who had to give up their lands when the Army Corps of Engineers built the Bull Shoals Lake project. Should the Federal Government take these lands and then decide 30 years later that they are no longer necessary to project and sell them to private development companies?

The answer I received in reply from the Assistant Secretary indicated that he intended to proceed with the sale.

Mr. President, I do not oppose all sales of Federal land to private investors. Perhaps we do have too much land lying fallow in public ownership. Maybe some sales could be advantageous in reducing the Federal deficit. I am very much in favor of that. But I do not want to make a judgment on that issue here.

The 850 acres on Bull Shoals Lake will not make even a small dent in the Federal deficit. The Army has already spent $69,095.98 in surveys alone preparing for this sale.

The real issue is the future of this lake, the inevitable pollution, and the effects this will have on Arkansas tourist industries. The people of Marion and Baxter Counties have already told me they do not want to see this land sold. Accordingly, Mr. President, the legislation I offer today is very simple. My bill will deny the right of any Federal agency to transfer title to these lands to any private owner. I do not intend that an agency of the Government be denied the right to alter its use of the property or to transfer title to another agency of the Government for purposes of the public interest. I would see no problem with the development of public parks or wildlife management areas for example.

I believe the people of Arkansas and the United States will be better served by retaining Government ownership of these lands and I call on my colleagues in the Senate to support me in this effort.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 130. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act, to clarify that payment may be made under part A of the Medicare Program for diagnostic or therapeutic services provided by a psychologist under an arrangement with a hospital to an inpatient of such hospital who is entitled to benefits under such plan; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would modify title XVIII of the Social Security Act, the Medicare Program, in order to clarify that payments may be made under part A of the program for diagnostic or therapeutic services provided by psychologists, under an arrangement with a hospital for Medicare beneficiaries.

This legislative proposal will not result in any increased Federal funding, but will make expressly clear in the fundamental statute the current regulations. In my judgment, as we continue to make every effort to curtail our Nation's escalating health care costs, it is becoming increasingly important that we ensure that we give sufficient priority to innovative approaches which have demonstrated their cost effectiveness.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 130

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(b)(3) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting "(including a psychologist (as defined in subsection (ee)))" after "others" the first place it appears.

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(ee) The term 'psychologist' means an individual who (1) is licensed or certified at the independent practice level of psychology by the State in which such individual so practices, (2) possesses a doctorate degree in psychology from a regionally accredited educational institution, or in the case of an individual licensed or certified prior to January 1, 1978, possesses a master's degree in psychology and is listed in a national register of mental health service providers in psychology approved by the Secretary, and (3) possesses at least two years of supervised experience in health service, at least one year of which is postdegree.".

(c) The amendments made by this Act shall be effective with respect to services performed on or after the first day of the first month that begins more than sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 131. A bill to amend parts A and B of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, to provide that a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist may recertify the need for certain services originally certified by a physician; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to modify parts A and B of our Nation's Medicare and Medicaid Programs in order to provide that nurse practitioners or clinical nurse specialists will be deemed authorized to recertify the need for continued services, for example, under Home Health Care.

Under my proposal, it will still be required that a physician make the initial determination; however, after that point in time, experienced members of the nursing profession would be deemed authorized to continue the care.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 131

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, (a) section 1814(a)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "(and recertifies" and inserting in lieu thereof "(and the physician, or, in the case of a service described in subparagraph (A), (B), (C), or (D), the physician or a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist recertifies".

(b) Section 1835 (a)(20 of such Act is amended by striking out "(and recertifies" and inserting in lieu thereof "(and the physician, or, in the case or home health services, the physician or a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist recertifies".

SEC. 2. The amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to recertifications made on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 132. A bill to amend section 1086 of title 10, United States Code, to provide for payment under the CHAMPUS program of certain health care expenses incurred by certain members and former members of the uniformed services and their dependents to the extent that such expenses are not payable under Medicare, and to make a conforming amendment to section 613 of title 38, United States Code; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to provide for continuing coverage under the Department of Defense Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services [CHAMPUS] for those retirees who reach the age of eligibility for Medicare.

Under our current law, when an individual CHAMPUS beneficiary becomes eligible for coverage under Medicare, he or she automatically loses his or her CHAMPUS entitlement. This is not common practice in the private sector and I understand it can be especially traumatic for those families who live overseas. My proposal would make CHAMPUS a second payor to Medicare and only require the Department to cover those services not covered by Medicare.

During the last Congress, legislation was enacted by the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee which addressed this problem for those CHAMPUS eligibles who derive their entitlement under the CHAMPVA program. I understand that this constitutes approximately 5 percent of the total CHAMPUS beneficiary population. Essentially, their eligibility for CHAMPUS becomes reinstituted once any part of their Medicare coverage is exhausted. My bill would provide similar entitlement for the remaining 95 percent of CHAMPUS population and, further, provide that CHAMPUS will cover expenses that might be in excess of those covered by Medicare.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 132

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1086(c) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking out the second sentence.

(b) Section 1086(d) of such title is amended to read as follows:

"(d)(1) The provisions of section 1079(j)(1) of this title shall apply to a plan covered by this section.

"(2)(A) The amount of a benefit payable under a plan covered by this section for items or services for which payment is made under part A or B of title XVIII of the Social Security Act or any other insurance, medical service, or health plan referred to in such section 1079(j)(1) shall be reduced by the sum of—

"(i) the amount of the payment made for such items or services under such part;

"(ii) the amount of the payment made for such items or services under any such other insurance, medical service, or health plan; and

"(iii) the amount of an appropriate payment under subsection (b).

"(B) A plan covered by this section shall not be considered a group health plan for the purposes of paragraph (2) or (3) of section 1862(b) of the Social Security Act.

"(C) A person claiming a benefit under a plan covered by this section by reason of the application of this paragraph shall certify the cost charged for items or services to which the claim relates and the amounts referred to in subparagraphs (A)(i) and (A)(ii) that relate to the items or services. A certification made under the first sentence of this subparagraph may be accepted for the purposes of determining the benefit payable under this section.".

SEC. 2. Subsection (d) of section 613 of title 38, United States Code, is repealed.

SEC. 3. The amendments made by this Act shall take effect with respect to items or services provided after the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 133. A bill to authorize capitation grants to graduates programs in psychology; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the basic Health Professions Capitation Grant Program in order to authorize that up to $5 million annually be made available for the training of students in psychology.

My proposal would provide institutions of higher learning with $2,000 for each full-time student enrolled in such a program during any given fiscal year. The legislation which I am introducing today is very similar to that presently in effect for our Nation's schools of medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, public health, veterinary medicine, optometry, pharmacy, and podiatry.

In my judgment, this proposal merely reflects the growing maturity of our Nation's psychology training programs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 133

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a)(1) section 770(a) of the Public Health Service Act is amended—

(1) by inserting a comma and "and to graduate programs in psychology," after "podiatry" in the first sentence;

(2) by inserting "and graduate programs" before the period in such sentence;

(3) by inserting "or graduate program" after "school" in the second sentence; and

(4) by adding at the ends thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and each of the succeeding fiscal years, each graduate program in psychology shall recieve $2,000 for each full-time student enrolled in such program in the school year beginning in such fiscal year.".

(b) Section 770(b) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting a comma and "or graduate programs in psychology" after "podiatry";

(2) by inserting "or graduate program" after "category of schools";

(3) by inserting "or graduate program's" after "school's";

(4) by inserting "or graduate program" before "subsection (a)";

(5) by inserting "or graduate programs" before "of the same category";

(6) by inserting "or graduate program" after "such school"; and

(7) by inserting "or graduate programs" before "of that category".

(c) Section 770(c) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or graduate program" after "a school" the first four places it appears in paragraph (1);

(2) by striking out "or" before "to a graduate degree" in the first sentence of paragraph (2); and

(3) by inserting a comma and "or to a doctoral degree in psychology or an equivalent degree" before the period in such sentence.

(d) Section 770(d) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or a new graduate program in psychology," after "podiatry,"; and

(2) by inserting "or graduate program" after "the school" each place it appears.

(e) Section 770(e) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) There are authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and each of the succeeding years, for payments under grants under this section to graduate programs in psychology.".

(f) Section 771(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or graduate program" after "any school" in the matter preceding paragraph (1);

(2) by inserting "or graduate program" after "the school" the first and third places it appears in paragraph (1); and

(3) by inserting "or as a graduate program in psychology," after "podiatry," in paragraph (2).

(g) Section 772(b) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "or a graduate program in psychology," after "podiatry," in clause (1); and

(2) by inserting "or graduate program" after "school" each place it appears in clause (2).

(h) Part E of title VII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 773. For purposes of this part, the term 'graduate program in psychology' means a graduate program in a public or nonprofit private institution in a State which—

"(1) provides training leading to a doctoral degree in psychology or an equivalent degree;

"(2) prepares the individual receiving such degree for licensure by a State as a psychologist; and

"(3) is accredited in the manner described in section 701(5).".

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 134. A bill to provide for a program for the education of gifted and talented children; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 in order to once again establish targeted programs directed at the many unique and pressing needs of our Nation's gifted and talented children.

It is unfortunately all-too-often the case that these individuals are overlooked by our Nation's educational policymakers because of a concern that, in an era of budget tightening, they simply do not need any special additional resources. Simply stated, this is not the case, as has been well-documented in a number of the educational policy reports issued during the past several years.

For example, a careful reading of A Nation At Risk will find numerous references to this population. Unfortunately, this includes a finding that "over half of the population of gifted students do not match their tested ability with comparable achievement in school" and that "despite widespread publicity about an overpopulation of teachers, severe shortages of certain kinds of teachers exist: * * * among specialists in education for gifted and talented".

Mr. President, the legislation which I am proposing today will again establish the Office of Gifted and Talented within the U.S. Department of Education and, further, will authorize that $40 million be expended during the next 5 fiscal years for programs targeted to these future leaders of our Nation.

My proposal also authorizes the Secretary of the Department of Education to begin a modest discretionary grant program which would include demonstration projects.

Mr. President, I especially feel that it is important that we target programs for our Nation's gifted and talented towards those families who are Native Americans; for, unfortunately, without a special Federal initiative among these families, we are afraid that these individuals, in particular, will not be able to reach their full potential.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 134

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 is amended by inserting at the appropriate place in the Act the following:

"TITLE IX—ADDITIONAL PROGRAMS

"PART A—GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN

"SHORT TITLE; PURPOSE

"SEC. 901. (a) This part may be cited as the 'Gifted and Talented Children's Education Act'.

"(b) The Congress finds and declares that—

"(1) the Nation's greatest resource for solving critical national problems in areas of national concern is its gifted and talented children,

"(2) unless the special abilities of gifted and talented children are developed during their elementary and secondary school years, their special potentials for assisting the Nation may be lost, and

"(3) gifted and talented children from economically disadvantaged families and areas often are not afforded the opportunity to fulfill their special and valuable potentials, due to inadequate for inappropriate educational services.

"(c) It is the purpose of this part to provide financial assistance to State and local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private agencies and organizations, to assist such agencies, institutions and organizations to plan, develop, operate, and improve programs designed to meet the special educational needs of gifted and talented children.

"DEFINITION

"SEC. 902. For the purposes of this part, the term 'gifted and talented children' means children and, whenever applicable, youth, who are identified at the preschool, elementary, or secondary level as possessing demonstrated or potential abilities that give evidence of high performance capability in areas such as intellectual, creative, specific academic, or leadership ability, or in the performing and visual arts, and who by reason thereof, require services or activities not ordinarily provided by the school.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS; APPORTIONMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 903. (a) For the purpose of carrying out this part, there are authorized to be appropriated $40,000,000 for the fiscal year 1986 and for each of the four succeeding fiscal years.

"(b)(1) From the amounts appropriated under subsection (a) for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall reserve $3,000,000 or 15 percent, whichever is greater, for carrying out the provisions of section 905, relating to discretionary programs.

"(2) The remainder of the sums appropriated under subsection (a) for each fiscal year shall be available to carry out the provisions of section 904, relating to State programs.

"STATE PROGRAMS

"SEC. 904. (a) From the amounts available in any fiscal year under section 903(b)(2), the Secretary shall make grants to State educational agencies for the Federal share of the cost of planning and carrying out programs designed to meet the educational needs of gifted and talented children at the preschool, elementary, and secondary levels. Such programs may include—

"(1) inservice training of personnel to teach such children;

"(2) demonstration programs designed to develop special techniques for teaching such children, together with assessments of the programs; and

"(3) State leadership programs to assist in extending programs for such children throughout the State.

"(b) The Secretary shall, in each fiscal year, allot the amounts appropriated pursuant to section 903(a) and available under section 903(b)(2) in accordance with the provisions of section 906.

"(c) Each State educational agency desiring to receive a grant under this section shall submit an application at such time, in such manner and containing such information as is necessary for the purposes of this section. Each such application shall contain assurances that—

"(1) funds paid to the State educational agency will be expended solely to programs and projects which—

"(A) are designed to identify the educational needs of gifted and talented children, especially programs described in clauses (1) through (3) of subsection (a),

"(B) are of sufficient size, scope, and quality to hold reasonable promise of making substantial progress toward meeting such needs, and

"(C) give appropriate consideration to the particular educational needs of disadvantaged gifted and talented children;

"(2)(A) the State educational agency will reserve from funds made available under this section in each fiscal year not more than 10 per centum of such funds for the purpose of administration, technical assistance, coordination, and statewide planning related to programs and projects designed to meet the needs of gifted and talented children;

"(B) the State educational agency will distribute, on a competitive basis, not less than 90 per centum of the funds made available under this section for payments to local educational agencies within the State which apply to the State educational agency, with due regard for the quality of activities proposed in the application of the local educational agencies;

"(3) the State educational agency will use at least 50 per centum of the funds made available under this section for programs and projects which include a component for the identification and education of disadvantaged gifted and talented children from low-income families;

"(4) the State educational agency and the local educational agencies within the State may use funds made available under this section to acquire instructional equipment only if such equipment will enhance the program or project for which such funds are furnished;

"(5)(A) the requirements of section 557 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (relating to participation of pupils and teachers in private elementary and secondary schools) are met unless such requirements cannot legally be met in the State (as determined by the State educational agency);

"(B) the State educational agency will not approve the application of a local educational agency within the State for assistance under this section unless the State educational agency determines that in designing the proposal subject to the application the needs of children in nonprofit private elementary and secondary schools have been taken into account through the consultation with private school officials and by other appropriate means; and

"(6) the State educational agency will provide to local educational agencies within the State, which are unable to compete due to smaller size or lack of financial resources, technical assistance in preparing proposals and in planning, developing, and operating programs under this section.

"(d) The Secretary shall approve any application which meets the requirements of subsection (c) and not disapprove any such application without first affording an opportunity for a hearing.

"DISCRETIONARY PROGRAMS

"SEC. 905. (a) From the amounts available in any fiscal year under section 903(b)(1) the Secretary may—

"(1) make grants to State educational agencies, local educational agencies, institutions of higher education, and other public and private agencies and organizations, to assist them, to provide leadership training of personnel engaged in the education of gifted and talented children;

"(2) make grants to, or enter into contracts with, public agencies, private organizations or institutions which together or singly constitute a clearinghouse to disseminate information about programs, services, resources, research, methodology, and media materials for the education of gifted and talented children;

"(3) conduct, either directly or by grant or contract, a program of research, evaluation, and related activities pertaining to the education of gifted and talented children, to pay the Federal share of the cost of such grants or contracts.

"(b)(1) No grant may be made and no contract may be entered into under this section unless an application is submitted to the Secretary in such form, in such manner, and containing such information, as is necessary for the purposes of this section.

"(2) The requirements of section 557 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 (relating to the participation of pupils and teachers in private, elementary and secondary schools) shall apply to programs and projects under this section unless such requirements cannot legally be met in the State (as determined by the State educational agency of the State in which the applicant for funds under this section is located).

"STATE ALLOTMENTS

"SEC. 906. (a)(1) In each fiscal year the Secretary shall allot, from amounts available under section 903(b)(2), not more than 1 per centum among—

"(A) Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands;

"(B) programs for children and teachers in elementary and secondary schools operated for Indian children by the Department of the Interior; and

"(C) programs authorized for children and teachers in overseas dependent schools of the Department of Defense, in accordance with their respective needs.

"(2) From the remainder of such sums in any such fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State which has an application meeting the requirements of section 904—

"(A) $50,000, plus,

"(B) an amount which bears the same ratio to such remainder as the number of children in the State aged 5 to 17 years, inclusive, bears to the number of children in all States.

"(3) For the purpose of this subsection, the term 'State' means the several States, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia.

"(b) The amount of any State's allotment under subsection (a) for any fiscal year which the Secretary determines will not be required for such fiscal year shall be available for reallotment from time to time, on such dates during such year as the Secretary may fix, to other States in proportion to the original allotments to such States under subsection (a) for that year but with such proportionate amount for any of such other States being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates such State needs and will be able to use for such year; and the total of such reduction shall be similarly reallotted among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amounts reallotted to a State under this subsection during a year from funds appropriated under section 903 shall be deemed part of its allotment under section (a) for such year.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 907. (a) The Secretary shall designate an administrative unit within the Department of Education to administer the programs and projects authorized by this part and to coordinate all programs for gifted and talented children and youth administered by the Department of Education.

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any Indian tribe, or Hawaiian organization certified by the Governor for the purpose of this part, which operates schools for its children shall be deemed to be a local educational agency for the purposes of this part.

"FEDERAL SHARE

"SEC. 908. the Federal share for any fiscal year shall be 90 per centum, except that the Federal share for programs and projects involving the participation of students in nonprofit private elementary and secondary schools shall be 100 per centum.".

"SEC. 2. (a) Section 561(a)(1) of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981 is amended by striking out "part C" and inserting in lieu thereof "parts A and C".

"(b) Section 581 of such Act is amended by striking out "part C" and inserting in lieu thereof "parts A and C" and by striking out "gifted and talented children".

"(c) Section 582 of such Act is amended—

"(1) by striking out subclause (A) of clause (3) of such section; and

"(2) by redesignating subclasues (A), (B), (C), (D), and (E) as subclause (A), (B), (C), and (D), respectively.

"(d) Section 587(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "part C" and inserting in lieu thereof "parts A and C".

"(e) Section 1001(i) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act is amended to read as follows:

"(i) The term 'secretary' means the Secretary of Education.".

S. 135. A bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act, to provide that professional nurse services shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, today Senator MATSUNAGA and I are introducing legislation which would amend the Medicare and Medicaid Programs in order to provide that the services of professional nurses would be made available throughout both of these programs to the fullest extent of the authority granted these practitioners by the various State practice acts.

My bill would ensure that there would be no Federal requirement of supervision of professional nurses by members of any other discipline.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 135

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 1861(s)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (I); and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(J) professional nurse services;".

(b) Section 1861 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"Professional Nurse Services

"(ee)(1) The term 'professional nurse services' means services performed by or under the direct supervision of a professional nurse (as defined in paragraph (2)) which the professional nurse is legally authorized to perform under State law (or the State regulatory mechanism provided by State law) of the State in which such services are performed, whether or not the professional nurse is under the supervision of, or associated with, a physician or other health care provider.

"(2) The term 'professional nurse' means an individual who is a registered nurse and is licensed to practice nursing in the State in which the professional nurse services are performed.".

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17);

(2) by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

"(18) professional nurse services (as defined in section 1861 (ee)); and".

(b) Section 1902(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "paragraphs (1) through (5) and (17)" in paragraph (10)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (1) through (5), (17), and (18)";

S. 137. A bill to permit the exclusion from gross income of certain work-related sick pay received by New York City police officers; to the Committee on Finance.

EXEMPTING NEW YORK CITY POLICE FROM IRS REVENUE RULINGS

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to reintroduce the necessary corrective legislation to protect those New York City police officers who have been hurt unjustifiably by IRS Revenue Ruling 83-77 issued on May 9, 1983. The ruling stipulates that individuals who receive pay while on leave may not have their wages excluded from Federal taxation. The ruling exempts compensation due to service-connected injury or sickness if local statute specifically attests to this fact. The problem, however, is that New York City statutes do not specify that sick pay for the city's police officers is strictly due to job-related injuries. My bill is identical to legislation I introduced in the 98th Congress, S. 1436.

The IRS ruling retroactively punishes over 2,000 police officers who received sick pay prior to May 9, 1983. Men and women who each day lay their lives on the line will be forced to pay back taxes because of injuries suffered on the job. I am not speaking of wealthy people with smart tax lawyers, but honest cops. These people are guilty of only following the letter of the law. Can we in good conscience allow the inequity inherent in the retroactive application of this IRS ruling to go unchallenged?

To rectify the prospective problem, New York City's police officers are trying to add new language to the appropriate local statute and thus conform with the IRS ruling. The IRS, however, is now conducting audits of the more than 2,000 police officers retroactively impacted by the ruling to determine the back taxes owed. Many of the individuals audited are retired and without sufficient means to pay these back taxes. Through no fault of their own, more than 2,000 retired and active police officers will have to pay thousands of dollars to comply with the IRS ruling.

Mr. President, my bill will exempt New York City police officers from the retroactive impact of IRS Revenue Ruling 83-77 if documentation proves that sick pay was received from service-related illness or injury. I see no reason why honest individuals should be punished for complying with the then existing interpretation of the law. It is not my intention to rewrite tax law or overstep the legitimate purview of the IRS. Rather, I hope to add equity to IRS Ruling 83-77. The prospective nature of the ruling will remain as the IRS originally envisioned. Only the police officers harmed by the retroactive impact of the ruling will be assisted by this legislation. In this way, the police officers of New York City who have given so much to society will not be needlessly punished by the Government.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MUNICIPAL FINANCE RESCUE ACT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today I introduce the Municipal Finance Rescue Act to diversify the range of investments available to individuals contributing to individual retirement accounts [IRA's] and KEOGH plans and, at the same time, provide a much needed infusion of funding for city and State governments. My proposal would permit the distribution of income from IRA and KEOGH plans to be tax-exempt if the income was derived from investments in State or local bonds.

My bill would provide the municipal bond market with over $20 billion a year in additional funds, with only a negligible cost to the Treasury in the first year, and $100 million in each of the following 2 years, according to estimates completed by the Congressional Budget Office.

As part of the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981 [ERTA], Congress greatly expanded the use of IRA's and retirement plans for self-employed individuals [KEOGH's]. Congress expanded these investment vehicles because of concern that a large number of the country's workers would otherwise face the prospect of retiring without the resources needed to provide adequate income levels.

IRA's and KEOGH's have been a tremendous success. In 1982, over $28 billion flowed into IRA and KEOGH instruments. Individuals received substantial tax breaks, while our Nation's economy was stimulated by the accumulation of investment capital. IRA and KEOGH plans provide two tax benefits: Contributors enjoy a current tax deduction for contributions, and investment income earned is tax-deferred until withdrawal.

The tax-exempt municipal market is the primary source of funding for State and local governments. Without this avenue of financing, local governments would simply be unable to provide essential services for their citizens.

My legislation will be desperately needed if the Treasury Department's tax reform proposal, or similar reform plan, were enacted into law. Although I am sure we all agree that tax simplification is desperately needed, the Treasury proposal will radically alter the ability of State and local governments to raise funds. This will force officials to cut discretionary spending, which primarily benefits social- and safety-related services.

First, repeal of the deduction for State and local taxes will make the relative tax burden of local taxpayers that much greater. For a high tax State such as New York, repeal of this vital deduction will be crippling. The middle class, which already bears an awesome burden, would be devastated. Repeal of the deduction for State and local taxes has the effect of raising taxes without increasing revenues for States, counties, or cities. This means that State and local officials could not raise revenues through higher taxes without facing a popular revolt.

Second, banks would have virtually no incentive to buy municipal bonds under the Treasury reform proposal. In the 1970's, banks owned roughly half of all municipal bonds. Today, banks only own one-third of all outstanding tax-exempt securities. Banks are increasingly not participating in the tax-exempt market for a number of reasons, including: declining profitability, deregulation of interest rates on deposits, leasing transactions that earn tax benefits, and increased loan demand. Now, the Treasury Department has proposed repealing the current 80-percent deduction for interest expenses incurred on debt used to purchase municipal bonds. This would terminate almost all incentives for banks to purchase tax-exempt securities. Without banks participating in the market for municipal bonds, cities and States will face higher interest rates to attract investors. Of course, higher interest rates result in higher State and local taxes.

Third, the Treasury Department proposes to eliminate all private purposes industrial development bonds [IDB's], such as low-income housing, sewage and waste water treatment, and resource recovery. These public purpose activities often cannot be canceled. Without low cost IDB's, taxable bonds must be issued and/or taxes increased to finance these necessary projects.

Fourth, Federal budget cuts in areas like general revenue sharing, UDAG's, and mass transit operating assistance will hurt the credit quality of State and local governments. With the decline in credit quality, cities and States will have a harder time selling their bonds resulting in higher interest rates.
